We beseech Dr. Leask not to be discouraged. So far as he has advanced we have no doubt he has the approbation of the God of truth, justice and love. We cannot expect to see all the heights and depths of God's truth, at once. Our English friends are now where we were, doctrinally, fifteen years ago, but we most cordially welcome them to the conflict, and trust they will find themselves abundantly sustained in the work to which God, in his providence, has called them.

Dr. Leask at the conclusion of the extracts of the letters of encouragement speaks as follows:

The man who could receive such letters as these without a feeling of profound gratitude to God has a heart very different from ours. We can bear censure with a good deal of equanimity, when we are positively certain that the honor of revelation and the character of the Most High are the grand motives that prompt us, and when we are equally sure that ignorance or prejudice gives birth to that censure; but the earnest thanks of devoted brethren in the Lord for deliverance from the crushing weight of a dismal dogma that never came from heaven, we cannot receive unmoved. We feel deeply the sacredness of the privilege and the greatness of the honor. May the Lord and head of the church hear the prayers of his disciples on our behalf, and enable us to fulfil this high mission to the glory of his name. These pathetic appeals to us to continue the magazine touch a tender chord, and awaken a ready response. To continue it is our fervent desire; for we feel as certain that we have been called to the work as we do of any providential event that ever passed before our eyes. The whole history of this magazine, known only in all its details to the present writer, is a proof that God calls whom he will, when he will, to any service in his church which he sees necessary. The pressing cares, the anxious days, the anger and opposition of men who scorn the idea of the Lord's pre-millenial advent, the shout of "heresy!" when the apostolic doctrine of immortality only in Christ was brought forward, the desertion of many old friends in consequence of that doctrine, and many other discouragements needless to mention, have all been borne patiently and hopefully; and surely we could not have sustained their weight so long, but for the Lord's upholding hand. A Christian heart from far-off India cries, "Do not, O do not think of giving it up!" Let that cry thrill through the reader's heart, as it has done through the Editor's; and instead of being given up, the Rainbow will at once become a power in the Lord's hand to help on the great theological reformation which is so imperatively needed to deliver Christians from bondage, the truth from error, and the Father's character from a terrible misapprehension.

The interest awakened by the denial of man's natural immortality is extraordinary. Every one sees in a moment that if man is not an immortal being by nature, the dogma of eternal misery must be false. Hence the earnestness with which men are looking at the subject. The reformation we prayerfully labor for, is not the removal of a small blot here and there, which the progress of time has brought upon Christian truth, but the removal of a tremendous and appalling falsehood, which has sent its virus through the veins and arteries of the entire body of theology. Everything has been corrupted by it; and the darkness of its dismal shadow has made God's government of the universe a bewildering mystery, and driven many of the wise and good to the distressing conclusion that the perpetuation of the human race is an awful calamity. Why was not the first man also the last, if the inevitable consequence of unpardoned human guilt is unending human agony? But, no! blessed forever be our God we have discovered to our infinite relief that the doctrine of eternal misery is none of his. Oh, it is surely time that the great lie of the great liar, "Ye shall not surely die," should be rejected, and the wondrous gift of divine life in Jesus accepted with loving and adoring gratitude. Let it be proclaimed with all holy energy, that "God so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not PERISH but have EVERLASTING LIFE."

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE: Edited by Thomas Guthrie, D. D., and published by J. P. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

The above magazine for April is received. As usual, it is first among the Monthlies, filled with interesting and instructive matter. The following is a list of its contents:

Episodes in an Obscure Life; The Lord's Forerunner; Diana's Portrait; "Don't Cry over Spilt Water;" Sundays on the Continent; Mortality Swallowed up of Life, [Poetry]; Companions of St. Paul; Gethsemane, [Illustrated Poetry]; The Struggles in Ferrara; the Festivals of the Jewish Sabbath; John De Liefde; One Christ in Four Records; On the Miracles of our Lord; Death and Immortality; Supplement—Notes for Readers out of the way.

Terms: $3 50 per year; single No. 30 cents.

GOOD WORDS for April is received. An interesting Magazine, published by Lippincott & Co., for the young, for whom it is specially designed. Terms: $2 75 cents; 25 cents per number. Contents for April are as follows:

Carlino; Letters from the Tropics; April, a poem; Our Working People, and How They Live; Old Memories; The Poor of Prague; A Visit to the Country of the Vaudois; Half Hours in the Temple Church; Dragons and Dragon-Slayers; The Two Margarets, a poem; Dorothy Fox.

GOOD HEALTH for May is received. It is a Journal of Physical and Mental Culture. Published by Alexander Moore, No. 11 Bromfield st., Boston, Mass. A valuable Monthly. Terms: $2 per year; 20 cents monthly. Volume I. is completed and bound. Price $2 50. It is valuable for reference. Agents wanted.

THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW for April is received. That for January never came to hand. It is edited by D. D. Whedon, LL. D., published at 805 Broadway, New York. Its contents for this quarter are as follows:

General Conference of 1844; Politics and the Pulpit; Romanism and the Common School System; Of the Power of Mind over Nature; Ministerial Transfers; Did the Church South Secede? Wesley's Separation from the Moravians; Josephus and Apion. To which are added various and multitudinous notices.

Every Methodist should take their Quarterly, which is ably conducted by its worthy Editor. Those not Methodists will find much to interest them.

"A PRAYER TO ST. JOSEPH."

DON'T laugh at this heading, dear reader, for it is a bona fide title to a prayer which attracted our attention in a Catholic paper just started in this city. Let me transcribe it for your consideration. Here it is:

"Hail, Joseph, full of grace! Jesus and Mary are with thee; blessed art thou amongst men, and blessed is the fruit of thy chaste spouse, Jesus. Holy Joseph, foster father of Jesus! pray for us, sinners, now and at the hour of our death."

Why should we pray to Joseph? Can he hear our prayers? Is he so far above our blessed Lamb of God that we must offer our petitions to him? Can the dead hear our prayers? Oh what folly! God has not deceived us by the inspired declarations: "The dead know not any thing . . . neither have they any more a portion forever in any thing that is done under the sun."—Eccl. ix. 5, 6. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."—Psa. cxv. 17. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish." Psa. cxlvi. 5. "His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them."—Job. xiv. 21. What shall we think of this praying to the dead in the face of such divine testimony as this?

But really, if this heathen theology of man being dead and alive at the same time be true, are not the Catholics far more consistent in their belief than their orthodox brethren? If Joseph is dead and at the same time is alive—in a land of prayer—with Mary and Jesus—why should our orthodox brethren believe he cannot pray for us, especially at the hour of our death, if it could benefit us? And, surely, if he can pray for us, and we can pray to him, why is it not just as consistent to believe that he can communicate with us? Thus, upon the great error of the immortality of the soul, to be consistent with our belief, we should land into the dark whirlpool of infidelity—or Spiritualism, which is the same thing.

Until God's immutable word has been demonstrated false we must believe that death is the extinction of life—that the intermediate state is one of total unconsciousness—and that a future life for any must be obtained through Jesus Christ by a resurrection from the dead at the last day. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

W. H. S.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., (Box 547) April, 1870.

"MOONSHINE."

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

WE are too apt to hear the Bible spoken of lightly by those who love darkness rather than light. It is sometimes compared to an old fiddle that any tune can be played upon. The Old Testament, in the estimation of some, is little better than an old almanac, to be thrown aside as out of date.

But it is sad to see those who profess better things following in the same wake, and trying to make the word of God of none effect by their traditions.

There must be something sadly out of place somewhere, that makes such a system expedient. I have been led to these remarks by an article recently in the HERALD OF LIFE on "The Age to Come." I refer merely to the following remark: "What about those Old Testament prophecies that seem to have a bearing on this subject? Just here we think lies the error: making the moon to give light to the sun."

So, according to this view, the Old Testament prophecies are all moonshine! Surely this is not the way Christ and his apostles taught the people. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they that testify of me." Paul writing to Timothy says, "From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Philip did not tell the eunuch that the prophecy of Isaiah, he was reading, was all moonshine. Christ always referred to the Old Testament to prove the truth of his mission. The noble Bereans searched the Scriptures daily to see if these things were so. If some of our brethren would leave their world-burning traditions, and go and do likewise, they might learn there was something more than moonshine in God's blessed word and promises, exceeding great and precious as they are and ever have been, to those who believe that not one jot or tittle shall fail of accomplishment in His own good time.

The Jews, at least, have discovered to their cost, that all the woes and judgments denounced against their nation have been literally fulfilled. And shall our gracious Father execute his judgments to the letter, and forget or ignore his oath and promises to his people of Israel and the nations, in the coming age? I have not so learned Christ or his words, and I thank God for it.

SANDY HILL, N. Y., April 10, 1870.

DON'T CRY OVER SPILT WATER.

. . . . THE vanity of fretting at the irreparable is a principle capable of many and large applications. Not only must we needs die, we do die daily. Our whole physical structure, as we are often reminded, changes every few years; our mental structure changes faster still. . . . And as we recall the past, as we remember our former selves, and compare what we are, with what we were, if we see some changes for which we are thankful, we also see much which inspires regret; and as the years pass, and the inevitable changes ensue, we are too apt to waste time in crying over spilt water and trying to gather it up again.

"I am not the man I was," is sooner or later the language of most men; "not so quick in apprehension, nor so fresh in feeling, nor so strong whether for the encounter with temptation or the discharge of duty. What opportunities I have lost—opportunities that will never recur! What taints I have contracted—taints which all the waters in the sea cannot remove, and all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten! What might I not have been had I not suffered time to slip through my fingers unused? What might I not do now, with my larger knowledge of life if I possessed the vigor and ardor which once I had!" When this language is sincerely used, when we thus look back upon our "dead selves," bemoaning them instead of making them "stepping-stones to higher, better things;" when we are thus haunted with the ghosts of lost opportunities and past sins, we are filled with a regret singularly like the sorrow of bereavement. And this regret, like that sorrow, is very apt to weaken us still more, and to interpose between us, and the duties we yet have to discharge. We lose time in mourning the loss of time. We waste strength in sorrowing over a strength that is gone. We miss present opportunities while lamenting opportunities that are past.

O that we could understand once for all that it is useless and worse than useless, to cry over spilt water! The past is past; and it will be wise of us to "let the dead past bury its dead," and not to expend the little strength that is left us in digging graves for it, and watering them with our tears. No self-upbraidings, however mournful or passionate, will bring back a single bygone opportunity, or remove a single stain, or restore a single energy which has been misspent. Here we stand, embodying in our present characters the manifold result of past experiences. It is vain to mourn that we are what we are. The weaker we are, the more need to husband our strength; the more frequent and ample the opportunities we have missed the more we should strive to improve those which are still open to us; the more we have sinned, the harder will be our conflict with evil. These, such as we have made them, are the facts with which we have now to deal, and they are not to be washed out of their natural shape, by any tears we may lavish upon them. Our true wisdom will be, not to fret at them and their stubborn hardness, but to accept them and make the best we can of them. The past has given form to the present conditions of our life; within these we must move and act; and, if we be men in understanding, men, and not children or babes, we shall address ourselves to walking within the narrow limits which they impose upon us, instead of bemoaning that by past heedlessness we have made them so difficult and so narrow.

"Are we not, then, to repent of our sins and mistakes?" Assuredly we are: this also is one of the inevitable conditions, one of the painful results, of past weakness; and we must submit to it. But a godly repentance is far removed from that moody indolent grief, in which we too often indulge when we review the past. The true cleansing virtue of repentance does not lie in the tears we shed, but in the amendment which, trusting in a higher strength than our own, we hopefully attempt. To repent is not simply to weep over, it is "to leave the sins we loved before." And in nothing, perhaps, is the healthy bracing spirit of the Gospel more conspicuous than in this,—that when we are truly sorry for our sins we find that our sorrow is of a kind that worketh life; that while we are still mourning over our manifold offences, it virtually says to us, "Leave all those with Him who has made an atonement for the sin of the world. Cast that heavy sorrowful burden on him who careth for you. And now, with a lightened conscience and a cheerful trust, address yourselves to the work that lies before you. Forget that which is behind; press onward to that which is before."

Not that the Gospel strong and gracious as it is, detaches their natural consequences from our past transgressions because we are sorry for them, or severs the links which, in the spiritual as in the natural world, bind effects to their causes. It does not do that. We still bear the scars of the old wounds, scars that often ache and throb. We are still very open to temptation in these respects in which we have yielded to temptation. The evil bias of former habits often deflects our souls from their true course. But still the Gospel does teach us to regard all that evil past as belonging to a life with which we have now done. It teaches us that we have begun a new life; and though its conditions are not so happy and auspicious as they might have been had our past been more wisely ordered, the Gospel bids us accept our conditions such as they are with manly resolution and cheerfulness; and it reinforces our flagging energies with the assurance of a Divine help, and with the large bright hope of ultimate victory over evil in every form. The water which might have strengthened and refreshed us is spilt; it cannot be gathered up again; but here, through the grace of God, is a new costly cup, filled to the very brim with the water of life—a water, which as we drink it, will change into a strengthening gladdening wine.

Nay, more: though we cannot gather up the spilt water God can and does. The sun of his love shines down on the earth on which it has fallen, and lo, it rises from the earth in new and purer forms! All the useful and helpful elements of our past experience are gathered up by Him, and detached from the polluting dust with which they were blent. From our very sins and errors and mistakes, God evolves a gracious teaching for us, so soon as we are able to bear it. The memory of the transgressions we deplore goes with us into the new life, no longer to threaten and affright us, but to deepen our love for Him who has redeemed us, to supply the dark shadows before which the lights of hope and joy burn with a more cheerful and welcome radiance. The recollection of past opportunities neglected or abused, becomes an incentive to a more diligent use of the opportunities still vouchsafed us. The very tears we have shed are drawn up into the spiritual heaven, to fall in fertilizing showers on ground barren but for them; and as they fall, the Sun of Righteousness shines full upon them, and lo, a new bow of hope stretches across our brightening heaven, giving us the welcome assurance that, unfruitful as we have been in the past, henceforth seed-time and harvest shall never fail us.—Sunday Magazine.

SAID I not unto thee, that if thou would'st believe, thou should'st see the glory of God?

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. J. C. SCHAFF.

BR. STORRS: Although I have not written to you for some time, I have by no means been idle. I have been preaching and talking to the people a great deal, respecting the glorious truth of no future life out of Christ, and I humbly trust some little has thereby been done to set forth the true character of the God of the Bible. The brief time so spent has been fruitful of new and strange lessons: the persecuting spirit of "orthodoxy"—the tenacity with which men hold on to the prejudices of early education—their devotion to creeds, on these subjects, I have certainly learned things I had not aforetime dreamed of; but another fact I have learned is, the great unwillingness of most people to endure persecution or reproach for the cause of truth. The unpopularity of the pure truth is enough to drive from its support a great many who are dissatisfied with the Pagan notions of the times. Hence, although there are those who cannot find much to object, theoretically, against the truth, they give it at best but a timid support. However, as for me and my house, we have chosen to serve the God of love, let all who will serve a god of fire and brimstone. Our persecutions and sufferings are great, but our comforts in the conscious approbation of Him whom we serve are greater still, and we will persevere. For the present I shall preach the kingdom of God, and teach those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, in my "own hired house;" but, that this may be more advantageously done, I am striving to procure funds to erect a small house of worship in this place, and am slowly succeeding. The friends of the cause abroad having this world's goods to spare, would confer a great favor if they assisted in this work; and any thing forwarded to me will be faithfully applied to this object.

We send friendly greeting to the faithful everywhere, and ask them to pray for us. May God help us all to be faithful to the cause of Christ. Yours, in Christ.

CHAMBERSBURG, Pa., April 11, 1870.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: The love of God to us as a people is opening the great treasure-house of His word, and giving us an understanding of it, and thereby bringing out the great eternal truth of No life out of Christ, and spreading that truth among His people, and by that means the HERALD OF LIFE has come into existence. These things constrain me to take up my pen to tell my brothers and sisters the joy and comfort that these things bring to my heart.

O who can truly estimate the value of the HERALD OF LIFE? It makes me think of Luther's pen that the Elector Frederick saw in a dream. While Luther was writing some important things at Wittenburg, the end of his pen reached to Rome, and tickled the ears of a lion (i. e., the Pope) and made it roar; but that was not the most wonderful thing about it; the pen began to bring forth little pens by thousands and thousands. Amen. Bless the Lord. While reading the historical account of Rev. xvii. by Br. Green, especially the concluding article in the HERALD of March 30, I did rejoice with joy unspeakable; yes, for I cannot tell it. The greatest comfort was, it brought the coming of our precious Lord so nigh. I have often felt that I did not love the coming of Jesus with that intense desire that I wanted to; but I was glad to feel such joy when the evidence to me was so clear that He was very nigh. O how much light has been thrown on God's word by those that have written on the life and immortality theme these thirty years. How many errors have been exploded, and how many glorious truths have been brought to light, that will grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day.

It is a long time that I have believed that the ten kings, or the one hour kings of Rev. xvii. were the ten States of Italy, and the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image. It is very plain to me that the scarlet-colored beast on which the harlot sits, is the civil power, or government of Rome; and the eighth development, or the eighth head of this power, or beast, is the Napoleonic dynasty, and is for perdition. I bless God for light on the two horned beast. The beast or dragon that was cast out into the earth, was the one that came up out of the earth with temporal and ecclesiastical power.

Concerning the great earthquake in 1848, there is much evidence that Br. G. is correct. In 1848 we were looking and watching every development of the wild beast power, and the judgment on the papal power, both her temporal and ecclesiastical, to get the evidence of the near coming of our Saviour; and many times it was declared that there was not a crowned head in Europe but what trembled; and many thrones were cast down. I believe for myself that Daniel's vision had reference to this time. He says, when speaking of the little horn that had eyes and a mouth speaking great things, etc., I beheld till thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of Days did sit, etc., the judgment was set and the books were opened. It is plain to me that the judgment set on the beast, and on the papacy or little horn. Daniel says, he beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame. Yes, he saw one thing occurring after another, taking away his dominion to consume, and destroy it unto the end. O glorious day when she shall be found no more. I almost feel the Alleluia in my heart; I say, almost feel it; "I do feel it," and at times I can hardly refrain from shouting it. I know that I must in patience possess my soul; but I long for the day when God shall say, "Rejoice over her thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her." O what a short work God is making on the earth. Here is the great gathering at Rome, the command, "Come out of her my people;" the note of warning, "Behold I come as a thief." O may God give us strength to watch, and keep our garment that we may not be found naked.

O what a comfort to me was the greeting of Br. M. P. Martin, especially his view on our being free agents, every man responsible for himself, for his own doings, and answerable to God. I can truly say, as he does, that it appears to me every intelligent lover of Christ can but appreciate this position; and although we have the right of choice, yet like our blessed Master, it should be our choice to accept of those things our heavenly Father has advised in his word would be for our temporal good, as well as to help us understand our future welfare. I can say again, as he does, This is why I keep the seventh day Sabbath, showing that I respect my heavenly Father's knowledge more than my own; although I have the freedom to choose any day or no day as I please; and the general providences of God are not withholden from me should I choose my own ways, although I cannot claim His special promises except I honor his command. This position will apply to all the commands of God and Christ.

I see, too, that it is the duty of every follower of Christ to educate all his faculties so that he shall be a teacher and a light to others; but I cannot see where he has any authority to compel others, either individually or conventionally, to act different from their free will. I know the world assumes this right, and will exercise it until Christ possesses the kingdom. Please brethren and sisters read Br. Martin's greeting over again for me and for yourselves. There may be some points that may not be clear to all, but it contains truth that is not acted upon as a general thing. Let us ever remember that we should never make any truth, as we believe it, an authoritative test of fellowship. O let us love as brethren; be kind, be courteous, be gentle to all men, not rendering evil for evil; but let us ever manifest the spirit of Jesus, that we may be truly the light of the world, and the salt of the earth.

Let us stand with gathered garments, ready, with our loins girt about with truth, and our lamps trimmed and burning, and we like unto men that look for their Lord. O let us ever labor in the strength that God gives us to make the HERALD OF LIFE a blessed messenger of God, flying through the land having the everlasting gospel to preach as a healing balm, and reaching thousands who are perishing for the lack of knowledge. May grace, mercy and truth, be and abide with the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever. Amen. Your sister in the Lord, waiting for Jesus.

Yes, only waiting till the reapers have their last sheaf gathered home,
And earth's pilgrimage is ended, and the reign of glory come.
Quickly, reapers, gather quickly, the last heir of glory in;
Come, O Jesus, end our waiting, end the reign of death and sin.

FREDERICKSBURG, Iowa, April, 1870.

FROM H. A. ARNOLD.

BR. STORRS: I have been a reader of the HERALD OF LIFE for some time. I love the spirit and principles it manifests. It appears to be willing to live and let live. The more I read it the better I like it. Although I differ from it in some things, yet I love to compare views with its contributors, for I would gladly exchange a thousand errors for one truth. I desire to believe the truth and that which makes the Lord appear all-wise, just, merciful and a God of love. Can this be done by those that believe in eternal torment, or those that believe in the re-living of the wicked dead? Does it show wisdom, mercy and love in God to grant life to the wicked for no other purpose but to torment or kill them? Has the Lord ever said that the wicked shall see life, or have life in the world to come? These are serious questions, the answers of which should direct our theology aright.

Once I believed, or thought I believed, in eternal torment, for I was unable to distinguish between eternal torment and eternal punishment; but in process of time the scales (as it were) fell from my eyes, and I could see clearly. Since then the Bible has appeared a different and better book, and the Lord altogether more lovely; and it does look reasonable to me that if the Lord cannot better man's condition by giving him life to come, he will let him sleep a perpetual sleep where he shall never see life.

I also take the "Crisis." I find much good reading in it. I love to compare the HERALD and "Crisis" with the Bible, and prove all things believing only what is in accordance with God's word, as I understand it. I love both the "Crisis" and HERALD for the truths they advocate; but in some things one of these must be in an error. I am sorry it is thus. It does appear that the Bible is sufficient to point out the truth and expose the error. I delight to hear any Bible question discussed, if it is done in a spirit of love, and with a desire to obtain the truth and reject error.

What a beautiful injunction St. Paul has given us in Phil. i. 27, "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ; that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel." How beautiful: striving together, being of one spirit, of one mind; not trying to separate. May the good Lord help us to love each other, striving for the truth and not for the mastery; being as willing to be taught as we are to teach; remembering that we have been mistaken, and may be still sticking to many vain and delusive notions. May the Lord bless you, brother, with long life and much wisdom, is the prayer of your humble brother.

WEST NEWBURGH, Me., April 11, 1870.

FROM WILLIAM FORRESTER.

BR. STORRS: I want to again say, I am yet taking the Law of my Lord and Master as the rule of my faith and practice, as I have been blessed of him in doing for several years past, and I intend to until he says it is enough, or with our beloved Br. St. Paul be able to say, "I have finished my course and have kept the faith," etc.—2 Tim. iv. 1–8 inclusive.

I am more and more convinced that the time has come that many men will not endure sound doctrine, and many of them are our most learned ministers who ought to be way marks or living epistles to all men in the narrow way of life and salvation in the present, as St. Paul tells us in 1 Cor. xv., wherein he tells us we are presently saved if we keep those things in practical recollection; also, we ought to be teaching our fellow men how to obtain eternal life at the coming of Jesus as none but the holy in heart and life can have it then. I was again, really astonished to see in the HERALD OF LIFE the account of the funeral services of Dr. McClintock, to see the cold, formal, vain, sophistical teaching for doctrines the belief of so many uninspired men neglecting the commandments of God that they might set forth their own traditions without a Thus saith the Lord to the people.

I am really thankful that there are some among my brethren who dare defend the truth of God, although error is taught in high places. My prayer to God is, that he will sustain you and all the rest of his children in defending the truth of God, anywhere and everywhere fearless of opposition, knowing that the truth of God and its great author are on our side so long as we cleave to the narrow and straight way, as taught by our Master, Jesus Christ. One thing I have learned some time since, many of us don't read our Bibles half close enough, accompanied with prayer at the same time that we may understand the blessed Word of Life correctly in the fear of God, and so be prepared to defend the right, and detect the wrong, at all times, in the love and fear of God. We learn in Luke, xxii., our Saviour tells us the general reason why men so often err is, because they know not the Scriptures, nor the power of God. So we see by this, the necessity of our searching more closely the Bible, in an humble and prayerful frame of mind.

I want to say a word further; let all things be done to the glory of God. Please read Psa. cix., to the 5th verse inclusive. This has been my experience for a few months past. I am ready to say with David in Psa. cviii. 1, O God my heart is fixed to serve the Lord. Please read Psa. cxix. 49th to the 126th verse, viz., It is time for thee, Lord, to work, for they have made void thy Law. I might note many other most striking scriptures which would be in place, truly, in the investigation and illustration of our most glorious Bible hope; but please excuse me for more able writers.

I want to say a few words more on the subject of the resurrection of all men. I was talking with a good Advent minister, a few days since, who don't yet see as many of us do. In the raising of all men, he hastened to show me Acts xxiv. 15. I could discover all the time, he wanted to see the right, and in the fear of God, by the help of the teachings of Jesus, I sought to show him the right. I was at his house where he has a good home, an agreeable family, etc., in the village of Watkins, at the head of Seneca Lake. We should be very glad to have some strong man come there or to Elmira, and tell the people the truth as it is in Jesus; as we really think much good could be done, and a brother will be sustained. I again showed him 1 Cor. xv. 42 to 54, also, Luke xx. 27, also the 35th and 36th verses. Let us remember these are the words of Jesus not of the apostles only. In John vi. he tells us whom he will raise up at the last day; and if he intended to raise up all men, why did he not tell us so in short; but he has told us plainly four times in this chapter who he will raise up when he comes to this earth again. He also tells us in Luke xx., that they who are worthy to obtain that world, cannot die any more being the children of the resurrection; which all must be, if all are to be resurrected.

In conclusion let God or his word be true. Let me say to you my fellow Christians, the truth of God makes me free, so I am free indeed. May the peace of God be with one and all, till we meet to part no more, with our dear Master on this renovated earth. Amen, and Amen. I am much pleased to see Br. J. Lewis' name in the HERALD of March 30th, as he is a familiar friend of mine. I am much pleased with our paper and the many excellent communications from my Brethren and Sisters. I love the truth and the right anywhere. Ths time has been when I did not see all that I do now. I am well aware there are many of my fellow men who would rejoice as I and others of us do, in the truths which we have found that make us free indeed; as our Master told the Jews, if the truth made them free, they should be free indeed; and as they demurred at his remark, so do many in these days; so we need to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves, that we may save some, all we can. I praise my Master that he does yet hear and answer the prayer of faith.

My health has not been very good the winter past. I have been unable to be on my feet a part of the time, from bleeding piles; but I have been laboring to do all the good I could in the cause of religion and temperance, in abstaining from the use of liquor and tobacco as I consider them both ungodly habits, and will either of them expel people from the kingdom of heaven, if indulged in to excess. I am well aware that I am touching many of our folks and they need somebody to touch them sharply before the Master comes, for he has told us plainly that none but the pure in heart shall see him; so brethren and sisters, do, I beseech you, let us all beware and keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Please read James i. 27, also, Matt. v. 5, and many other scriptures to the point. I praise my Master that he has blest my labors in a few weeks and months past in turning several from those wicked intemperate habits. Some have been almost out of humor at first, but on reflection they have come to me and treated me most kindly and thankfully for my friendly and impressive warning to them to lay aside the pipe or cigar. Several have expressed themselves most truly thankful to me for warning them in the way I did. My reply to them is invariably, Praise the Lord and not me. Their reply is, that I ought to go all through the country and warn smokers as I did them, as there is no way I could do more good. So now, brethren and sisters, we should remember our dear Saviour; we must not suffer sin upon our neighbor in any wise.

DUNDEE, N. Y., April 10, 1870.

FROM N. R. ORCUTT.

"Buy the truth and sell it not." We find in the word of God that, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and a good understanding have all they that keep his commandments; but fools despise wisdom and instruction. A professed believer in the advent doctrine remarked to me a short time since, that it made little difference whether people knew anything concerning the Bible. She thought if they lived about right, God would not condemn them for ignorance.

O when will people learn that we are not saved by works, but through faith in the living God. And how shall we obtain that faith, except we have a knowledge of God on which to found our faith? Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of the Lord. How can ye hear without a preacher? Now let me ask, how can they hear when they will not attend? for many in these last days seem to be afraid of losing their foundation and will not listen to preaching by brethren who hold the Life views. I have even known them to leave the meeting; thus refusing to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. How my heart has gone out in prayer to God to open the eyes of some of my beloved brethren and sisters to behold the truth as it is in Jesus, to get a knowledge of that God whom we believe is a God of love, whose tender mercies are over all his works; whose long-suffering toward us is so great, not willing that any should perish but that all should come to a knowledge of the truth.

I am but a beginner in this way of life. Not quite one year ago I took the word of God for the man of my counsel; yet sometimes when I feel my weakness I am made to wonder why God ever called after me, and praise his name for the manifestation of his Spirit in my heart.

An Advent minister told me yesterday, that in all his travels wherever the Life views were held the people were dead, no life, no vitality, no conversion. He also said, there was no salvation in doctrine. In regard to the people's lack of interest, if I may judge by the effect on my own heart, of this doctrine, I never felt so much interest in the cause of God; it seems as if I never knew what it was to love God before. People may have a theory in their heads, without the love of it in their hearts; or it may be there has been so much opposition, we have neglected to let our light shine, and have thus lost ground. May God help us to awake to righteousness and sin not. If we believe God is love, let us prove by our works that we believe, for faith without works is dead; let us love God because he first loved us; girding on the whole armor that we may be able to fight the good fight of faith.

Pilgrims, arise; and look around you;
Light is breaking in the skies;
Gird thy bridal robes around thee,
Morning dawns, arise, arise.

In regard to the doctrine of the Bible, I have found salvation in believing it, and others may if they love it. On what foundation are we to build unless we take the teachings of the prophets and apostles, Jesus himself, being the chief corner-stone? I love to read the letters in the HERALD, to me there is life in them. I believe there are some who love the truth, and are looking for the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour. I love to bring his coming nigh. Here are sorrows, trials and temptations on every hand. Then they will have an end; and those who have been purified and made white will receive their reward, which is eternal life.

HOLDEN, Me.

FROM A YOUNG FRIEND.

DEAR FRIEND: I hope you will not think me an intruder, if I say I am very thankful for the faith I have found in your HERALD. Now I can see aright the Gospel. It seems to me I cannot do without the HERALD; it is life to me. My father takes it, and he lets me read with care. I noted its teachings and compared them with the Bible, and soon found the truth. A year ago I knew nothing of what I now prize very much. I will be thankful if you will send me a set of the Campaign Documents. I have an eye upon some up here, whom I think those little weapons would help to gain a victory on the right side. I am not a very good scholar; am 16 years of age, the son of Geo. W. Sherman. From your friend in hope of eternal life.

ELERY M. SHERMAN.

SOUTH ADAMS, Mass., March 16, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

Be encouraged to work on: and may our LIFE-GIVER bring you safely to his kingdom.

RUSSELL BARNARD, Beckett, Mass., asks: Can't some one get a Baptist minister to write a letter for Br. Thorne to answer? Give them all a chance. I think the tract would not only be instructive but amusing.

DO STOP AND THINK.

THIS is not an age of thought. We live too fast to think much. Even in secular matters, in financial affairs, men simply speculate, drive reckless bargains, and trust the result to chance. Hence the many sudden ups and downs in financial circles. The different branches of trade are fast becoming so many different games of chance, and their pursuers thoughtlessly playing at them.

But not only is this a thoughtless age regarding the present, but especially is it so, concerning the more important future. Few men in the ordinary walks of life think for themselves in matters pertaining to their eternal welfare, matters in which they alone are responsible. Concerning snch a great matter as life or death for all eternity, we find a majority of even those apparently much concerned not daring to think for themselves. Regarding any opinion or plain Scripture, conflicting with standard orthodoxy, or the denominational creeds, we find but little inquiry beyond this—Is it popular? "Have any of the rulers believed?" Although our departing Lord promised to send the Spirit of truth to those who should ask it, "to guide them in the way of all truth," we find this self-styled "enlightened" age superstitiously preferring the testimony of the sciences, the heathen philosopher, religious fiction, anything before the plain, untheologized Bible.

Jesus prayed to His Father; "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." But the cry is, we can't understand it. Of course you can't, so long as you take denominational or traditional dogmas as the standard, and try to make the Bible agree with them. Just reverse the matter, take the Bible as the standard, and think for yourselves, and there will be much less trouble in understanding it. God talks more plainly than man. "If any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not."—The Nazarene.

SELECTIONS.

"NARROW and ill-used privileges always end in ruining those who bigotedly cling to them. The exclusiveness which begins with shutting others out, commonly ends with shutting the exclusive in. The lordly fortress becomes the narrow prison."

"Great changes are seldom quietly accomplished. The spring must have its thunderstorms as well as its sunshine and gentle showers. The stone could not be rolled away from the sepulchre, nor the veil rent in the holy place without an earthquake."

Says Martin Luther, "What is our sleep, but a kind of death? And what is death itself but a night's sleep? In sleep all weariness is laid aside, and we become cheerful again and rise in the morning fresh and well. So shall we wake from our graves, in the last day, as though we had only slept a night, and bathe our eyes and rise fresh and well.

"O, gracious God! come quickly, come at last! I wait ever for that day—that morning of spring."

"It seems as if God meant His gospel to be borne on from age to age by voices, not by books—not in faint echoes from the tombs, but in fresh living words from heart to heart."

"God forbid that I should think His truth so low or so small as that I should see to the top or the bottom of it. But I have sometimes thought a great part of the difficulty springs simply from people's getting out of God's presence. In the gospels it is mostly I and ye and now. But when men write theology, they make it he and they and then, which makes the difference. The Lord says to us, 'come now,' 'come ye,' and our now is to-day, but His is eternity."

"Words cannot heal the wounds that words can make."

LOUISA J. BEACH.

QUEER LOGIC ANSWERED.—An English clergyman in Lancashire was lately endeavoring to prove that doers of good are always in the minority, and, by parity of reasoning, that the conservative party being in the minority was right. To illustrate he said, "Paul was in a minority, but who was right? Peter was in a minority, but who was right? Christ was in a minority, but who was right?" But the reverend orator was literally "sat upon," when some one in the gallery shouted, "Judas Iscariot was in the minority, but who was right?" The effect was laughable. The lecturer was struck dumb for some minutes, and could not utter a word, and the audience roared.

SIMPLY BELIEVE.

LET me entreat you to look at the testimony, and think not that anything else than a simple reception of these words, "that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," is necessary for the purpose of your being cleansed from your sin. It is the idea that something more is necessary which obstructs the reception. It is the imagination of a great personal work to which you must set yourself, and in which you have hitherto sat down in listlessness and despair, that keeps you at a distance from God. He approaches you with overtures, and what you have to do is to close with them. He approaches you with tidings; and what you have to do, is to give credit to them. This is doing the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent; and could this transition be accomplished, then would you be translated into a habit of cheerful and progressive obedience, which in a way of legalism, or in the attempt to establish a righteousness of your own, you never can attain.—Dr. Chalmers.
—Selected by L. J. BEACH.

GENERAL C. B. FISK having asked a wounded soldier at the point of death, "Can you tell me in a few words exactly how you feel about dying?" the answer was: "Yes, General, I think I can. It seems just as if I was going to the front."

WHEREVER I have a tent, there God shall have an altar.—Howard.

OBITUARY.

HILLSTREAM.—It becomes my painful duty to record the death of Br. A. O. HILLSTREAM. He died March 13th, 1870. I was not present at the funeral, and did not hear of his death till some four days afterward. I saw him about a week before he died. He said he was waiting for redemption; and with strong emotions and tears spoke of the glorious time on the earth in its Edenic state. I asked him if he expected redemption before Jesus comes? "O, no;" he said; and replied to the effect that he expected to remain in death till the last trump. He desired me to pray for him. I told him I would, and also desired him to remember that we worshipped a God of love. Again he was strongly affected to tears, and thanked God that we did. Perhaps I ought to have mentioned before that Br. Hillstream had been unwell so as to be unable to work much for about one year before he died, and had been confined to his bed over two months before he died. He was very feeble when I last saw him, and had no hopes of recovery. In his last moments he expressed himself happy.

Br. Hillstream was a native of Sweden, and was (I should think) nearly 60 years of age. He first embraced the truth nearly seven years ago, from pamphlets I lent him. His wife had previously embraced the truth while he was in the army, a member of the Graybeard regiment. He was an apt scholar, and became one of the most correct thinkers on the "Life views" that I ever was acquainted with. He had a kind heart, was an honest man, and a great lover of the truth, and often talked on the subject to his neighbors. He had no children. Sister Hillstream is left alone, and yet not alone I trust, for God is her comforter. Into the hands of a God of love we resign Br. Hillstream, hoping to meet him again soon.

LA FAYETTE NORRIS.

CAMPTON, Iowa, March 20, 1870.

MARRIED.

KIBBE, TOMPKINS.—In New Britain, Conn., at the residence of the bride's father, April 15, by Eld. H. Rockwell, Albert O. Kibbe, of North Somers, Conn., and Sarah P. Tompkins, of New Britain, Conn.

APPOINTMENTS.

HARTFORD, Conn., April 24.
RUFUS WENDELL.

NEW YORK, Cooper Institute, April 24.
W. S. CAMPBELL.

BRATTLEBORO, Vt., April 24.
WEST MERIDEN, Conn., May 1.
NEW BRITAIN, Conn., May 8.
GEO. W. BROWN.

KEYPORT, N. J., Sunday, April 24.
S. W. BISHOP.

ORRINGTON, Me., (at the Chapel), Sunday, April 24.
E. V. B. EDGERLY.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, May 1 and 8.
WM. STUART.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Sunday, May 1.
S. W. BISHOP.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—R. C. Campbell, A. T Waldo, Mrs. Mahala Cooper, Isaac Clewley, R. M. Cooper, J. Wheeler, H. Richardson.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—E. O. Williams, Ogden Williams, C. H. Robinson, John H. Mitchell, A. R Smiley, Andrew Whitcomb, Chas. E. Philip, Bertine S. Erwin.

VARIOUS SUMS—Homer White, $5; B. S. Hilton, $2 50; Aaron B. Curry, $5 (sent book and paper as directed); Abel Larkin, $3.

DONATIONS FOR "A RICH TRACT."

"W. F." pledges $3; A friend, paid, $4; D. Harrison, Caldwell, N. J., paid, $6; Joel S. Richards, paid, 60 cents; Thos. R. Crocker, pledges $5; Mr. Moore, paid $1; D. B. Salter, pledges $5; C. A. Hempsted, paid, $5; Bertine S. Erwin, paid $1; James F. Redhead, paid $1.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Otis S. Robinson, J. S. Potter, Chas. H. N. Merriman, (two parcels); Russell Barnard, L. A. Morse, John Hayes, Joel S. Richards, Edgar Conklin, (book), Eld. Jacob Blain, A. R. Smiley, Clarendon Kelly, H. C. Buck, (two parcels); Wm. Slater, (two books and tracts); Bertine S. Erwin.

Heart Hymns.

Bear the burden of the present,
Let the morrow bear its own;
If the morning sky be pleasant,
Why the coming night bemoan?

If the darkened heavens lower,
Wrap thy cloak around thy form;
Though the tempest rise in power,
God is mightier than the storm.

Steadfast hope and faith unshaken
Animate the trusting breast;
Step by step the journey's taken
Nearer to the land of rest.

All unseen, the Master walketh
By the toiling servants' side,
Comfortable words he talketh
While his hands uphold and guide.

Grief, nor pain, nor any sorrow
Rends thy heart, to him unknown;
He to-day—and He to-morrow,
Grace sufficient gives his own.

Holy strivings nerve and strengthen,
Long endurance wins the crown;
When the evening shadows lengthen
Thou shalt lay the burden down.

—Selected.

Believing God's Word or Not.

AGE TO COME; BY D. J. ELLSWORTH.

Br. Storrs: My mind has been exercised for some time to speak out more plainly on this subject. I as firmly believe in the doctrine of the Age to Come, and the gathering of the descendants of ancient Israel to the land of Palestine and the reign of Christ over them, as I believe in the doctrine of Life future only through Christ, as held by Life believers. Although I am quite young in the school of Christ, yet I have been taught from a child concerning those "Times of the Restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouths of all His holy prophets since the world began." Thus have I been taught by a father who had thoroughly studied his Bible and understood these things long before William Miller came out; and when the cry of warning was sounded, and the final smash and consummation of all things earthly was proclaimed at hand, he protested against it, and confidently and emphatically declared that it was not so to be; for he had read and believed God's Word concerning the good that He would do unto this people, in the latter days.

I have been and am now, astonished and amazed to find how the mass of the Advent people understand and regard this great and glorious doctrine. It has seemed as though a blindness was upon them only exceeded by the judicial blindness of ancient Israel in rejecting the Messiah. Shall we believe God's Word or not? We say, of course, we will; but do we? Our Advent brethren have been finding fault for the past twenty-five years with the people in the churches because they will not take the common sense literal interpretation of the Scriptures, but spiritualize everything to bend it to their notion that a dead man knows more than a living one; that he is immortal and goes to heaven or torment at death. Oh, our theories! We start with a theory. With a deal of ingenuity and plausible reasoning, a fine-spun and seemingly beautiful argument is wrought out. It is swallowed down. Prophecies, which appear somewhat in the way, are declared "Conditional," and the word of God is treated no better than by those mentioned above.

We think Br. Storrs, that we can somewhat appreciate your feelings upon the subject when after a careful study of the prophets, you have brought out in the Herald an array of scripture upon scripture, which was overwhelming to substantiate this doctrine, and which no one could gainsay or resist, and then to find it was so distasteful to many of your readers, and so many ready to bring the doctrine into disrepute, and even to desire to see no more in the Herald upon the subject.

It has been plain to us for many months, that the prime cause for the mistakes in the calculations or miscalculations, concerning the time of the second coming of our Lord, have been due to the rejectors of this doctrine, the setting aside or overlooking those prophecies which were to have their fulfilment in the land of Palestine, upon the Jewish people, near and at the close of this dispensation.

We cannot close this letter without presenting for the consideration of others who may read it, a plain "Thus saith the Lord," in favor of the truth for which we contend.

I will notice first the declaration of the angel to the virgin Mary, concerning Him who should be "Born King of the Jews."—Luke i. 32, 33. "And the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." I believe it.

For a Jew to become a Christian would not make him a Gentile, any more than for a Frenchman to come to Christ would make him an American. The objector will quote, "There is neither Jew nor Gentile;" all are one in Christ. We admit that all are on a level in this dispensation of grace; that there is no respect of persons, but that which is the order in this dispensation, is not necessarily the order in the next.

To use this text as some do, to get the Jew out of the way as a Jew, is as inconsistent as it would be to quote further, "Neither male nor female," and expect by so doing to destroy the sexes.

We will now examine a few declarations of the Lord Jehovah, in regard to this people. Turn to Isa. xliii. 21. "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." My brethren and sisters, I ask you in God's name, that you will try and believe this. Some may say, It has been fulfilled. Will you tell me when? Have they not been a stiff necked and rebellious people from first to last? And, think you, will God's word fail here? When God was pronouncing upon them the curse for their disobedience, found in Lev. xxvi. 32, He says, "I will bring the land into desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it; and I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you, and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste, . . . and yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them; for I am the Lord."

And again, in Ezek. xxxvi. the Lord gives the reason why He will not utterly cast them off, after once having chosen them. Verse 21. "But I had pity for mine Holy Name which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine Holy Name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went, and I will sanctify my great name; . . . For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land; Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, . . . a new heart will I give you, . . . and I will put my spirit within you, . . . and I will multiply the fruit of the tree, . . . and ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen." Now mark the declaration, verse 32, "Not for your sakes do I this saith the Lord God; be it known unto you; be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel." "Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities, I will cause you to dwell in the cities and the wastes shall be builded, . . . I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it." Elsewhere we find it repeatedly declared, "It shall be in the latter days." What mean all these prophecies concerning this people, if the Lord was to abhor them forever? Did He not foresee their wickedness and idolatry which they committed? which brought upon them the threatened judgments, even, "Wrath unto the uttermost." Would it be wisdom to make up the Scriptures with whole books about a matter that was never to take place? Nay, verily; God hath not spoken in vain, but His counsel will stand and He will do all His pleasure. Because we short sighted creatures cannot comprehend all his dispensations, we should not reject His counsel, nor lightly regard His word; "For His ways are not as our ways, nor His thoughts as our thoughts." We will close these remarks, by giving the closing words of the prophet Amos, touching this subject.

"Behold the days come saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper . . . and I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them saith the Lord God." In hope of the kingdom.

Windsor, Conn., April, 1870.

Where Are We?

INVESTIGATION COMMANDED. BY J. D. SHERIDAN.

How often I hear it stated by friends that investigation is dangerous, and that we must be very careful not to pry into the mysteries of God; and that there are many things in the word that we cannot understand, etc. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets."—Amos iii. 9. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life and they are they which testify of me."—John v. 39. If I understand the word, search, means to investigate, to compare. Well then we have the authority and command of our divine Master, to investigate the word; and bless the Lord, we may have the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, that is able to lead us into all truth. We desire and ask for it. "Howbeit, when the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: . . . and he will show you things to come."—John xvi. 13. Yes, blessed promises. "Whoso readeth let him understand."—Matt. xxiv. 15. Yes, the disciples were warned of the desolations that were to come upon the Jewish nation for their great sin of unbelief, and rejecting the Son of God. And the blessed Spirit did raise up a messenger, whose name was "Jesus, the son of Annanas," about 30 years after our Lord pronounced the judgments that were to fall upon the Jewish nation, to warn Christians so that they could make ready to flee into the mountains, as directed by our Saviour. And as history informs us, they did obey the warning and fled to a little place called Pella, beyond the Jordan.

Jerusalem was said by some authors, to contain about three millions of inhabitants at the time of our Saviour's sojourn there. They were composed of a mixed multitude of all sects and classes of beings. History informs us that there was more life destroyed by the seditions, than by the Roman army at the time of the siege and the sufferings from the famine were worse than all the rest, when people were compelled to go to the manure pile to get something to subsist on; and last of all, to cook and eat their own children. Verily the words of our Saviour proved true, in pronouncing the awful judgments that were to befall that generation. And also what the Spirit teaches through the prophet Jer. xix. 9, "And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons, and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and straitness wherewith their enemies and they that seek their lives shall straiten them."

The Antediluvians were also warned of the approaching judgments that were about to fall upon them, by Noah, a preacher of righteousness. And so at the present day, this generation is being warned by the same word, and by the messengers of mercy, who are proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom near at hand, and of the judgments that await those who live ungodly. And it appears from the word that where "much is given, much is to be required;" so with the Jews, they suffered greater condemnation because they sinned against greater light than any former nation.

How must it be with the present generation, who enjoy the same precious light and gospel privileges that they enjoyed? Yes, truly "God is love," and "he will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

"Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophesy and keep those things that are written therein, for the time is at hand."—Rev. i. 3. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."—2 Tim. iii. 16. I ask how are we to receive this profit, unless we investigate the word of life? And as Philip said to the Eunuch, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" And he said, "How can I except some man guide me?"—Acts viii. 30, 31. So I can say truly, I feel the constant need of the Spirit to direct me in the investigation of the Scriptures; and I feel to thank the good Lord for putting it into the heart of our worthy brother Rondthaler to write for the Herald, and that I have the privilege of reading his very able communications. They were truly a feast to me; yes, it was a "feast of wines on the Lees."—Isa. xxv. 8. May the Lord bless him abundantly; also, our worthy Editor, and to the unknown friend who sent me the papers.

Br. Storrs, as your paper seems to be open for investigation and free discussion, I will attempt to say a few words in reply to a communication in the Herald of late issue, from the pen of J. C. Wheeler, which appears to be an exposition of the xxth chapter of Rev.

Now I do not feel competent, nor have I the spirit or desire to enter into a controversy with the brother; but I do not understand how he can take the view that he does of that part of prophecy. He takes the ground that the dragon spoken of in the xxth and the dragon of the xiith chapters, are the same; this may be so, but to affirm that Pagan Rome only is meant, needs a little investigation and proof. He assumes that the doctrine of the Devil and Satan, etc., was the power that was to be cast into the bottomless pit, and that was the only bottomless doctrine ever taught, and that was taught in the garden to our first parents by the serpent, devil, or satan. Very well, you will forgive me if I do not get the exact words, I will try and get the substance.

Now, I supposed that a doctrine was a principle taught, either good or bad; if I am wrong please correct me, but for argument's sake we will allow it to be a power. He admits that the doctrine was the one taught by the Philosophers in the early part of the Christian era, and that it was the natural immortality of the soul, (or that the man does not surely die.) It is very true this doctrine was taught and believed by Pagan Rome; also that it was taught at a much earlier period, and believed by the most of the Jews, at the first advent of our Saviour. But we are informed by different historians, that the doctrine crept into the Christian church at a very early date, and that as early as the last of the third century; and in fact it became a generally received doctrine of the Church, and also of the reformers of later date. Luther in his works affirms that Leo the X., (A. D. 1513), denied the immortality of the soul; and after listening one day to two skilful doctors, who were discussing this fundamental doctrine of the Christian faith, he terminated it by this singular conclusion. "The reasons which you give for the affirmative appear to me profound, but I prefer the negative because it is determined for us to take care of our body, and to acquire embonpoint." And so it ever has been for the last fifteen hundred years, a common and admitted faith and belief of almost all Christendom, as well as pagans of every nation.

Now if Pagan Rome was dethroned near the last of the eighth century, if we look the ground over we shall find that another beast arose from the ashes although more lamb-like in outward appearance, yet she was vested with all the power or doctrine of the first beast. And if my friend will turn to the book he quotes from, "Dr. Cormenin, vol. 2d, page 150," and read the sketch there contained, of the history of Pope Alexander, (or Roderick Borgia) he must readily discover that there was but one step between Pagan and Papal Rome, and that one step lower in degradation [if such a thing could possibly be], for why? She made pretence to better things; and she still maintaining the same doctrines at the point of the bayonet; and as this was in the last part of the 15th century, I will quote one or two passages. "Soon after the discovery of America by Columbus, a dispute arose between the king of Portugal [John the second] and the king of France, [Ferdinand the Catholic.] They agreed to refer the settlement of the boundaries of their new empire, to the Pope. Alexander consented to act as a mediator of peace between the two countries. He traced a line which passed from pole to pole, through the Azores or Western Islands, and decreed by virtue of his universal omnipotence, that all the countries which were beyond this line, that is, the West Indies, or America should belong to the king of Spain, and those on this side to the king of Portugal. [That is the East Indies and the shores of Africa]. His Holiness imposed no other condition on this magnificent gift than the immediate payment of a large sum of money, and an engagement by the Spaniards and Portugese to convert, willingly or by force, the inhabitants to Christianity. Within sixty years after the publication of this bull, the execrable Spanish missionaries had murdered fifteen millions of victims in the new world in obedience to the orders of the Pope." Now if this is chaining the devil and Satan, or that execrable doctrine, it seems he must have had a pretty long chain.

This is only the beginning of religious persecution; but I forbear. Agreeable to the word, I believe that the reign of Christ on the earth will be a literal reign, and that the apostles will be promoted to "twelve thrones," according to the promise, ruling or judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And during the thousand years, will be poured out on different parts of the earth the vials of God's wrath, not all at one time. We read of children dying, etc., and of dogs and sorcerers, etc., [on the outside of the holy city], and of the smoke of torment ascending day and night. It appears plain that the angel has not yet declared that time shall be no longer.—Rev. x. 6. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, etc., 7th verse.

It appears that these were days yet to be fulfilled, and at that time the mystery of God would be finished, and then time should be no longer. Again in the xvth chapter, we have a description of a "sea of glass mingled with fire," and them that had gotten the victory over the beast and over his image . . . "stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God."—12th verse.

Yes, the redeemed of the earth will be in a safe place during the fulfilment of the last plagues, or judgments that will be executed on them who refuse the gospel terms of peace and eternal life. But verily, God takes his own time and means to execute his plan. "Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it."—Ps. xxxvii. 34, also verse 36. "Yet he passed away and was not." The wicked shall see it, and melt away; the desire of the wicked shall perish. Ps. cxii. 10. But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. Ps. xxxvii. 11. "And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord shall be established . . . And they shall beat their swords into plough-shares," etc.—Isaiah ii. 2, 4. Verily these words have not been fulfilled yet; but the promises are sure, and the word of the Lord is sure, and will not fail.

"The words of the Lord are pure words."—Ps. xii. 6. "But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove them with equity, for the meek of the earth, and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isaiah xi. 14, also lxv. 20. "For the child shall die an hundred," etc. It appears that there will be deaths on the earth during the thousand years of Christ's reign on the earth, and the most horrible of deaths. Zech. xiv. 12. And this shall be the plague, . . . "their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongues shall consume away in their mouth." And the same judgments were to fall upon the beasts, 15th verse; also 17th verse. "And it shall be that whoso will not come up, of all the families of the earth, unto Jerusalem to worship the king, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain." "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God even the Father, when he shall have put down all rule and all authority, and power; for he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet; the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.—1 Cor. xv. 24–26.

Bless the Lord, Paul has given us a key to the whole thing. And the thousand years of Christ's reign on the earth, with his saints in their glorified state, is yet in the future, and that before the mighty angel shall declare that time shall be no longer. And it appears clear to me, that during this thousand years, the devil nor his doctrine will be able to harm those who are redeemed from the earth, and the power of satan. "Nothing shall hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain."

Three Rivers, Mich., Feb. 16, 1870.

Children's Department.

The Poor Children of Madrid.

In a letter from Madrid, Professor Knapp gives some particulars of his labors, which will interest deeply both young and old:

First some facts to the children about their little brothers in Spain. I have about three hundred of these. They were at first very unruly, shouting, laughing, and cuffing one another during the prayers; and great patience had to be exercised to calm them into an orderly well-behaved school. Now they all sing the beautiful hymns we have taught them, all of which you know; and these same little children, by singing at home and at their work, attract their parents to our meetings, where they have been greatly blessed. One little boy bright and beautiful sings them as he leads his poor blind father about the streets; and I will tell you how I got him.

THE LITTLE BOY AND HIS BLIND FATHER.

One day as I was writing in my study, I heard a sweet, plaintive child's voice under the window, singing one of those airs of Spain half Oriental, half European. I was so much affected by the peculiar richness of the tones, that I sent my servant down to call the lad. He came, and I then learned that he spent his time leading his blind father about the streets, to gain a few pennies to live by. So I induced his parents to let him come to our Sunday-school, and in time he suggested singing in the thoroughfares the pieces he had learned. You can form no idea what effect it produces to hear a poor little boy, leading a blind man along, singing in the streets, "I know 'tis Jesus loves my soul." The last day will tell how many that little boy's plaintive singing will have rescued from eternal death; for you know it is a very simple thing to be saved. We have only to believe really in Jesus, even though we do not know much else about Him, than that He can somehow save us, and we shall be his on that day when He makes up his jewels. He will give them up not we. Thousands of people from all sorts of churches and from no churches at all, will be there dear children, having "escaped all safe to land; some on boards and some on broken pieces of the ship." Will you be there? You often sing, "We'll be there," do you not? Well, be sure you love Jesus now, and you will not be disappointed then.

THE LITTLE BOY WHO WANTED A BIBLE.

I must tell you about another little fellow. He wanted a Bible, but could not afford to buy one, as it cost nearly a shilling (twenty cents), and he only earned fivepence (ten cents) a day, which he needed to feed and clothe himself with; for most of our little folk have to earn their own living independently of their parents. So what did he do? He went without his chocolate at breakfast for seventeen days, and ate the dry bread alone, poor dear boy!—he who at best had only bread and chocolate in the morning, and a dinner of little more. With this sacrifice he saved up three reals (sevenpence-halfpenny, fifteen cents), in farthing pieces, and brought them to us for a New Testament. Of course, on learning all the facts, I gave him a Bible and took his money, for I thought it best not to weaken the effect of his noble act.

THE LITTLE MATCH-SELLER.

Another little boy sells wax matches, called Cerillas, in the street. If he does not dispose of a certain number of boxes a day, his parents will not give him anything to eat when he comes home at night. One afternoon he was very hungry, having had to suffer for not having sold his number the day before. While thinking what to do, Jesus came into his little mind, and so he got down by his basket, there in the busy plaza, and asked Him "to help him sell four boxes of matches so that he might have his dinner." When he arose, a gentleman stepped up, and bought just four boxes, and the little match-vendor ran home joyfully with his eight farthings (cuartos), his heart brimming full. We asked him why he did not stop and try to sell more. "Oh," said he, "I had enough for to-day, and Jesus will take care of to-morrow."

You will not smile, dear children, when I tell you I weep a great deal here; I cannot help it; I go through the streets crying. For Jesus is very manifest in Spain, and a mighty work is going on, of which I cannot tell you much now, I am so busy, and there is no one who understands English to help me write letters; and as the means come from individuals, I have to answer each one who sends, and besides direct the work in every detail, many times very perplexing, on account of the ignorance of the laborer.

THE DYING BOY.

I must tell you about a poor lad who had lain on his bed ill, for eight years—nearly all his life. His father came to our meetings by some strange providence, although they live in the opposite extreme of the town. When I learned of the case, I sent children from the Sunday-school to sing, and good young men to read and pray with him every day. One day last week I went myself to see him. I found him in the garret of the house, in a room—the only one they possess—about twelve feet square, in which were two beds—one for the lad, the other for the mother and father. In it besides was a box, one chair, and a Spanish kitchen range. This was all. Here the child had suffered eight long years. He was very thin and pale in the face, and his end cannot be far off. But, oh, what a happy boy! He loves Jesus, for he had received Him at once as soon as the friends came to tell him the good news.

I read a chapter, or several passages in different chapters, applicable to his case, and then we sang a sweet hymn, in which he tried hard to join, in a faint yet eager voice, that broke away at times from its feebleness, then ceased as exhaustion succeeded. After prayer I asked him a few questions.

"Do you suffer much, dear?"

"Oh yes, sir, terrible pain. Yesterday I tried to get on my knees in the bed, but I am so swollen in my body (he had dropsy, and was fearfully distended) I could not; then I put my hands together so, and begged Jesus to take away this pain in my head; I am so weary of it. And it all went away; and now every time it comes, I pray, and it goes off."

"Do you believe in Jesus as your only Saviour?"

"Oh yes, I sing and believe, 'I know 'tis Jesus saves my soul.'"

"Have you patience to bear all your afflictions?"

"Yes; I do it now for Jesus' sake. It's all I can do for Him. I wish I could do more; but I can't and Jesus knows it."

We were all bathed in tears, parents, friends and myself standing about the room, for seats there were none.—The Christian; London, England.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2 "
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "You are Immortal," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 29. WHOLE NUMBER 315.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie, in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed;

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

"So They Wrap It Up:"

Or, The Theology of Doctors of Divinity.

BY THOMAS R. CROCKER.

BEING confined to my house for a few days in consequence of an accident, I thought I would get the "New York Herald" of this date, to see how the learned D.D.'s of New York city succeeded yesterday in proving and protecting their various creeds from the same Bible. In reading over the several sermons preached by different D. D.'s, some at least attracted my attention. I give you a few as reported.

The first that I shall notice was preached in the (so-called) Church of our Saviour by the Rev. J. M. Pullman.

Here is what he says:

THE SERMON,

which was preached by the Rev. J. M. Pullman, was from John xx. 29. He said that the subject of the resurrection of the human body was one that had been discussed for ages, and yet it is one upon which comparatively few persons were agreed. It was necessary in discussing this question that we should lay aside every particle of prejudice and superstition, and talk upon the subject quietly and dispassionately. You must remember that the event which transpired 1800 years ago, and which we are this day celebrating, is the first intimation the world ever had of

A LIFE BEYOND THE GRAVE.

For ages and ages previous to that time men laid their friends and relatives always in the ground without even so much as a spark of hope that there was for them such a thing as a future existence. They knew that death was something that was inevitable; that when it stretched out its brawny hand and beckoned them away the demand was inexorable; and they also believed that once dead that was the last of them. They did not dream of a resurrection. It is a very common thing to hear persons say that happy, indeed, must have been the disciples of Christ—those who were near Him and could hear the words flow from His blessed lips; for doubts to them upon the

SUBJECT OF A FUTURE EXISTENCE

must have been impossible. But he would assure his hearers that we of the present day have equally strong proofs of a future existence as did any of those who lived in Christ's time and heard the Gospel preached by His own mouth. He believed in the resurrection of Christ, because it seemed to him quite fitting that God should sometimes make manifest to His children that there was such a thing as a future existence. The proof that man survives the grave is twofold, and twofold only. We find it in the resurrection of Christ and in the promises of God. The speaker concluded his remarks by reviewing at considerable length the argument of infidels, after which the choir sung—

All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of all.

How strange that for 4,000 years God had been holding intercourse with men and had revealed to them the destiny of people, nations, and even the world itself, and yet, in all this time, had never revealed to his holy prophets, and those that He loved so well, that they had immortal souls and were destined to a future life, and that eternal, at all events. The much learned D. D. says, If Christ had not risen there would have been no future life for any one. Now, I ask, What would have become of the thousands and thousands of souls that had died before? And tell me, ye learned ones, where were their immortal souls from the time that their bodies died, and Christ's resurrection? for, according to the learned D. D., there was no future life until Christ's resurrection, so that those immortal souls must have been dead up to the time that Christ arose. Strange, is it not, that Abel's "immortal soul," "never-dying spirit," etc., must have been without any future life for nearly 4,000 years, waiting for Christ to come from the dead that it might have a future life! What will not men do to bolster up a bad theory?

Let us now look and see what the Rev. O. B. Frothingham, another of the great D. D.'s, has to say. Here you have it:

LYRIC HALL SERVICES.

Service was held in this edifice yesterday morning, when the Rev. O. B. Frothingham held forth to a goodly throng of his disciples. The preacher said that this was Resurrection Day, the spring-tide of the Christian as well as the spring-tide of the husbandman. Resurrection was supposed to give personal immortality in another state of existence. This was the best religion, for the Jews were always hoping for the new heaven to come on the earth. Nearly all classes hoped for a better state of things in the future in all circles and in all things. Man, when actuated by feelings which militate against the world, is on the road to immortality, and his resurrection is in one sense accomplished. Some men—nay, almost all men—hold selfish views in relation to immortality and resurrection, as if it was their inalienable right and they had a right to go there, and that they would go there no matter what was their condition and state in life. It was only the other day that a poor wretch, imbrued in the blood of one of his fellow men, who regarded not life, and who shot another poor man with no more compunction than he would have shot a deer, went out to be executed, and as he went by the cells he shook hands with another, and they both said they would rest in the bosom of their God. Think not of the caricature of this, but of the blasphemy.

IMMORTALITY WAS TAKEN FOR GRANTED

by man, whether he was prepared for it or not. He did not believe in bodily resurrection, in the orthodox sense, but he believed in their bodies being transfigured. Man was not the elevated and pure being which his Creator intended he should be, but he followed the bent of his inclinations and wandered on blindly, hoping for the Divine teaching and for immortality. The gods mostly worshipped were the gods of fashion, drink and debauchery.

What a beautiful sentiment coming from one called to preach the glorious Gospel! He commences by a supposition of a resurrection, by which man gains immortality in another state, and calls this the best religion. Why? Because the Jews were always hoping for the new heaven to come on the earth! But look a little further: he says, Personal immortality in another state depends on a resurrection from the dead, and then adds, "Man when actuated by feelings which militate against the world is on the road to immortality, and his resurrection is accomplished." Now, let me ask, Is there a man or woman in the world that loves God and honors his dear Son (our LIFE-GIVER) but what, at times, has feelings that militate against the world? Taking it for granted that there is none, then, according to his preaching, all of God's dear children have had a resurrection, and, as a consequence, are immortal! Such being the case, they cannot die any more, but are equal to the angels of God in heaven! Wonder what Paul would think of this doctrine of the 19th century! I tell you, the teachings of Christ and his apostles sink into nothingness alongside of the D. D.'s of this age.

Once more. This D. D. says, he does not believe in a bodily resurrection. Well, let me ask what is to be resurrected? If not the body, then it must be the soul; and if it is the soul, then that soul must have died in order to obtain a resurrection. But the soul cannot die, he says; so that cannot have a resurrection. The body is not to be resurrected. Please Mr. D. D. tell me what is to have a resurrection at the last day? "Consistency thou art a jewel."

But here comes the crowning discourse of all, and puts the finish on the dogma of immortal soulism:

FIRST COMMUNION SERVICES AND SERMON BY REV. DR. VERREN ON BAPTISM.

One of the most cosey and attractive churches in this city, as far as the interior is concerned, is the French Protestant Church of the Holy Ghost, or Eglise du St. Esprit. But, unfortunately, its regular congregation is exceedingly small, and the number of persons present on Sundays does not, as a rule, average over one hundred.

THE SERVICES

yesterday were of the usual order, with the exception of the ceremony of the "first communion" of some sixteen young ladies, who were all attired in white. The sermon was preached by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Verren. He spoke of "Baptism," and took occasion, in dilating upon the efficacy and great grace derived from it by all to whom it had been administered, to exhort the young catechumens present never to sully their baptismal robes by aught that could give offence to God. Baptism, he said, was an all-essential thing, in fact

INDISPENSABLE TO SALVATION,

for without it, he contended, no soul could enter heaven. There was, it was true, no particular virtue in the water which was used in the administration of the sacrament. It was only a visible sign, a symbol, and nothing more. Baptism was the regenerator by which the soul, burdened with original sin, is made, as it were, into a new being, and rendered beautiful and attractive in the sight of Almighty God. It seemed, indeed, a hard theory, or rather belief, that little children who died before being baptised should be deprived of the delights of heaven. They were not responsible for coming into the world in a state of original sin; but it was contended that they did

NOT GO TO HEAVEN,

and the charitable belief of some Christians was that their souls went to a place which was neither heaven nor hell—a sort of middle place, partaking neither of the exceeding happiness of the one nor the terrible torments of the other. What an inestimable blessing it was, therefore, for those who had been so fortunate as to have been born within the pale of Christianity, and to have been ushered into all its graces by means of baptism! The parents of the young ladies and gentlemen present, who were about to partake of the communion for the first time, no doubt now looked back with joy and gratitude to God to the time when their little ones received baptism, and thus took the first step into Christianity, which made them prepared to follow its teachings with unction, and observe its holy laws with reverence and awe. They themselves could now appreciate how much they had been favored, how good God had been to them, and what a terrible thing it would have been had they

DIED WHILE YOUNG,

before they had been baptised. The vows made at baptism by the sponsors were not mere formalities, and it was the child's bounden duty, when it had come to the age of reason, to make those vows good, to fulfil to the best of his power, with the grace of Christ, all that his sponsors had promised when he was unable to speak, he should do. These vows the young ladies and gentlemen had renewed, and by them they had determined to fight the good fight of the Lord through life, and never to falter by the wayside or turn back from the narrow path, which is a hard one, but the only one which leads to salvation.

The pastor then, after an earnest exhortation to the catechumens, administered the communion.

Now, Br. Storrs, I am free to acknowledge that I am lost in wonder and astonishment at this Christian "Divine," if such he is. Only think, Christ ignored, water substituted! No more use for a hell of endless torment; be baptised and go to heaven! But, alas! some little children have died before they received the saving ordinance; they could not go to heaven! God is too good to send them to eternal torment, and as there are but two places in the future, heaven and hell, and they go to neither, tell me what has become of these immortal souls? But, says the D. D. "Some suppose that there is a middle place for them where there is no happiness, no torment!" Give us one sentence, one verse from God's holy word to confirm the supposition, if you can. O how different this teaching from the teachings of Christ. Is it any wonder that men reject Christianity, and become infidel in sentiment, when such trash as this is promulgated from the so-called sacred desk, by the professed ministers of Christ?

May we not ask in all sincerity the blessed Saviour, our LIFE-GIVER, to give unto them his Holy Spirit to open the eyes of their understanding, that they may behold Christ as the author and giver of eternal life, and the resurrection, the door that opens that eternal life to all believers; and that he would seal this truth upon their hearts, that if they reject Christ they shall not see life, but shall remain in the congregation of the dead?

Yours, in hope of a future life when Christ comes.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 18, 1870.

Christ's Coming: A Caution.

WHAT an inestimable treasure is the Bible! It is God's word, given by inspiration of His Spirit, and is designed to make us wise unto salvation. It reveals the most valuable truths. It narrates the most astonishing facts. It contains the most encouraging promises. It imparts the most excellent counsel. It gives the most salutary warnings. In short, all that pertains to life and godliness is found here. No one ever made a greater mistake than to think he could do without the Bible; and yet many neglect the Bible, and trust to their own understanding. Human reason, without revelation, is an unlighted taper. Man by wisdom knows not God.

As a general thing man's wisdom is opposed to Divine revelation, both in respect to the past and the future. Man's wisdom rejects the Bible account of creation, of the introduction of moral evil, of the deluge, and other events that are past. And, travelling into the future, blindly discards the light of prophecy and builds up a theory of its own.

One of the doctrines which has met with the most virulent opposition from the worldly wise, that has been most ridiculed by the skeptical, and treated with the greatest distrust and indifference by a secularized church, is the second advent and personal reign of Christ on earth; the believers in which are called Millenarians. And there is no other subject of prophecy about which we are more frequently cautioned in the word of God.

Paul, in Heb. x. 35–37, says, "cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." The Old Testament Scriptures show that there were to be two comings of the promised One. The first to suffer, the second to reign. The Scriptures relating to the first describe his birth, his humble condition, his rejection by Israel, his sufferings, his death, his resurrection and his ascension again to the right hand of God. These have been fulfilled. Their fulfilment is recorded in the New Testament. Those which relate to his second advent describe him as coming in the clouds of heaven, as appearing in glory, as attended by His saints and angels, as overcoming the powers of darkness, as taking the kingdom, sitting upon the throne of David, reigning over the house of Jacob, as worshipped by the nations, as subduing all things to His government, and reigning forever. These have not been fulfilled. They await their accomplishment in the future ages. The New Testament Scriptures speak of the second coming of the same Jesus, in whom was fulfilled the Old Testament Scriptures relating to the first advent, and speak of His coming again in terms similar to those of the Old Testament which relate to this event. It is also evident from their testimony that the Christians of the apostolic times looked for and anxiously desired the second coming of Jesus Christ; that they were taught to do so by the apostles themselves; that they were taught to do so as if the event were nigh at hand. They were told that yet a little while and He that shall come, will come and will not tarry. They were exhorted to sobriety and prayer, because the end of all things was at hand. To let their moderation be known to all men, for the Lord was at hand. To avoid avariciousness and worldlymindedness, because the Judge was at the door. To wait for the Son of God from heaven; and to be looking for and hastening unto the coming and appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This was set forth as the object of hope, because then the dead in Christ shall rise, and the living believers be changed, and their bodies being fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, they shall be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air. Then they shall be confirmed in holiness before God, and made kings and priests, be rewarded with eternal glory and reign with Christ. And they were admonished not to lose sight of this hope, nor to part with it because there might be some delay in its realization. There was danger here; but they were forewarned; and under all circumstances, and at all times, they had only to attend to the warning. The delay of Christ's coming might otherwise occasion presumption, impatience, or despair.

Presumption is to believe without evidence or authority; to affirm without proof. One form of presumption, common among professing Christians and expounders of the word of God, is to apply the Scriptures which speak of Christ's coming to other events. This is done by a method of exegesis termed the allegorical and spiritualizing, introduced by Origen in the third century, along with his modification of the Platonic theory, which he thereby grafted into Christianity. Nothing has been more pernicious in its effects upon the faith and practice of the churches. It did not take away the Bible itself, but it perverted its meaning and destroyed confidence in its simple verity. It imposed strange meanings upon its predictions, and so substituted error in place of truth. It brought on the dark ages and shut up the Bible from the people.

The Reformation gave us the Bible again; but it failed efficiently to rectify the disorder of a false exegesis; and the ancient doctrines of the church find a hard struggle to gain a foothold. One reason is, that errors have been stereotyped in creeds, and invested by false authority with power over the faith of the people. Still some progress has been made, and many have received the testimony of Christ's second coming and are looking for His appearing. And I affectionately warn such against the following presumptions:

1. In applying the coming of Christ to the destruction of Jerusalem. Thus Matt. xxiv. 29–35, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." It is said by some that the event here predicted was the destruction of Jerusalem, and that the judgments then inflicted upon the Jews was a providential coming of Christ. And verse 34: "This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled," is supposed to require such an interpretation. But this verse properly rendered requires no such wresting of the meaning. Jesus was speaking of a series of events then about to commence and extending to His second coming, and says, "This generation shall not pass till all these things—this course of events—shall begin to be." And so during the lifetime of some then living the beginning took place in the destruction of Jerusalem predicted in verses 15–22. But that was only a beginning, to be followed by a long tribulation to the Jews, running parallel with the times of the Gentiles, as we find by Luke xxi. 24, "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," literally, completed. The times of the Gentiles is the gospel dispensation during which God is visiting them to take out of the Gentiles a people for His name. And during all this time the tribulation of the Jews is to continue. Hence the tribulation still continues. And the events predicted in Matt. xxiv. 29, 30, do not take place until that tribulation comes to an end. The judgments which came upon the Jews in the destruction of Jerusalem, must have been a part of the tribulation spoken of; and if that is called a providential coming of Christ, then this coming was not after the tribulation, but was the tribulation itself: and this proves the fallacy of the exegesis. But this tribulation must end, and the end is nigh. Be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer.

2. In applying the coming of Christ to death. Thus Matt. xxiv. 44: "Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." And 1 Thes. v. 23: "And the very God of peace sanctify you, wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," have been so applied. The first of these passages is found in immediate connection with the coming of the Son of man already noticed, and which is to be after the tribulation of the Jews comes to an end, and admonishes us to be constantly prepared for that event, forasmuch as the time of it is not revealed. An admonition suited to all Christians in every age and place. The second passage is a prayer for the entire sanctification of believers, and their preservation unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. There is nothing in it to justify its application to death. The language of both passages is plain and simple. There is no ambiguity in the terms; no figure of speech; and by grammatical rules they can be understood only in the literal import. The spiritualistic sense is a perversion of their meaning.

3. In applying the second coming of Christ to the influences of the Spirit, as 2 Thess. ii. 8, "And then shall that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of His coming;" and Heb. ix. 27, 28, "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation." But there is no reason why we should understand the coming of Christ otherwise than of His second personal coming in either of these passages. The first relates to the consumption and destruction of the wicked one who has usurped the rights and prerogatives of God; and the consumption has been going on ever since the Reformation; but the destruction can be effected only by the second coming of Christ in power and great glory. The second is an argument drawn from the order of sacrifice on the day of atonement, that Christ our high priest did first suffer, then enter the holiest of all, and shall come again the second time to save His people. The appointment of men once to die, relates to the high priests who first offered sacrifice, and then, with the blood signifying a sacrificial death entered the most holy place, to make atonement for the people, and afterward returned and pronounced the judgment of remission on the waiting congregation of Israel. So Christ our high priest was once offered, and with His own blood entered the holiest of all in the heavens, to make atonement for us, and to them that look for Him and wait for Him from heaven, shall He appear the second time, no more to offer sacrifice for sin, but to redeem and glorify His saints. It is a presumption of a very serious character to change the meaning of God's word. Many perhaps do it ignorantly in unbelief, who otherwise have a high regard for the truth. But some wrest the Scriptures to their destruction.

4. Scoffers presume to scout the doctrine of Christ's second coming altogether, saying "Where is the promise of His coming; for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Pet. iii. 3–9. They first assume that God has never in the past interposed in human affairs, and thence presume that he never will. This is the presumption of infidelity.

Impatience is inability to suffer delay. Jesus speaks of such in Matt. xxiv. 48–51, "But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth His coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the Lord of that servant shall come in a day, when he looketh not for Him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Then be not impatient, nor weary of waiting. God is long suffering toward a wicked world for the salvation of His elect, people. And we have need of patience for the perfection of our Christian character, that whether we wake or sleep we may be accepted of Him. Patient waiting must accompany hopeful looking in all who steadfastly believe in the promise of His coming. Abraham believed in the promised inheritance of the land of Canaan, and he looked for a city which hath foundations whose maker and builder is God, and he waited patiently, and died waiting, not having received it, and he waits for it still. And all the dead in Christ died waiting, and still wait the appointed time, till their change shall come. We belong to the waiting Church if we have the faith of Abraham.

Despair is loss of confidence, hopelessness, impatience pushed to purpose. It is a total rejection of the promise on account of the delay of fulfilment. Sometimes it sinks the soul into utter despondency; but more frequently turns the affections to the world, and seeks to compensate the loss of hope in a future life by making the most of the present in laying up treasures on earth; or indulging in its pleasures, or pursuing its honors. Like Esau, who sold his birthright to the promised inheritance for a mess of pottage, many in despair cast away their confidence in God, and only wake up to a sense of their loss when it is too late to repair it.

Let us, then, fortify our minds against all these evil tendencies, by considering the certainty of the event we look for. Christ will come again the second time. This is one of the most positive declarations of the Scriptures, and frequently reiterated. We are assured over and over again that He will come at the appointed time. A time fixed in the purpose of God, though not revealed to us. A time which is drawing nearer every day, and is coming on an unbelieving world, and a secularized Church as a thief in the night. A time which will not be postponed. God has fixed it in accordance with his unerring foreknowledge, and nothing unforeseen can occur to cause him to change it. Then, again, God is faithful to his promises, and his word shall not fail of fulfilment, when the time for fulfilment comes. It may come soon. The long expected event may be just ready to burst in all the suddenness of an electric flash upon the world. Let us be prepared for it; that it may not take us unawares. "Let us hold fast the profession of our hope without wavering; for He is faithful that promised; and let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." J. G. W.

—Prophetic Times.

The Poor Blind Man.

THERE is a poor blind man in London who loves his Saviour very much, and he is very anxious to do all he can to win others to love him. So he goes out into some of the crowded by-ways and alleys of this great city, and reads aloud from his Bible, with its raised letters. Many crowd around him to listen, and he always carries with him a supply of Bibles and Testaments for sale. In this way he goes from place to place, and has sold a large number of copies of God's blessed book. Last Good Friday he went into the country and began to read aloud. Some little girls came around him. One of them listened most attentively. Her companions urged her to come away, but she said, "No; I like this." They tried to persuade her to buy some oranges at a stall close by; but she said, "No; I like this reading much better than oranges." When the man had finished reading, she bought a little copy of one of the Gospels for herself, and also one for each of her companions.

Now, why do you think I told you this? I think this little girl teaches us all a lesson. She said, "I like this better than oranges;" but she did not stop there. She proved that she really meant what she said by what she did. We may say we love Jesus; but do we love him better than our own pleasures? If we do, let us prove it by thinking at once, "What can I do for Him? What can I do to spread the knowledge of him and his name?"—English Magazine.

IT is an easy matter to sit at ease, and let the ship go with the wind and tide to leeward, but hard to suffer the fate that awaits her on the lee-shore. So it is an easy matter to float with the multitude down the broad road to ruin; but a fearful thing to fall into the hands of a living God.

THE Christian's privilege is the prayer of the apostle: "That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."

From Wm. C. Metcalf.

Br. Storrs: Travelling in the State of Vt. last week, as I was passing through Brandon, an incident occurred which I thought might be interesting to you. A gentleman came into the car and, seating himself near me, was soon engaged in earnest conversation on the training and education of the young, and kindred topics. It was evident he was possessed of a mind of more than ordinary culture and ability. I had the pleasure of making his acquaintance, and, before we reached Burlington, learned that he was a physician in Brandon, a man of good practical knowledge of men and things, of an investigating turn of mind, but unhappily an unbeliever in the Scriptures as a divine revelation; induced, I think, by the gross perversion of their doctrines, as now held and taught by the so-called evangelical church.

In our short discussion, of which I can give but a meagre outline, he stated that he could not believe in the divine origin of the Bible, and thought that if this were destroyed another, its equal, could be made by man. He objected, that it was unreasonable to suppose that God made man holy, then subjected him, in his weakness and inexperience, to the temptations of the devil, knowing he would surely fall, and then punishing him eternally for his sin. I took the ground, that the truths of the Bible were divine, inspired, and our only guide, while I disclaimed many of the popular and commonly received dogmas of the church: that "God is love," and that love controlled all his dealings with the children of men. I admitted the force of his objections as against the orthodox view, but that they were of no force as against the views I held. Man in his nature was mortal, though immortality, as the gift of God through Christ, was attainable. The Creator in making man designed his happiness—made him not holy, but good—having no moral character, but placed in circumstances to develop one by testing his obedience. I claimed that this test was the most simple that could be devised, whether, by obedience, he would develop a character in harmony with his Maker, and live forever, or, by disobedience, fail, and incur the penalty—death. The first Adam failed in the trial and died; and all his posterity, having no higher life than their head, inherit death, and, were there no remedial agency, the whole race must have perished. But just here the gospel provides a remedy. Christ comes and brings life and immortality to light. "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." I stated that by the phrase "in Christ" was meant such a union with Him by faith that he becomes a new creature and shall be raised up at the last day, quickened by the same Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead. I asked him how those not "in Christ" could live again? What power could raise them?

Said he, This is something I have never thought or heard of before. Where did you get it? I told him there were a few good men who had been, for several years, investigating those truths and rejoicing in their light. "What do you call yourselves?" I answered, We have no church organizations—are sometimes called "Life Believers;" and if he would read, I would be happy to furnish him with such publications as would place the whole subject clearly before his mind.

This gentleman reminded me very forcibly of our dear Br. Thorne before the truth of God had impressed his heart, and could but express, to him, the hope that with the blessing of God, the mists of unbelief would be removed from his mind; divine truth and light and love fill his heart, and he also be led, not only to rejoice in Him, but be the means of enlightening others. I have sent him the "Constitution of Man," "Defence of the Bible," "Man's Nature and Destiny," "The Atonement," "Living Soul," "God is Love," "Regeneration," and "Devil, Satan, and Demons." I wanted also to send him the last two copies of the Herald, but don't feel as though I could part with them. I wish you would send him half a dozen copies beginning April 6. Yours, in hope.

Holden, Mass., April 18, 1870.

Eld. Wm. Brayton, Hudson, Iowa, writes: I have just closed a debate, held in Waterloo, with the Pastor of the Free-Will Baptist church there, on the destiny of the wicked. There was much excitement, and we hope some good done. One man said to us, he was satisfied there is no life out of Christ. The leading members of the sects were much displeased with the Baptist for having a debate in the city. I heard one of the clergy say, "I wonder if we have got George Storrs here, in this city?" We have done all that we expected to do; that is, to stir up the minds of the people by agitating the subject. Many were out to hear that never had heard any thing on the Life question before. We leave our effort in the hands of God; praying for his blessing to rest on the truth. I am striving for the faith.

Z. Adams, Greenwich, N. Y., writes: I embraced the Life views about twenty years ago. When I came out it caused a stir. They thought I was crazy; but there has been a steady advance, and now quite a number are favorable to the views. I will try to get a number of subscribers soon; and will send for a lot of the Campaign Documents in a few days.

F. Winans, Chicago, Ill., writes: Some more are coming into the truth. Two are going to send for the paper soon. We are more opposed by professed Adventists than by any other people; but we are quiet and minding our own business and leaving the consequences with the Lord. Quite a number have received the Life views.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 27, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

No Paper Next Week.

The first week in May, is one of our vacant weeks, in which we issue no paper; therefore do not look for it next week. We give "48 numbers" for a volume. Twenty-nine have now been issued on this volume, and nineteen remain to complete it. How fast the weeks fly away! Yet, we are sorry to say, quite a number of our subscribers have, as yet, paid nothing on this volume. Knowing the difficulty of raising money the past eight months, we have continued to send the paper to these delinquent ones. It has now become a serious question whether we can be justified in expending money to continue the paper to such any longer; and they must not be surprised if it is discontinued from this date; but beg of them to see that we are not compelled to that course. Please remember that it costs money to furnish the paper to you, and that justice calls for a little aid from you who receive it.

In addition to the above named delinquents, there is quite a number who have paid only one dollar on the present volume, and have now overrun the first half of the year five numbers. Do such intend we shall discontinue their papers? We do not like to part with any of you; so please send another dollar to help on the work.

If, in the discontinuances, any think themselves wronged, please let us know, and we shall cheerfully rectify any mistakes.

Those who have not yet redeemed their pledges will oblige us by doing so as early as convenient.

City Subscribers who change their residences the first of May, should furnish us immediately, with their new location, otherwise, they will lose one or more of their papers, as we cannot furnish them a second copy. Do not fail to attend to this matter at once.

"Graduates to the Seminary Above."

"Zion's Herald," speaking of two eminent men of the Methodist E. Church who have died in the past few weeks, viz., "Bishop Kingsley and Dr. McClintock," says they were both present a year ago, at the anniversary of the Drew Theological Seminary. After relating something of "the delightful conversations in the parlor," it continues thus:

> Neither dreamed that that would be their last meeting on earth, that ere a year had rolled by, they would be holding higher converse, on like exalted themes, by the banks of the river of life, under the trees of the paradise of God. Had they known it, it is doubtful if their themes would have changed.

So it seems their "conversations" were such as they "would have" been, if "they had known" they would "be holding higher converse . . . under the trees of the paradise of God" before a "year had rolled by." It seems "Neither dreamed" of such an event. It must indeed have been a dream if either of them did think of such an event; for such ideas are nothing more than dreams, and have no foundation in reality. Such dreams ignore the resurrection of the dead, and turn the teaching of Christ and his Apostles into "foolishness" on that subject; and we might well ask with Tyndal, when disputing with the Papists, "If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? and then what cause of the resurrection?"

Truly these teachers of heavenly glory by a death translation to heaven have corrupted "the word of God by their traditions," and not only made void the resurrection of the dead, but have destroyed the necessity of Christ's personal return from heaven to raise His saints: and, in the language of Tyndal in reply to Thomas Moore on this subject, we say with him, "Christ and his Apostles taught no other, but warned to look for Christ's coming again; because ye believe it will never be, therefore have ye feigned that other merchandise" of the translation "of souls to heaven" at death.

But a little further on in its remarks, "Zion's Herald" says of Bishop Kingsley and Dr. McClintook,

> No one dreamed that on the next anniversary of that Seminary, both of these chief participants in its exercises would have graduated to the seminary above.

If any one had "dreamed" of such an event, it would have been but a dream; and the whole system of theology which "graduates to the seminary above," at death, is but a "vain dream" of men who have substituted the "last enemy—death" for Christ and the resurrection "at the last day." We desire most earnestly that these living theologians, before they get into "sheol," where "there is no work, nor knowledge," (Eccl. ix. 10), may graduate out of "the traditions of men," into "the seminary" of Christ and his Apostles, and learn that "God so loved world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have everlasting life;" and that Christ saith, "This is the will of Him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him hath everlasting life, and I will raise him" (that man) "up at the last day:" and Paul tells us when that day is, viz., "At the last trump;" and when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the trump of God:" then "the dead in Christ shall rise." See 1 Corth. xv. and 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17.

What Does it Mean?

"The Advance" of April 14 has an article, Editorial, on "Death and Probation," in which "Objections to the orthodox doctrine that probation is limited to the present life" are considered and ably treated. In speaking of "the steady tendency throughout life to become inveterate for good or for evil," "The Advance" speaks as follows:

> It is not that freedom is lost or that any radical change occurs in human nature; but that it is a characteristic of our very nature to become permanently holy or unholy; the will, in its habitual action, acquiring fixedness in its supreme choice. If it had not this property, there would be little certainty of good in the future, even in heaven. Angels and saints might all apostatize in ages to come. The same characteristic of will which leads it forever to deepen its chosen channel, is the basis of an endlessly expanding eternal heaven as well as of a comparatively limited eternal hell.

The general sentiments in regard to the will "acquiring fixedness in its supreme choice," we agree with. But the last expression about "a comparatively limited eternal hell" we do not understand, and ask, What does it mean? How can an "eternal hell" be even "comparatively limited?" Is orthodoxy about to modify the duration of its hell, so as to make it "comparatively" comfortable? If so, we will help it to one text to aid it in its work, viz: Ezek. xxxii. The prophet is speaking of various nations and individuals which have "gone down into hell with their weapons of war; and have laid their swords under their heads," etc., says, "Pharaoh shall see them, and shall be comforted over all his multitude, even Pharaoh and all his army slain by the sword, saith the Lord God."—Verse 31.

This seems to be "a comparatively limited hell," if not an "eternal" one. Well, we are glad to find our orthodox brethren are disposed to "limit" something about their "hell;" it is one step toward the discovery that there is some "comfort" in hell, seeing old "Pharaoh shall . . . be comforted" there, and so others may be, and, being "comparatively limited," it may yet turn up that the orthodox hell has ceased to be; for that allows of no "comfort."

Further on, in its article, "The Advance," in speaking of Paul's "discussion of the judgment," etc., says,

> That the result contemplated by him is final and not temporary, appears from his describing it as "eternal life" to the righteous, and as "perishing" on the part of the wicked.

Thus our orthodox brother sets the Bible reward and punishment before us in Bible language. Only let the words have their natural and legitimate sense—and who has any right to say they shall not have it?—and the theological hell has found its "eternal" grave, and can never have a resurrection.

Our friend—"The Advauce"—goes on to say,

> In Galatians, this life still is held up as determining the endless future: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption, (phthoran, destruction); but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

Good, again. "Destruction" is what the wicked reap: not life under any circumstances, or in any condition—"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. v. 23. Death's "eternal" dominion is the harvest they reap; it is not even "comparatively limited:" it is unqualifiedly "eternal"—the fruit of their sowing "to the flesh"—a corruptible nature—and resisting and quenching the Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, and which only can quicken any of the dead into life; and because they are "sensual, having not the Spirit," they "reap corruption"—or, are "utterly destroyed from among the people;" or, shall be "utterly exterminated."—See Dr. Bloomfield's Note on Acts iii. 20, as edited by Prof. Stuart.

Truth will lose nothing by the discussion now going on in the land. Old preconceived notions and prejudices die hard; but die they will in the struggle that has been begun to defend and clear the character of the Divine government of our world from the horrid and blasphemous imputations with which it has so long been covered by mistaken, but many good men. Their sense of right and wrong will be so purified, we trust, by the love and loveliness of God and His administrations, that their old theories will be given "to the moles and the bats," and they stand up with unutterable joy, praising God and the Lamb that they are made free from the harlotism of Rome and Paganism. May the God of love, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Life-giver, hasten the deliverance.

The "American Wesleyan."

A friend has sent us a copy of the above-named paper, for April 13, containing a sermon on the "Immortality of the Soul," to which he calls our attention. It is made up of stale assertions and assumptions, with appeals to Webster's Dictionary; and may be truly characterized as the weakest attempt we ever read to prove "Ye shall not surely die." We do not deem it worth the time it takes to read it. We give our readers one of the arguments for a sample. The "Rev." author quotes Rev. xx. 14, "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death," and says, "Eternal death, then, is endless suffering." Is not that convincing logic? "Death and hell," because their destruction is symbolized by being "cast into the lake of fire," etc., are to have "endless suffering." May the author of this sermon be enabled to get off the swaddling clothes which he has borrowed from Popish Bulls and heathen superstitions.

Zion's Herald on the Pope's Infallibility.

The above paper, of last week, speaks as follows:

> The Pope Infallible.—The Council has decreed the infallibility of the Pope. It has taken more than a thousand years to complete the prophecy of Paul—"so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, and sheweth himself that he is God." The mystery is working. God lets it. Soon may He destroy it with the brightness of His coming. An idolatry worse than China's is being set up in America; a contest worse than any we have seen may be breaking upon us. Are we getting ready for that foe and fight? Christ is dethroned in His professed Church by a man who worships a woman. Who is on the Lord's side?

That language is refreshing; it has a good deal of the gospel in it. That "woman worshipper" was the first to "decree the soul is immortal," and prohibited any one from teaching otherwise; and Protestants, as a body, have never dared question his "infallibility" in that respect. If they have not "worshipped a woman" they have chimed in with "a man who worships" one, by accepting his decree that "the soul is immortal." It is this doctrine which is the life-blood of Papacy; by this doctrine they have kept alive their purgatory, and their praying to and for the dead, and made merchandise of their fancy souls; and Protestants have lost the main power God gave them the offer of, by which to uproot this antichrist and re-instate the true Christ as "the Resurrection and the Life." But, alas, instead of using that power they have strengthened the "woman worshippers" in their idolatry, by teaching the survivance of a soul in life, when the person is dead, either in heaven or hell, abandoning the most merciful part of the papal religion, that of a way of escape, by means of a purgatory after death, to some souls who have departed into sheol in their sins.

We are glad our orthodox friends begin to see the claim of Papacy to infallibility is a "sitting in the temple of God, showing" itself "that" it "is God." Truly, "The mystery is working," and the chief engine of its power is and ever has been the doctrine of inherent immortality: that is what gives it its power; and yet Protestants help to add force to that engine, by claiming as strongly, and professing as much infallibility on this question as he who "worships a woman." We join heartily with "Zion's Herald" in asking, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Whoever is, or wishes to be, let them use the axe of truth to cut down this poisonous tree of inherent immortality. With the death of that tree, dies Papacy and all its abominations; and all men will see that going to heaven, hell, or purgatory, as disembodied entities, is a fable which has corrupted the truth of God and brought on the fulfilment of "the prophecy of Paul," in the worship of men and "a woman," and dead and senseless ones at that. They will see that the immortal-soul doctrine has made void the testimony of Christ and his Apostles concerning "the resurrection of the dead" in order to a life after death; a life which is the gift of God to those who believe in Him who is "the resurrection and the life," and the only Life-giver for dying men that God has ever provided.

Whether this work will be accomplished before "the brightness of His coming" we cannot say; but we join emphatically with our brother of "Zion's Herald," in saying, "Soon may He destroy it with the brightness of His coming." We are glad to hear such a longing for our Lord's appearing, presuming our brother means something more than His "coming at death;" for that would not answer the prophetic idea of coming "with power and great glory" of "this same Jesus that is taken up from you into heaven," who "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." Christ has long been "dethroned," as the Life-giver, by the immortal-soul theory, "in His professed church;" and we hope He may soon be reinstated, to the glory of God the Father, and the honor of His truth.

Is Eld. Miles Grant a Convert?

In the "World's Crisis," for April 20, we find in an editorial item the following:

"The punishment of the wicked is eternal death in hell, or hades, not eternal life in misery."

That will do, Br. Grant, if you mean what you say; for, if the wicked have "eternal death in hades," then they never will and never can have a revival into life. Hades is where the wicked dead are now. Is Br. Grant converted to the blessed truth of "No life, future or eternal, out of Christ?" It would seem so. We welcome him to the trials and joys of such a faith. It has "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The doctrines of "eternal life in misery" and a "future life in misery" are twins, and live or die together. Kill one and you kill the other. One life blood sustains them both.

"A Ministerial Letter" Again.

Friend Storrs: A neighbor has called my attention to my letter which you published requesting you to discontinue the "Herald of Life."

As you published that without my request, I will thank you to publish this, if agreeable, in reply to some of your remarks.

Was the article entitled "A Ministerial Letter" out of contempt, or from some high Christian motive? I gave you no means of knowing it was true.

[Note by Editor.—The direction for your paper has always been "Rev. Jacob Davis." That is all the "means" we had "of knowing" you to be of the "Ministerial" class.]

You claim me as your friend. I assent, for I intend to be friendly to every one, however strongly I may oppose their doctrines or practices. But your "Clerical friend" is in no need of sympathy; he simply asks for the truth, and thinks he has a right to that. It was not true that he was a subscriber.

But leaving those points, let me say, I always try to agree with all persons as far as possible; and when we differ I take the responsibility of my faith and acts, and in all charity ask them to do the same.

My "understanding" may be "too luminous" but I have never heard an Orthodox preach or teach eternal life out of Christ. Either speaking or writing they have invariably taught, "Life only in Christ." And further, all such preachers and authors teach the "Second Advent" just as clearly as the Adventists do. In all those points I agree with both, though it may be "something that seems paradoxical."

Our differences are not on the facts of our only hope of eternal life being in Christ, and the certainty of his second advent.

I have read the "Herald of Life," the works of Messrs. Halsted, Blain, Finley, Storrs, and others, and find no difficulty on those points of facts. But we do differ extremely on many other points of the greatest interest.

I have said, ever since I first heard Adventism, I do not know the time, but Christ's time is mine, whether to-day or thousands of years hence.

I say the same now of their "Life" doctrines, I do not so understand the Bible. I believe they are much more injuriously wrong than when they taught that every true Christian must believe that Christ would come in 1843, and afterward at the various other fixed dates, up to 1868; none of which were right.

But how can differences be wisely discussed without an agreement in the use of terms? Authors use the words, life, death, soul, spirit, destruction, immortality, etc., with greatly varying significations.

To illustrate, take the word immortality. Some think the Bible is full of assertions of the "immortality of the soul;" others are equally sure that the contrary doctrine is taught with absolute certainty.

This evidently arises from the different meanings attached to words. Each quotes a set of passages, draws his own inferences, and teaches those inferences as the word of God. But the truth is, the subject is not named in the Scriptures.

I have read works which attempted to prove the doctrine of immortality, and still more which claimed to demonstrate non-immortality; yet I have never found any thing approaching conclusive evidence in either.

Take, for instance, Dr. Finley's "Constitution of Man." His arguments are very confidently put; but from the Bible stand-point I have a great many more objections to them than there are pages in the book.

He makes non-"immortality triumphant." Whereas Dodds makes "Immortality triumphant," and each with equal inconclusiveness, if the word of God be taken as the guide.

The Herald is largely occupied with discussions of a similar class. And if I can understand the principles or doctrines, "For the assertion of which the Herald of Life is published," they are substantially the same as those taught by Messrs. Finley, Halsted, Thorne, etc. Am I right?

I agree with them in the facts already stated, and perhaps a few others; but to their general principles and their exposition of the Scriptures I strongly object. Take a single case.

They teach that the breath is the spirit. If so, God is only a breath; the Holy Spirit the same; and man is breath and "dust," or "slime," as the Douay version has it.

Therefore, as soon as the "dust" and breath are separated, man is extinct. Thus, not making "death an eternal sleep," for sleep invigorates, but an eternal annihilation of all unbelievers, and of all believers also, till the breath and dust are again united in the resurrection.

This is a specimen of the class of doctrines which I understand the Herald to teach, and which I do not believe the Bible sustains.

I believe in the divine goodness, that "God is love," just as fully as the strongest "Life believer," and could very easily turn against themselves all their taunts against the "orthodoxists," on account of the "eternal torment" doctrine. But what good can come of it? Nothing short of absolute universalism can remove the difficulties; and that only removes them on one side and increases them on the other.

Taking such views of the principles of the Herald of Life, I think its opposition to the Orthodox is injurious to all concerned, and strongly tends to hinder the conversion of men to Christ. But I hope the truth will triumph.

Fraternally yours,

Jacob Davis.

Florida, Mass., April 15, 1870.

Response to the Foregoing, by L. C. Thorne.

The author of the foregoing communication recently wrote to the Editor to have his paper stopped, and gave certain reasons for so doing. As the letter was not marked "private" the Editor published it, supposing that to be the author's desire. The item, as it appeared in the paper, was headed a "Ministerial Letter," and if the writer of it is not a minister the Editor is not rightly informed. The article was not thus "entitled" "out of contempt." It seems the Br. did not personally subscribe for the paper, somebody having done so for him and paid the subscription. Whether this was done by request of our friend or with his consent, we know not, but presume it was one or the other.

Br. D. says, he has "never heard an Orthodox preach or teach eternal life out of Christ. Either speaking or writing, they have invariably taught 'Life only in Christ.'" If he understands the full import of his remarks, and we must assume he does, we have only to say, he surprises us. We think he is the only man who so understands so-called Orthodox preachers and teachers. He, probably, in the above assertion, purposely overlooks the peculiar and, as we think, unwarrantable, because unbiblical, orthodox definition of the terms life and death.

"Our differences," he says, are not on the facts of our only hope of eternal life being in Christ," etc. This looks as if he had tried to so frame his expressions as to render it as difficult as possible to know just what he means. It is a fact that Orthodoxists, so termed, do not teach any such doctrine, literally, as future "Life only in Christ." He quotes the expression "Life only in Christ," well knowing what we mean by it, viz., that if mankind fail to form a living union with Christ by partaking of his grace and Spirit, and being led thereby, they go out of existence; and he also knows that the latter-day religionists generally hold that man has eternal life independent of Christ. They do, therefore differ from us on the fact of "our only hope of eternal life being in Christ," and for our Christian Br. to say, "in all those points I agree with both" is not, it seems to us, the utterance of something which "seems paradoxical," but of downright absurdity.

For the information of J. D. we will say, that all Adventists do not hold what he terms the "life doctrines;" that, except in 1843–'44, comparatively few have ever believed in definite time at all; and of those who have, only a moiety ever held faith in definite time to be essential to salvation. We make these observations because he evidently misapprehends the matter.

Our friend says, "Some think the Bible is full of assertions of the immortality of the soul: others are equally sure that the contrary doctrine is taught." He has here stated the fact that two opposing theories are held, and he then proceeds to inform us how it happens that people thus disagree. It "evidently arises," he says, "from the different meanings attached to the words. Each quote a set of passages, draws his own inferences, and teaches those inferences as the word of God." Now, mark: one insists that the Bible teaches the "immortality of the soul," while the other insists it does no such thing. Both these views, our friend says, are merely inferences taught in place of the word of God, or, in other words, are not sustained by the Scriptures; and with the very next breath, he asserts, "But the truth is, the subject" (immortality of the soul) "is not named in the Scriptures." What confusion! J. D. goes on to say, "I have read works which attempted to prove the doctrine of immortality, and still more which claimed to demonstrate non-immortality; yet I have never found any thing approaching conclusive evidence in either." Well, we fear he never will. Of all the books ever written on the subject, we know of none suited to his style of reasoning, if that displayed in the article under consideration is a fair sample of it. For maintaining that the Scriptures do not teach man's natural immortality, "Life believers" are one moment denounced as teachers of mere inferences instead of divine truth, and in the next moment it is truly said, that, so far from the doctrine being a Bible truth, "the subject is not named in the Scriptures." But we may have misapprehended our Br. somewhat respecting the points just considered. Extremely improbable though it seems, it is nevertheless possible that in the expression, "the subject is not named in the Scriptures," he may have reference to the whole subject, thus meaning that neither man's mortality nor immortality is "named in the Scriptures." We can hardly conceive how any advocate of inherent immortality, much less a professing Christian can assume such a position. Admit that the doctrine of natural immortality is not meant to be taught in the Bible, and such an interpretation of certain expressions found in that book at once become so inevitable as to establish the mortality of man's nature beyond the possibility of doubt, in any reasonable mind. It is, therefore, idle to talk about Scripture silence upon the subject. The subject of man's mortality is most directly, distinctly and clearly named and taught in the Bible, and that at the very outset. "Dust thou (the man) art, and unto dust shalt thou (the man) return." Many other passages are equally to the point, and comprehend the whole man. To say, then, that "the subject is not named in the Scriptures," is to deny the plainest declarations of God's word. It is to "make void" what God hath spoken; it is to "make the truth of none effect." What sort of a gospel would it be that proposed to save man from a condition not known by him nor made known to him? But we will not multiply words, for we cannot think J. D., nor any other follower of Christ, would thus deliberately throw away the Bible.

Our friend says, Dr. Finley "makes non-immortality triumphant" but with "inconclusiveness if the word of God be taken as the guide." Dr. F. does not, we feel free to affirm, make non-immortality triumphant, so far as God's people are concerned. Like the rest of us, he shows upon no less creditable authority than that of inspiration, that men are by nature wholly mortal, and if left to themselves will perish—go out of existence. He then shows that infinite love has provided a way of escape from the state to which their nature inevitably leads. The conditions of salvation are few and simple, and upon all who meet them will be conferred a future life by a resurrection from the dead. When that glorious event transpires "mortality will be swallowed up of life" to all subjects of the resurrection.

Our Br. is altogether wrong in asserting that we, any of us, "teach that the breath is the spirit." We do not teach any such doctrine, and we wonder that he has read to so little purpose. We would attempt to enlighten him on this point did we not feel that nothing we could put in so short a space would be sufficiently clear to satisfy his mind. We, however, very respectfully lay the charge right down at his own door by showing him that his so called orthodox friends have carved their immortal soul idol, out of the assumption that man's breath is his "spirit." Does he pronounce it false? We hope he will not fly away horror-stricken, till we have done. Let us go to the inspired account, and read how, "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man, (whom God had formed of the dust) became a living soul."—Gen. ii. 7. We believe this; believe it just as it reads, for to believe differently is to do violence to the most palpable laws of language; but orthodoxists dissent. They affirm that breath here is not breath, but soul, spirit—his immortal spirit. One of popular theology's most distinguished commentators (Dr. Adam Clarke), remarks respecting this passage, "of the soul it is said, God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." This passage is thought to be the Gibralter of immortal-soulism, and one writer says of it, "In the most distinct manner God shows us man is a compound being, having a soul and a body separately and distinctly created; the body out of the dust of the earth, the soul breathed immediately from God himself." Who now is it, that teaches the breath is the spirit? So J. D.'s whole brood of conclusions go home, and flock around his own household.

The remarkable statement, that Universalism removes "the difficulties" only to make matters more difficult, we pass by.

Let all lovers of truth who have prayed, and labored, and sacrificed, to build up "the faith once delivered to the saints" take courage, for this shaking among the dry bones of modern theology is a hopeful sign of the dawn of a brighter day. The smooth pebbles of truth fall like hail about our opponents, and they vainly seek all sorts of refuge. Many are openly accepting the truth, and the watchful observer finds great consolation in contemplating the progress of a silent but powerful working of truth among the various religious bodies, which will ere long burst into a splendor glorious to behold. Labor, watch, pray.

L. C. THORNE.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

"WATCH THAT" PEN.

THE April No. of "The Christian," published by Br. H. L. Hastings, contains an excellent article, headed "Watch that Tongue," which closes as follows: "That tongue shall sing God's praises forever in glory, or beg for a cooling drop of water in the devouring flame."

The author of the foregoing does not say, and, of course, does not mean to be understood as intimating that the wicked will suffer forever in flames, but we venture the opinion that ninety-nine out of every one hundred of his readers who do not happen to know his views upon that point will so construe the language. The expression "cooling drop" is so strongly suggestive of reference to a certain parable claimed by most, so-called, orthodox religionists as teaching eternal torments, that it is quite natural for such as know not H. L. H.'s belief respecting the destiny of the wicked to suppose he intends to endorse the popular interpretation of the parable. He says the destiny of "that tongue" is to "sing God's praises forever in glory," or to be tormented in "flames." As the blessedness, on the one hand, is spoken of as continuing "forever," the almost inevitable inference, in the absence of an unmistakable qualification to the contrary, is that the suffering is meant to be understood as also lasting forever. If our Br. and fellow-laborer is not willing to let the truth concerning man's nature and destiny shine through the columns of his paper, we at least hope he will not be by any means subjected to the great misfortune of seeming to teach what he does not believe on the subject. Brother, "Watch that" pen!

L. C. T.

"THE RESURRECTION OF THE UNJUST."

BY JACOB GRIM.

IN looking over J. H. Waggoner's book, there is one more point which may admit of a passing note; and it reminds us of Elihu's remarks, one of Job's comforters, "Great men are not always wise: neither do the aged understand judgment." But our friend jumps at conclusions before he has proved anything, just as Elihu did. He quotes from "Life from the Dead" as follows:

> Apart from Christ, when a man dies, he dies in his sins, and has lost his life never to find it again. [Life from the Dead, p. 33.] Thus the resurrection of the dead to life belongs to Christ and his body, the church—all true believers under whatever dispensation they may have lived; and from this revival into life, all others it seems to us, are absolutely excluded. [p. 35.] Life from the dead is a peculiarity of the gospel—a gospel benefit—and believers only live again. [p. 27.] But in commenting on Rev. xx. 5, he [Mr. Storrs] says, If the text were a genuine one, it would be easy to show that it may not embrace the ungodly at all. It might refer to the living again of the virtuous heathen, who had never heard of Christ.—[p. 70, 71.]

In commenting on these extracts, Mr. W. says:

> Dropping the paradoxical idea of the heathen who fear God and work righteousness! we notice that, according to "Life from the Dead," [1.] A resurrection is a peculiarity of the gospel, and of course is inadmissable outside the gospel. [2.] It belongs to the church—to believers in Christ only, and all others are absolutely excluded. But, [3.] The second resurrection may embrace a class who were not believers in Christ, who never heard of him. Peter's testimony in Acts clearly proves that the faithfully obedient in all nations—Jews and Gentiles—are accepted with God; but Cornelius had the gospel message sent to him to teach him what he ought to do. To refer to these facts and circumstances to prove the salvation of those who have no faith, is a manifest perversion of the Scriptures. That any one of Mr. Storrs' ability and power of discrimination should put forth sentiments so unscriptural and self-contradictory, is strong evidence of the weakness of the theory he advocates: [p. 19.] It is certainly no recommendation to the non-resurrection theory that its advocates have to invent another gospel to accommodate it. [p. 21.]

Great men are not always wise, for I find in the next sentence, W. says:

> I read that all the world stand condemned—"guilty before God," and that God "commandeth all men everywhere to repent," and that "without faith it is impossible to please God." Jesus also said, "No man cometh to the Father but by me." But in the above quotations there is a system of salvation taught which ignores these truths, and, this being the case, it is comparatively a small matter that they have contradicted their much-cherished "principles," to sustain it. [p. 21.]

Now, not wishing to sustain any laid down principles, but the Bible, we ask, J. H. Waggoner and his readers a few questions: He says, "I read that 'all the world' stand condemned, 'guilty before God.'" Of what are they guilty? and to what are they condemned? We read they are condemned to death; and Jesus says, "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."—John v. 24. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." Why? Because, "He that believeth not is condemned already." Then the condemnation of the sinner is no new one in consequence of the coming of the Son of man, but the old condemnation already in the world; and Jesus says, that was to perish.—John iii. 15. Mr. Waggoner says, "All the world stand condemned—guilty before God." Guilty of what? And he says that "God now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." All the heathen? Repent of what? Paul says, "Where there is no law, there is no transgression." Will friend Waggoner please tell us how God calls upon the heathen to repent? for he says in the next paragraph, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." I suppose he means faith in Christ. Will he please tell us how the heathen are to have faith in what they have never heard? "No man cometh to the Father but by me." How can they come except they hear of him? Again friend Waggoner says,

> We learn that all now die in Adam (that is, infants, heathen, sinners and Christians), without regard to character, but they are on probation, the result of which is life or death. p. 21.

Who are on probation for life or death? Do you mean the all in Adam who die? If so, what probation are infants and heathen on? "Present, or first death is not the penalty of personal" transgression in infants, as they have no "personal sin to die for;" so your words imply, p. 13. What are you going to do with them, friend Waggoner? You say you read, "all the world stand condemned, guilty before God; and without faith it is impossible to please God." These infants are part of your world, and are guilty before God; and they have no faith in Christ and have committed no personal sin; what are you going to do with them in your resurrection of all who are in their graves? Does your gospel save some without faith, or does it consign them to the second death? Why did you not make it plain? "No man cometh to the Father but by me." The heathen cannot come through Christ, they have never heard of him. But you make them come up in the resurrection! Pray why did you not tell us what you intend doing with them? For you say "We learn that "all now die in Adam without regard to character, but they are on probation, the result of which is life or death." What probation are infants, idiots and heathen on? And as all come up in your resurrection, what does your gospel do with them? Excuse me, for you do answer my question, thus;

> "And as they do not now die in view of that probation, as is proved by the fact that they die without any regard to the character formed under that probation, they must be raised to die 'the second death,' which is the only death to which their probation relates. This only meets the demands of justice; and this is the teaching of the Bible;" p. 21, 22.

"Children, heathen and all die without regard to character." Very good; therefore they must be raised to die the "second death," for you cannot give them life under your gospel, for "without faith (you say), there is no salvation." Truly your God is love, as "this only meets the demands of justice!"

But says one, "You do not deal fair; he does not mean infants; they are not going to die the second death." Then I ask again, What will you do with them? Are you going to invent "another gospel?" for you say "We read, without faith it is impossible to please God." Now as they have no faith, how will you save them? and when you get them up in the resurrection what will you do with them? The matter stands thus:

(1.) There is no justification in the Bible except by faith; (2.) There is no future life without justification; (3.) But there is a future life to those (infants) who have no faith. And it is no relief from the contradiction to say, the gospel does not address itself to them, for then I inquire, Where does Waggoner get his knowledge of a resurrection unto life of (infants) "outside the gospel?" Your declaration admits it is not in the Bible; for "without faith it is impossible to please God;" and children have none.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April, 1870.

Remarks by the Editor.

We think friend Waggoner's wagon has been pretty well emptied, and we did not intend to notice his pamphlet again. Br. Grim has now swept it, and there seems nothing further worthy of a reply, as we see nothing new in our friend's effort to get the wicked dead up, to kill again, as if death was not death, except a man is killed twice. "It is appointed unto men once to die;"—Heb. ix.; all that then remains is to decide who shall live again; and we regard that matter so settled by eternal truth, love and justice, that no amount of labor by the advocates of twice dying can ever remove the bars of death from such as die in their sins. "The sting of death is sin;" and unless that sting is extracted before death, there is no life in the future for any soul of Adam's race. "The wicked are holden with the cords of their sins." And we are satisfied these cords are strong enough not to be broken, and will hold them in unbroken death.

HOME AGAIN.

FROM Z. CAMPBELL.

I HAVE been out more than three months, witnessing to both small and great the truths of the Holy Scriptures of salvation.

I have been almost incessantly in contact with the die twice believers, taking cognizance of their best efforts to maintain their favorite theory, and of the spirit that goes with them, and of the effect it is having on themselves, and on the public. It is truly lamentable: I speak of it no further than I have witnessed it, felt it, and suffered its evil consequences.

Here are a people just out of the popular churches, and still writhing under the persecuting lash of popular opinion, and yet while their own backs are smarting under the stripes, they raise the stake and light the fire of persecution of those who do not believe with them that the wicked will die twice. Strange infatuation! What an intricate puzzle is man! Is there no consistency in him? no moral principal in him, or virtue in his religion?

There is neither consistency nor virtue in his persecuting religion, and as for truth it is never found with the persecutors but always with the persecuted from Christ to the present time. Everywhere I have been, I find the same unchristian spirit manifested toward all who do not believe in the resurrection of the wicked. In some instances they have been turned out, disowned, and disfellowshipped; and nowhere have I seen them treated with common Christian courtesy.

I attended a three days meeting in Livermore, held by these die twice ministers. They gave us nine sermons, all alike touching holiness of heart: good practical preaching, but at the same time they were speaking like lambs, they were showing the spirit of wolves to all who did not believe the wicked would die twice. There was, however, one exception in that meeting: Eld. Hagget seemed to show a better spirit in proportion as he has less faith in the die twice. But the effort of the meeting to do good was all lost, as it is in all similar cases. Other denominations see the prevailing spirit, and chuckle over it, seeming to say, "How these Adventists hate one another!" The unconverted also see it, and are thereby making the Advent people a hissing and a by-word in the land.

This is a sad state of things. The Advent people have spent time and money enough to have accomplished much more good than they have, if they had had the right spirit. But the opposition to the truth is being one of the means to build it up. The low and disgraceful means which some preachers have used in Maine, the past winter, to kill the truth, and those who preach it, is operating in favor of die once. And if a few more such preachers as might be named, could be sent in there to preach "die twice," converts to the die once would be greatly multiplied, and the Advent body would be revolutionized.

It is a grievous affair in which the innocent suffer with the guilty. Both parties are known as Adventists, and both are compelled to bear the reproach of the "rule or ruin," spirit.

But there is another consideration. What is it to be a Christian? It is to be Christ-like; of a meek and quiet spirit, forgiving, forbearing, and reproving in love, and to be amply qualified for the royal priesthood, 1 John ii. 9, and to reign on the earth. Rev. v. 10. Those who reign with Christ must reign in righteousness, and having power granted them to reign, they must not abuse that power. But if they do abuse it in this world, they will in the world to come. But he that is faithful here over a few things, will be made ruler over many things, (Matt. xxv. 21), and he that is unjust in the least, is unjust also in much. Luke xvi. 10. Christ will have co-rulers in the world to come, and they will be men who are tried here, by the gospel to see if they abuse their limited power. And who are being able to stand?

The die twice believers, have power to shut the door of their churches against all die once preachers, and to blot their names out of their leading organ; thus practicing what they despise in others. Now the gospel is calculated to take out of the world a meek and lowly people: a people who can bear a little prosperity without being puffed up, a people who can be entrusted with a little power and not abuse it. And who are they? The die once preachers in Maine, know very well who they are not, and I believe they generally do. For one I have severely felt the abuse of this power, coming from a people having a little more prosperity than they have grace to bear.

And why should they manifest such an iron rule or ruin spirit? For even their leaders would make but poor Popes, having proved their lack of infallibility, as all of them have seen that they have been in error in the past; and they ought to know that very possibly they may be in error now. Such men are unrefined by the gospel, and cannot be trusted with power in the world to come; therefore, they cannot be kings and priests in the kingdom to come, or reign with Christ. They have not proved themselves faithful in that which is least, therefore not faithful in much; but having proved unjust in the least they are also unjust in much. Luke xvi. 10. Alas! alas! when will they see their fault, and turn from the error of their ways and cease to be a stumbling block to the truth?

Suppose they do think we err; still there is no need of throwing so many sour shells into the die once camp. It only shows the evil source from whence they come. Moreover, it is as much a Christian duty to preach the penalty of sin, as it is the reward of the righteous; and a more especial duty to show the goodness of God in inflicting the penalty of sin without doubling it. Sin makes us miserable; and putting an end to the sinner's life, puts an end to his misery. Herein is displayed the goodness of God: but his goodness is lost sight of in taking the life of the sinner twice, when once answers all useful purposes. So the more we see of the goodness of God, the more we shall love him, and the more we shall love one another. But those who see the least goodness of God, manifest the least goodness toward their fellow creatures.

As the moon cannot reflect more light than she receives from the sun, so the human heart cannot reflect more love than it receives from God. So, as the die twice theory is minus the love of God, its advocates have none to reflect on their fellow creatures. Therefore it is truly said, He that hateth his brother abideth in death, and is still under condemnation.

LANDAFF, N. H., April 15, 1870.

FROM MRS. E. G. FARMER.

BR. STORRS: According to appointment, a few of God's people met on the 15th inst., to celebrate the death of Christ, our passover; and although but a few, the presence of God was there. It was the first I ever enjoyed in like manner. I truly felt it was good for me to be there. I truly felt to thank God and take courage. I do thank the Lord that he ever led my mind to searching to see if these things were so. I feel that I grow stronger and stronger, in the Life views. Now when I read God's word, it seems as though I had been in a very dark swamp or wilderness in times past, and had just emerged into the bright sunlight; and I pray God it may grow brighter and brighter, unto the perfect day, when all his chosen ones will meet in his blessed kingdom where we shall ever be with the Lord; for our Saviour says, He that endureth to the end shall be saved. I pray that I may endure to the end, that when He shall come in all his glory, whether I sleep or wake, I may have a place in his kingdom, if but a door-keeper in the house of my God. I feel I am the least among God's children, but I want to do all the will of my Father as it is made known to me. I lend my books and papers to all that will read, praying God's blessing may attend them. We have no preaching of the Life views here, only the word of God and the HERALD OF LIFE.

O, how glad we would feel if some one could come over and help us. I think it would be attended with good. A neighbor said to me, If I believed as you do, I should be of all creatures the most miserable. I said to her, I believed my hope was founded upon a rock that would stand the test of the great day when Christ shall come to make up his jewels. I can truly say,

> Jesus is my righteous King,
> He surely will salvation bring;
> And all his chosen ones he'll save,
> And raise them from the silent grave.

From your unworthy sister, waiting for the LIFE-GIVER to come.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., April 19, 1870.

FROM JANETT MAYO.

BR. STORRS: I want to say a word to my friends that read our paper. I am going to East Boston to-morrow. My husband has a softening of the brain, and can never get well. He is over seventy years of age and infirm. He is often so bad as to require two men to take care of him. We are obliged to have one all the time. I hope the children of my heavenly Father will remember me. I know they will. I do not complain; for I know all things will work together for good to them that love God. I do love him. He will never leave nor forsake one of his children when they are called to pass through deep waters. I feel that this is very trying; but I have a promise for every emergency. The Book of God is full of all kinds of promises for every event that can take place. Thank God I know in whom I have trusted for almost fifty years, and surely he will not leave me now when I am old and my strengh faileth. Amen.

SOUTH AMHERST, Mass., April 22, 1870.

CAROLINE M. JAQUES, Oswego, Ind., writes: I thank you very much for continuing my paper so long without pay. Sickness in my family has prevented my sending the money sooner. I am a widow with small means, and have just buried one of my children after an illness of five months, which exhausted my little means. The paper has been a great comfort to me in my afflictions. May the Lord bless you and all the dear ones of like precious faith. O how comforting to the heart of the weary pilgrims to read the epistles of the dear ones scattered abroad, and to know that we shall all soon meet in the kingdom of God. O how could we bear the trials of this life, were it not for the hope of the gospel? Dear ones pray for me, that I may be faithful to the end. Your sister, looking for the Saviour and LIFE-GIVER.

OBITUARY.

ROGERS.—Died in South Windsor, Conn., April 15, 1870, Mrs. MARY LUCRETIA, wife of Albert ROGERS, and daughter of Oliver Loomis, aged 33 years and 5 months.

The subject of this notice, for a long time, has suffered much with consumption, yet she endured it with much patience.

She has for many years professed faith in Christ; yet, like many others, she neglected many Christian duties which might have been for the glory of God. Nevertheless in the hour of need, she called on the name of the Lord for help, and the Lord in the plenitude of his mercy and tender compassion heard her cry, and for Christ's sake forgave all of her sins, and poured into her cheerless heart the oil and wine of consolation, which consoled her in her dying moments, so that she could shout glory to God, in the hour of her dissolution; therefore we have hope in her death that she will come forth again to life eternal, when he who is our life, shall appear to raise the sleeping dead, and give them immortality, eternal life.

Oh, glorious hope to the righteous; and to this end the Lord help us all to live. Amen.

MRS. A. LOOMIS.

THE DYING WORDS OF WILBERFORCE.—"Do not weep for me, dear ——, do not weep; for I am very happy; but think of me, and let the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ a Saviour. Read the Bible—read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place. Through all my perplexities and distresses I never read any other book, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study; and all my knowledge of the doctrines, and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been derived from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do instead of the simple truth of the Bible."—Selected by W. H. S.

A CERTAIN amount of opposition is a great help to man. Kites rise against the wind and not with the wind; even a bad wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm. Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition; opposition is what he wants and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-reliance.

MARRIED.

MOWBRAY—MORGAN.—On Wednesday evening, April 20, by F. H. Burbank, Charles A. Mowbray to Eliza M. Morgan, both of New York city.

APPOINTMENTS.

WEST MERIDEN, Conn., May 1.
NEW BRITAIN, Conn., May 8.
PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, May 15.

GEO. W. BROWN.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, May 1 and 8.

WM. STUART.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Sunday, May 1.
NEW YORK (Cooper Institute, Room 24), Sunday, May 8. Subjects.—A. M., The Past, Present and Future of Papacy. P. M., The Shadow of Death.

S. W. BISHOP.

LEWISTON, Me., Sunday, May 1 and 22.
MANCHESTER, N. H., Sundays, May 8 and 15.
WEST LEEDS, Me., Sunday, May 29.

J. C. WHEELER,
North Turner, Bridge, Me.

PLEASANT VALLEY, Conn., Sunday, May 1.
WEST WINSTED, Conn., Sunday evening, May 1.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—Mrs. E. A. Cleaveland, Mrs. P. C. Macomber, Anna Neill, Z. Campbell, Moses Chandler, Miss Z. Spencer, Mrs. M. A. Couillard, Charles Hand, F. Winans, John Huntley, John Bolster, G. W. Gompf, S. A. Dean.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—C. Bozarth, T. P. Lewis, C. M. Jacques.

VARIOUS SUMS—Geo. W. Curl, $4; Z. Adams, $3; Josiah M. Fike, 50 cents; Charles H. N. Merriman, $4 44; Thos. Apthorpe, $5; O. F. Yale, 60 cents; T. W. Wright, $3; Bessie Armstrong, $1 20; D. H. Baker, $5; J. L. Whitcomb, $3.

DONATIONS FOR "A RICH TRACT."

E. Wolcott, paid, $5; Anna Neill, paid, 50 cents Alfred Annable, paid, $1 70; Thos. Apthorpe, paid, $2; Abel Larkin, paid 50 cents; Clamor Franke, paid, $5; "From a Sister," 50 cents: Mrs. E. G. Farmer, paid, 50 cents; Erastus Clark, paid, $1.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

A. T. Woodward, Josiah M. Fike, Mrs. M. A. Couillard, Alfred Annable, T. W. Wright (two parcels), Rev. Wm. D. Bridge, Wm. H. Simmons, Mrs. E. G. Farmer, Wm. Sunter, I. James Schaff, J. M. Stephenson (book), David H. Baker, J. L. Whitcomb.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ELD. WM. BRAYTON.—The letter you speak of never reached us. We have entered the two names, and now send their papers, commencing with No. 313.

THE Post Office address of Eld. D. J. and Maria M. Weaver will hereafter be Feeding Hills, Mass.

EVENING.

Now from care and labor free,
Turns my troubled heart to thee;
Father soothe my soul to rest,
Let me lean upon thy breast.

Woes beset and sins allure,
Friends are false, and foes secure;
Gathering storms affright my soul,
Thundering tempests o'er me roll.

Carping care and worldly thought,
On my brow their lines have wrought;
Sorrow with its hidden smart,
Stirred the fountains of my heart.

Tempests lie in wait around,
Snares on every hand are found;
Father, while I tread life's way,
Keep me safe, nor let me stray.

—Selected.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A PERSON ANTICHRIST?

AN INQUIRY BY PATRICK CANNON.

THIS question can be understood by first understanding what constituted Jesus the Christ; for John speaks of two Christs; a true one, and a false one; and I understand the confession of the false Christ, makes a person anti to the true Christ that died, and that God raised from the dead.

WHAT CONSTITUTED JESUS CHRIST?

The true Jesus Christ referred to by 1 John ii. 18–23; iv. 1–3; 2 John 6–8 (Syr.), is the literal, material, tangible person who was nailed to the cross, that was wrapped in the linen, and was laid dead in the tomb, and whom God raised alive out of the tomb, and that ascended up to heaven and sat down at the right hand of God. Psa. cx. 1, and who is to sit there, until the end of this age; (Heb. xii. 12, 13), and will then come a second time to reward the righteous with immortality; and then the resurrected and immortalized saints will say to that same literal, but immortalized Jesus who was dead, but is alive forevermore; (Rev. ii. 18, 19, Rom. vi. 9, (Syr.), "THOU HAST REDEEMED US TO GOD, BY THY BLOOD, out of every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation."—Rev. v. 9, 10.

CONCLUSION: Then the literal, material, human Jesus Christ, that had blood to spill, flesh to die, and a life to lose, is the only one that was ever on earth, the only one now in heaven, and the only one that will ever come again to bless his people with immortality and eternal life. This is the only Jesus Christ that the love of God gave to die for our redemption, and that the mortal family of Adam need, to give them immortality. This is the true Jesus Christ and no mystery. Set up any other Jesus, in the place of this one and you set up a false Christ; and the confession of the false Christ constitutes a Christian antichrist, or one opposed to the true Christ that died.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A PERSON ANTICHRIST?

Some think any person opposed to Christ is antichrist; such as the Jews and Pagans. This is not so in a Scripture sense; for according to John, antichrist must be a professed Christian.

"My children it is the last time; and as ye have heard that a false Messiah (antichrist) was to arise, so there are now many antichrists, and from this we know it is the latter time; from us they went out, they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would have continued with us. But they went out from us, so it might be known they were not of us; but ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye can discriminate every person." (That is, know the Antichrist.—1 John ii. 18–23; 2 John vii. 10, 11. (Syr.)

From the above, it is evident antichrist must be a professed Christian, that rejects the true Christ, and confessess a false Christ.

What makes a person Antichrist? "Who is a liar but he who denies that Jesus is the Messiah? And that person is (of) the false Messiah." 1 John ii. 22. (Syr.) That is, he confesseth a false or bogus Messiah, that never died. He is not antichrist that denied the Father and the Son, (see Syr.), but he that denieth that Jesus was dying flesh and blood. That confession makes him antichrist.

Again. "By this the Spirit of God is known; Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus, Messiah, hath come in the flesh, is of God; and every spirit which confesseth not, that Jesus the Messiah hath come in the flesh is not of God. But he is of the false Messiah, of whom ye have heard he cometh."—1 John i. 3. (Syr.) Here we have two Christs.

1st. A true Christ that died.—1 John v. 20.

2d. A false Christ that never dies, and could not die.

Now the Christian that confesseth that the Christ could not literally die, confesseth a false Christ; and that confession constitutes them antichristian.

What constitutes the falling away? When Constantine the great abolished the heathen religion, and decreed Christianity the religion of the empire, about A. D. 300, all kinds of half converted pagans flocked into the church under the cloak of christianity for popularity, and office sake. From this period to A. D. 451, two parties contended against each other; the Catholic party held up Plato as the authority for their religious notions; while the true church abused and ridiculed Plato as heathenism. See Gibbon xxist chapter, A. D. 360. Here, we may conclude, the doctrine of the immortality of the human soul, and the denial of the real death of Christ took deep root in the Catholic system. Here the name of Plato, undermined and took the place of Jesus, and the immortal soul, and going to heaven at death, took the place of immortality by a resurrection.

If this apostacy in the church does not mark Paul's falling away, then words cannot do it. 2 Thess. ii. To unite those contending Christians, Constantine called the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, (Gibbon xxist chapter, pp. 444, 449), but proved unsuccessful. From this period to the Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 451, truth and error contended against each other; but error prevailed. God sent on the Catholic party the operations of deception, to believe a lie; and that Council confirmed the lie, (see Gibbon), "By announcing to the Catholic world, Christ in one person, but in two natures, God and man, A. D. 451; and a line was drawn between the heresy of Apalinaris and the faith of St. Cyril; and the road to paradise, a bridge as sharp as a razor, was suspended over the abyss, by the masterly hand of the theological artist. During twelve centuries of blindness and servitude Europe received her religious opinions from the oracles of the Vatican; and the same doctrines, already varnished with the rust of antiquity, were admitted without dispute into the creed of Reformers, who disclaim the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff. The decrees of the Council of Chalcedon still triumph in the Protestant churches, and the most pious Protestants, of the present day, are ignorant of the origin of their own belief concerning the double nature of Christ." See Gibbon, chapter xlvii., p. 259–260.

The falling away is now fully established, on the hope of the ruins of the Gospel, by the Christian Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 451; and the same falling away was admitted in the creed of reformers, A. D. 1500, and is the ruling religion of christendom to-day, A. D. 1870. Now can there be any mistake but Popery and Protestantism are John's antichristians, and constitute Paul's falling away, 2 Thess. ii.? And what next, are we to look for? I understand that Man of sin, 2 Thess. ii. 1—; the vile person, Dan. xi. 21–31–45; the symbolic little horn, Dan. vii. 8, 21, 22, 25, 26; viii. 9–14; whom the Lord will consume with the Spirit of his mouth and destroy with the brightness of his appearing, when Michael stands up, Dan. xi. 45; xii. 1, at the resurrection, Dan. xii. 2; when the judgment of the world will sit, and the books are opened, Dan. vii. 8–10, 13.

But some will say, The falling away occurred before the Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 457. Indeed, the student of prophecy that will say so, must have a very dull sectarian axe to grind. The true Christian church, existed up to the Council of Chalcedon, A. D. 451; and the decrees of that Council nearly exterminated it by the slaughter of 15,000 Christians, (see Gibbon), and this slaughter was caused because Christians believed in immortality by a resurrection, and that Jesus Christ died; while their antichristian murderers confessed the Platonic doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and a Christ that never died; and yet we are told this Popish church is not the falling away. Why do men talk so? I answer, not that they wish to mislead, but they have a year day system of interpreting prophecy, which must be maitained, cost what it may.

The next grand event is the standing up of the Man of sin; and into his hands God will give his transgression, antichristian people, (see Dan. viii. 9–12; vii. 25; xi. 31–45; xii. 1, 2), as he did the Jews of old into the hands of the king of Babylon; then we will have the vision of 2,300 evenings and morning in "the time of the end," as Gabriel informed Dan. viii. 11, 12; and when these events will occur, we will know it, because the true church will not be in darkness that that day will overtake us as a thief in the night. Thess. v. 1, 2.

CONCLUSION.

The Popish, Protestant, and all Christian churches, who confess that Jesus Christ was constituted of a never dying nature, and also the immortality of the human soul, are antichristian, and in my judgment are Paul's falling away, and that constitutes them transgressors; Dan. viii. 11, 12, 23–25; and because of their transgression God will raise up "that Man of sin," the vile person (Dan. xi. 21), as his scourge, to purge them, as he did the king of Babylon of old, into whose hands he gave his transgression holy people to be punished for 70 years. But popery cannot be the falling away and that Man of sin, or the vile person also, no more than the king of Babylon, was the holy people that he removed to Babylon to be punish d for 70 years.

NEW YORK, March 1870.

LIVING AFTER PROBATION IS ENDED.

REMARKS BY ELD. B. MATHIAS.

BR. STORRS: This is an every day fact; yet when I saw your allusion to Eld. Waggoner's book, and the quotation from it, in which he states the fact that Adam lived 900 years after being sentenced, I confess myself startled, and began to look around for a way. But your criticism showed the way.

This shrewd discovery of the Elder's has gained a puff or so, for it looks like a new argument in favor of a future trial, but it is a failure; it is doomed to go with the rest; it is taking a stand in the last defence, and must succumb.

Please allow me a little space in the HERALD OF LIFE for numerous references to cases illustrating the fact of living after trial and probation is ended. It is true of nations and individuals, as a rule, if not universal and uniform.

1. We know that in the working of common law, it seldom is otherwise. Criminals are daily sentenced to death, and then remanded to prison to wait the day of execution at the discretion of the Court. This period of waiting is not one of trial or training, but in law or outlaw, they are spoiled of responsibility and conscience, and manhood.

2. We will look at scripture examples. Adam's case is in point. Cain's forms another, an outlawed vagabond ever after; he feared everybody would kill him. No cognizance is taken of him except in his pedigree. "He went out from the presence of the Lord;" nobody knows how long he lived, and nobody cares. Josephus says, He kept up his bad manners.

3. The antediluvians were warned by Noah, "a preacher of righteousness," says Peter, "When once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing."—1 Peter iii. 18, 20. This "prison" case is surely explained in the 2d Epistle of Peter. "The angels that sinned were cast down to tartarus, delivered into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."—V. 4. Jude says, "Hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day."

Any candid person ought to admit, after a fair look at this matter. (1.) That Noah was the preacher to the "spirits in prison." (2.) That the chains of darkness constituted the prison; in other words, (3.) That they were not reserved for trial, but for punishment. (4.) That the great day was the judgment of the flood. And (5.) that the angels were the wicked who lived anterior to the flood.

4. Egypt and Pharaoh, is the next case. They were reserved for judgment after probation ended.

5. The Canaanites' probation ended some time before judgment. There was no expectation of reforming them. They were allowed some time to "fill their cup."

6. The Jews before captivity, were given up, even in the days of Hezekiah, Isa., xxxix. 6, and other corresponding texts in Kings and Chronicles.

7. The Jews lived, nationally, many years after our Lord said, "Now they are hid from thine eyes," and after he pronounced sentence upon them, and their city.

8. The Man of sin, the abomination of desolation, was given up from the time it substituted its idolatry for Christianity; and ever since has been working out its destruction with greediness and certainty.

9. Here is another instance of suspended responsibility and probation. "It shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten 70 years."—Isa. xxiii. 15. "It shall come to pass, that after 70 years the Lord will visit Tyre," verse 17. Here follows an instance of final judgment, so circumstantial it seems prepared for this time and occasion. "And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be visited after many days."—Isa. xxiv. 22. Tyre was restored to her trade after 70 years, and corrupted herself as before. Verse 17. When she is brought down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time, etc. See Ezek. xxvi. 20.

10. "The kings of the earth upon the earth." These are kept in durance, like the "angels that sinned," to be visited after many days; not for a release, but for punishment; see Isa. xxiv. 21. By this reading, it is at the time when the Lord takes the kingdom: verse 23.

That passage in Job, "Do ye not know their tokens? That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath."—Job xxi. 29, 30. This finds a mate in Peter. "Made to be taken and destroyed."—2 Peter ii. 12.

We might cite numerous cases in the gospels, at some length. Our Lord uniformly observed this rule of judgment in his parables. Take the tares of the field. They were judged as soon as detected; but were left to grow with the wheat as a choice of evils. The sheep and the goats were in the same flock; were sheep and goats long before they were separated.

The "net and the fishes." "They sat down and put the good in vessels and cast the bad away"—"so shall it be in the end of the age." The beast and false prophet. The devil and his angels. The beast and kings were judged to this condemnation long ago: "prepared for the devil and his angels."

The same of the worshippers of the beast; they live a long time after sentence, and all die lingering deaths.

Saith the Lord, My Spirit shall not always strive with man.

LANESFIELD, Kansas, April, 1870.

WATCH AND PRAY.

THE following article from the pen of Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, contains too much vital truth to be lost. Especially in this time of waiting should the church heed the exhortation to "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." "Watch, lest coming suddenly, He find you sleeping." "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

LOUISA J. BEACH.

HOW TO LEAD A SPIRITUAL LIFE.

How is the spiritual mind to be kept spiritual? Will a renewed heart "keep sweet" of itself? or will grace live within us without watching? Will spirituality grow without tillage of the heart-garden?

To these questions Christian experience says, No! Conversion brings a man into a new state—"all things have become new;" but yet there is a stiff undercurrent running toward the old state. No converted man, however thoroughly renewed by the Divine Spirit, will stay converted unless God watch over him and he watch over himself. Conversion is simply the turning of the heart from sin to the Saviour; and, unless the heart hold fast to Christ and Christ hold fast to it, that heart will drop away into self-indulgence, pride, unbelief, and besetting sins. Paul would not have remained Paul for four and twenty hours if Divine power had not kept him. "Not I, but Christ that liveth in me." "I can do all things—through Christ which strengtheneth me." What are the essential things to maintain spiritual-mindedness?

I. Prayer, of course, comes among the foremost. Not saying prayers; but praying. A dull, formal, monotonous repetition of devout phrases every night and morning puts the conscience to sleep, just as surely as a low crooning tune puts a baby to sleep in a cradle. But genuine prayer is quite a different thing from that. It is the soul's keeping the track open, and maintaining a constant intercourse with God. Prayer is just as vital a thing to my heart as are the water-pipes in my house that connect with the Ridgewood reservoir. A double office belongs to the conduit-pipe of prayer; it serves at once as the inlet of grace, and as the outlet of gratitude. I thank God for what he gives; and I receive the gifts to be thankful for. And our prayers do not smell enough of the sweet, holy fragrance of gratitude. For a sinner to be anywhere out of perdition is a matter for thanksgiving; but to be actually on the highway to heaven, with the love-light of Jesus' face streaming on us, is enough to make ones "feet to be like hind's feet," and to set us leaping like the roe. "In everything give thanks."

Prayer, then, is the channel for gratitude and penitence to flow God-ward; the channel, for grace and strength to flow from Him into our dry hearts. When the channel gets clogged up with doubts and unbelief, or gets frozen up with selfishness and indifference, the supplies stop, and death begins. Just as soon attempt to keep up a blooming and fruit-bearing piety without perpetual prayer, as to set your geraniums into full flower by locking them in a Greenwood vault.

I have always observed that backslidings begin with a neglected closet and a neglected prayer-meeting. "Why don't the water run in my house to-day?" I send for the plumber; and he says to me: "Friend, the connection is broken." Woe to that professing Christian who has broken his connection with his God!

I sometimes think of prayer as a celestial telegram. Our messages go upward with the speed of thought. The return of mercies flow downward with the promptness of Divine love. Sometimes the answer anticipates the request. Sometimes the answer is delayed; then we can only wait. Sometimes it comes, in a startling shock—like a death-messenger over the wires. But it is all right; God makes no mistakes. Faith says, "I put myself in connection with the God of love, I must take just what his wisdom sends. Thy will be done!"

Ah! there is something far worse than to receive dispensations of trial from yonder Father of lights. It is to have the telegraph of prayer so utterly out of repair by disuse, or so broken down, that all communication stops, and the soul is cut off from heaven. But a healthy Christian's spiritual telegraph is ever busy; it worketh by the electricity of love. Up into the All-hearing ear, floweth the constant stream of confession, penitence, desire, gratitude and petition; and downward cometh the "grace sufficient," the strength equal to the day, the joys in the Holy Ghost. Then brother pray without ceasing. A true child of grace was never born dumb.

II. The second essential to spirituality is watchfulness. "What I say unto you, I say unto all—Watch!" Christ knew perfectly well to whom he was talking. In coupling together prayer and self-watching, he married the sovereignty of God to the Christian's free agency. Never yet have we seen the heart that could be trusted without oversight. It must be a close, weary, wakeful watch. If you were set to keep a bird sitting unfastened on the palm of your hand, you would know what is meant by keeping your heart with all diligence. Have the arm of godly resolution ready—ready to seize it the moment it attempts to fly away into sinful indulgence. Do not take off your eye one instant. The price of a spiritual life is "eternal vigilance." The lusts of the flesh will steal silent marches on us; temper will start up like an unchained mastiff, and bite before we are aware; the unruly tongue gets loose; pride gets the reins, or some other besetting sin is on the move. "Therefore, I say unto you all, Watch." Watch the sly approaches of the tempter. Watch the thought-cradles in your own soul wherein the infant purposes are nursed. Watch over your own resolutions. Watch the leading of God. Watch for opportunities to do good. Watch for the coming of your Master. While the Martha of your industry and your benevolence is busy within, let the Mary of your devout vigilance be ever on the lookout for the coming of your Lord. Blessed are those servants whom, when the Master cometh he shall find watching!

"Beyond the watching and the weeping,
Beyond the waking and the sleeping,
Beyond the sowing and the reaping,
We shall be soon.
Love—rest—and home,
Sweet home!
Lord! tarry not but come!"

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

SOWING GOOD SEEDS.

ONE lovely afternoon, early in the month of May, a little girl, not more than eight years old, sat at the window overlooking a beautiful lawn and fishpond. She had been reading, but the book had fallen from her hands. There was a sad and pensive expression on her countenance; for she was thinking how she used to love to run about in the green fields and play with her hoop or skipping-rope; but these she had to exchange for a crutch,—she was a cripple. Just then some little sparrows came to pick up the crumbs which the child had thrown from the window. She watched them with the deepest interest, as they hopped about in their happy freedom, till, at length, having satisfied their hunger, with a chirrup they flew away to join their companions.

The little girl turned away sorrowfully from the window, and stooped to reach her crutch, which had fallen to the floor. In vain did she try to drive back her tears,—they would come; and, covering her face with her hands, she wept bitterly. Whilst thus troubled, she felt a hand laid softly on her head, and looking up she saw her mother bending over her with a mingled look of anxiety and love in her face.

"What is the matter with my Nellie?" she asked in a gentle voice.

"O mamma," exclaimed the child, as she threw her arms around her mother's neck, "it is of no use for me to live now that I am lame. I can never be of any use!"

The mother, breathing a silent prayer to God, for a blessing on her instruction, seated herself on a low chair, and drawing Nellie on her lap, whispered words of comfort to the troubled little girl. She told her of the Redeemer's love to children, of His sufferings and death on the cross. She told her also of the lame and blind, the deaf and the dumb, who were brought to the loving Saviour, and were healed; and then, with a mother's tenderness she pressed the child to her heart, and tried to show her in how many ways even a cripple might be useful. She told her of the glow worm whose tiny light cheers the traveller on his way in the dark night.

"But mamma," said Nellie, "I am not a glow-worm!"

"No, my dear," said her mother; "but you may do what the glow-worm does,—you may 'let your light shine.' Have you forgotten those lines which your papa taught you, not long ago?

'Do what you can—being what you are;
Shine like a glow-worm, if you can't be a star.'

You cannot do much, I know; and yet, by your example, you may be made a blessing to others. You may sow the seeds of kindness and love, and mercy, and truth; which, by and by, will, with the Divine blessing, grow up bright and beautiful flowers, that shall bloom throughout eternity!"

"But, mamma, how can I do this?"

"Well, my dear," replied her mother; "by giving up your own will for another's pleasure you sow the seeds of love and kindness; by immediately confessing when you have done wrong, you sow the seed of truth; and you were sowing the seed of mercy when you gave your sixpence to the poor blind man at the door, this morning."

With a bright smile of hope the child looked up into her mother's face, and, pressing a warm kiss on her cheek, she said, "Thank you, dear mamma; I will try to be more happy and useful!"—Selected.

A DOG STORY.

ONE winter afternoon, about eighty-five years ago, a gentleman set out to go from Northampton, Massachusetts, to Westfield, in a sleigh. Westfield was about fifteen miles west of Northampton, and much of the road lay through an open country, without fences or houses, a few trees being scattered along the route. Not long after the gentleman left Northampton, it began to snow very fast. At length he could not see the road and was afraid of losing his way. He could not tell, with certainty, the points of the compass, because the sun was obscured, and at length he began to fear he should be lost. While considering whether it would be safest to go onward or attempt to go back, a dog came by the side of the sleigh and ran forward, plowing his nose in the snow, and then looking back to the sleigh. The gentleman drove on, keeping watch of the dog, and saw that he continued to scamper ahead, a few rods at a time, and then turn and look back at the horse and sleigh. He now concluded that it was the safest way for him to follow the dog. The intelligent creature guided him to Westfield, where he arrived after dark, and passed the night. He inquired for the owner of the dog, but no one knew to whom he belonged, and the gentleman gladly took him home with him to Greenfield in Connecticut.

Not long after this, Dr. Dwight, for he was the gentleman, (and he related the story to me himself), moved to New Haven to take the presidency of Yale College. The dog, who was considered a friend and benefactor, accompanied the family to New Haven, where he proved himself as trustworthy as he was intelligent. Dr. Dwight's two youngest sons began to go to school when they were very small, and the dog always attended them at nine o'clock, to the school room, and then came back home. During the forenoon he took no notice of the striking of the clock for ten or eleven, but the moment it struck twelve he rushed out of the house and ran to the school to wait upon the little boys home. He often went with the president to the chapel on the Sabbath, following him up the pulpit stairs as far as the broad step, where he lay down and went to sleep. He took no notice of the movements of the congregation until they rose to receive the benediction; then he awoke instantly and stood ready to go with his master out of the chapel.—Little Corporal.

CALUMNY is like the brands flying from a large fire, which quickly go out if they do not blow them.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2 "
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2 "
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 30. WHOLE NUMBER 316.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie. in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

PRESBYTERIANS SCATTERING LIGHT.

WE are glad to see our Presbyterian brethren scattering the light of truth, though they esteem it error; but placing the fact, that good, learned, and pious ministers are rejecting the doctrine of eternal torture, before their readers, they will inevitably be led to inquire what these things mean? From some source they will be led to make a further inquiry whether the doctrine, which they are conscious is a violation of their sense of right, can, after all, be the teaching of God's word? Thus will they soon learn that the idea of inherent immortality and eternal torture is neither scriptural or rational. The result will be the abandonment of such traditions, which have no better foundation than the Pope's infallibility, and stand or fall with that Papal claim.

The following article is from the English correspondent of "The Presbyterian," of March 26, published at Philadelphia, Pa.:

EXTINCTION OF THE WICKED.

There is, and has been for some time, a good deal of discussion among a limited number of both Churchmen and Nonconformists on the awful question of everlasting punishment, and it is gradually revealing opinions and arguments which are sure to do much mischief. It has come to pass that the Church of England and the Congregational body have men of mark who hold that the wicked and impenitent will not be consigned to endless torments, but will be utterly extinguished and literally destroyed. The Rev. Samuel Minton, the incumbent of Eaton Square, London, and as thoroughly evangelical in his general discourses as ever, has embraced these views, and has written strongly in their defence. The same opinions are held by the Rev. Mr. Dale, of Birmingham, the successor as pastor there of the late John Angel James, and the present chairman of the Congregational Union. Another Congregational pastor, the Rev. Edward White, a man of piety and scholarship, is now publishing letters defending the doctrine of death by sin, and life in Christ alone—a doctrine which is "now maintained by a large number of Christian scholars, as well as less learned believers in this country and elsewhere."

Mr. White professes to follow, in this exposition, the canon of orthodox Christendom, namely, that the meaning which comes out from the literal sense of the main current of expressions employed in the document shall always be taken as the ruling sense. He insists that by this canon the Church has deduced the doctrines of the Trinity, the Incarnation of the Word, and the proper deity of Christ from the Scriptures. Notwithstanding the existence of the statement in St. Mark's gospel, "the Son knew not" the hour of his own second advent, the Unitarians find in this text a supposed inconsistency with the Son's omniscience, while the Church is satisfied with the vast body of testimony which teaches the Divine Son was incarnate in the temple of our Saviour's body. In like manner, none who understand the gospel (which makes prominent God's work toward man, not man's work toward God), will allow the plain sense of the whole Christian testimony on justification in Christ to be set aside by a single verse in the Epistle of James, in which he says that "we see how that a man is justified by works, and not by faith only." Such passages as these in Mark and James we know how to explain, but we do not derive from them the ruling sense which is to override and contradict all other Scripture.

Mr. White then gives us his credo as to this matter. "We hold, 1. That the general language of Scripture requires us to believe that the wicked will die, perish, be destroyed, in the literal sense of these words; 2. That there are no texts which, rightly interpreted, in the literal sense contradict this conclusion; while, thirdly, the system of redemption, taken as a whole, absolutely confirms the truth that none except those who are regenerate in Christ, will escape destruction or live forever."

He goes on to argue from man primeval, who was created outside Paradise, in a world of animals subject to the ancient law of death, bearing in his structure much of their likeness, and bearing also the image of his Maker. He was placed in Paradise with a view to trial for an endless life, conditional on the obedience of faith, but capable of death, like other animals, if he rebelled and aspired to independence as a god. He did so act, and so he was brought under the threatened curse of death, i. e., extinction of BEING. But redemption in Christ, and the inbreathing of the Holy Spirit, secures eternal life and delivers from extinction of life. This is spiritual death, and nothing else. Adam did not die on that day of his transgression. His whole posterity was bound up in the covenant, and sinned and fell in Adam, and so were "dead in trespasses and sins."

One is tempted, in quoting all this, to repeat the suggestive text, "In the day thou eatest thereof, dying, thou shall die."

Mr. White makes a great deal of the literal meaning of the threatenings of Scripture as to future punishment, which, "rightly translated," as "death, perishing; destruction, being slain," etc., are more numerous than any other form of warning. And, therefore, he says that the Scripture doctrine is that wicked men will be literally destroyed, or put to death in hell. He calls up modern authorities that the Greek word apollumi means to destroy, demolish, kill; so apolonto, in 1 Cor. 17, 18, else those who fell asleep in Christ were literally apolonto, annihilated. Other arguments are adduced from other texts.

Mr. White maintains that if his canon, and his obvious principle of interpretation be admitted, "it sets aside at once every species of Universalism, whether after Mr. Juke, or George Macdonald; and every modification of the doctrine of eternal suffering, including the strange dream of Mr. Birks of an inferior Paradise in Gehenna, for the solace of the damned."

I may not trespass longer. In truth, I have overstepped my intended bounds. But I bring this subject before your readers to indicate the developments of error and evil, and of the perils that threaten the Church of Christ. You will observe that Mr. White detests Universalism, and has naught but condemnatian for Socinianism. But, after all, his speculations tend to abolish hell, a Gehenna altogether. It is extinction that awaits the ungodly; they perish at once; they are blotted out of existence. Bad men would see consolation in such a doctrine. If there are no torments—if it is not a state of never-dying misery—if it is but extinction—it surely has the tendency to impenitence and hardness of heart. And in closing my analysis of Mr. White's plea, allow me to quote from Quesnel, when referring to Christ's words, "every sacrifice shall be salted with fire:"—"They are awful, indeed. Here may be seen the greatness, multiplicity, and eternity of the pains of the lost. They suffer without being able to die; they are burned without being consumed. They are sanctified without being sanctified—are salted of hell, as eternal victims of the Divine justice."

A LITTLE OF MY EXPERIENCE.

BY J. D. SHERIDAN.

BR. STORRS: I have read the HERALD OF LIFE with much interest, with pleasure, and I hope to some profit. My heart overflows with gratitude and love to God and the dear ones who are favoring the readers of the HERALD with their most excellent contributions; and particularly the editorial communications. As they reach me every week, they are like bread to the hungry soul, and wine to the drooping spirit.

Although I cannot indorse all the views of some of the writers, yet I must acknowledge that my views are entirely changed on the subject of the re-living of the wicked dead. I can say I now fully indorse the views of the Editor on that doctrine.

The very passages I did use to support the doctrine of the re-living of the wicked dead, I now find very convenient to prove the contrary. Above all things, I am most thankful for the word of life, and that God has put it into the hearts of some of his dear children to use the reason and talents he has so bountifully bestowed upon them, in searching for the true light of revelation, that he has handed down to us by the mouth of all his holy prophets, and at last by His own Son, and by his chosen apostles.

And yet, in these last days of moral darkness, the day of the Lord will overtake us as a "thief in the night," unless we use the reason that God has given us, with the prayer of faith, for the gift of the Holy Spirit to guide us in our search for the true light.

I have been sorely afflicted for these many years by sickness, trials and disappointments, and at the same time groping my way in darkness, without any good hope of a future life; have felt, many times, that the hand of God was laid very heavy upon me; and have sometimes desired that death might come and deliver me from my pain and trouble. But, bless the Lord, I feel that he has chastened me, not for his pleasure, but for my profit, and I feel to kiss the rod; and I desire to keep close to the hand that holds it. Yes, I feel from the very depth of my soul that God is love. And although I have rejected him until this my last hour, yet he has been patient with me and waited long for me to return.

I feel now to rejoice in that love that has provided a ransom for our guilt and from eternal death, which is the penalty for sin.

Although my former friends and neighbors forsake me, and cast out my name as vile, and mock, ridicule, and make derision of me, yet I feel that I have a friend who is able to deliver me out of every temptation.

Three Rivers is a beautiful little village of about 4,000 inhabitants, with seven different worshipping denominations; all trying to serve the Lord, but no two can agree as to form and creed; the poor are taxed to death to build and furnish so many different houses, and supplying them with the ministry. To me all this appears wrong; but I feel to take courage when I consider that the time is not far distant when "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice, with the voice together shall they sing; for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion."

And as I said before, there are here a goodly number who are seeking to serve the Lord; perhaps one-sixth of the whole population of the place; yet there are none of that number who are anxious, ready, or even willing to admit that Jesus is soon coming to restore all things, and set up his kingdom according to the promise. Nor do I much wonder when I see the strife between the different sects to outdo each other in erecting the most splendid edifices for worship, and each to retain the most popular minister; and the means that are made use of to obtain money to accomplish the object.

As I view the clouds opening to usher in the glorious King, my heart fills with joy mingled with sorrow; joy that the redeemed are soon to be gathered to a country where sin, sorrow and sickness will never be known; and sorrow, because so many of our fellow mortals, who are as good by nature as any of us, are determined to choose death rather than life.

I have scattered what tracts you sent me; and although I cannot report as good success as some of the brethren do, yet I trust some of the seed may have fallen on good ground, and in due time will spring up and bear much fruit. Your brother in Christ.

THREE RIVERS, Mich., April, 1870.

"I AM THE BREAD OF LIFE."

WHAT ambitious plans, what studying, what craft, what energy, what genius, everywhere seeking, pursuing, grasping for a name! A name that shall live on through ages. Though that name be infamy, men choose it rather than death.

To die and be forgotten! Who does not recoil from the thought! What have not men done to avoid this doom! Humanity cries out for a life to come. All, the high and the low, the young and the old, the strong and the weak have an insatiable longing for life. "If a man die, shall he live again?" is the question of all ages and all mankind. Fearful of the answer some have sought immortality in this world—to leave a name that shall not perish. They have sought in vain. The glory of the greatest grows dim in the distance. The righteous and the wicked take their rest together in oblivion. We have forgotten them as we in turn may be forgotten.

But listen: "I am the bread of life." Who? Christ, the Son of God. Is he powerful? He is, for all power shall be given to him. Is he true? He is more than true, he is truth. Has he knowledge? He knoweth all things.

He is "the bread" to famishing men; famishing for life; faint, weary, hopeless, dying, dying into darkness without hope of life. To such he is bread, the bread of life—life to come—life eternal—life beyond the grave. Not the lengthening out of this present state: not the echoing of a name whose owner once moved to bless or curse his race. But he is the bread of a better life, a renewal, a re-living of the man.

How worthless is all the immortality of this world to him who partakes of this bread of life. "I am the bread of life." Here is hope, here is rest, here is immortality. M.

BROOKLYN, L. I., May 1, 1870.

"MOONSHINE."

ELD. J. PARRY: Dear Br.: We did not apprehend quite as severe handling for an expression at the close of a brief article of objections to the age to come theory. We thank you, however, for giving a true quotation, which is this, "What about those Old Testament Scriptures which seem to have a bearing upon this subject? Just here we think lies the error; making the moon to give light to the sun."

The term "moonshine" is not found in my article, neither was the thought in my heart of such inference as your notice would seem to imply. Webster on this word says, "Moonshine, the light afforded by the moon; figuratively, show without substance." How could you think such a thing of me when using the primary and not the figurative expression? My expression was comparative only. Perhaps I misjudge and should accept the term as having reference only to my position, not yours. We study to avoid giving offense, and are sorry when any is taken. Trusting that love reigns in our hearts, although our ideas are a little different we let the matter pass.

The Old Testament we love and revere, and cheerfully accord to it all the importance attached to it by Christ and the apostles. But while we do this, we can only call it the glory of the moon (figuratively), which light (the literal) we believe all accord as borrowed, or a reflection of the (literal sun), when compared to the New Testament (or covenant), which is as the sun shining in its strength. As to Christ's injunction, "Search the Scriptures," etc., and also similar teachings elsewhere, the fact should be considered that the new covenant law was not as yet written out; the "schoolmaster" had not fully given place to the Great Teacher. "Hear ye him" had not acquired all its solemn force and obligation; the sun had not fully arisen, but soon the command goes forth, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."—Isa. lx. 1. As to "world-burning traditions," or any others, it is our highest ambition to heed the good apostolic injunction, "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word (our word), or our epistle."—2 Thess. ii. 14.

Another point. It is a fact that men receive just so much of the "Word" as literal or figurative as their judgment or inclination dictates; and no man can fully accept another's judgment for his own. We all have more or less error, held as truth in our ignorance; this is a necessity of our finite condition; but love, the love of God, the New Covenant law written in the heart or mind, the affections, should so abound as to moke us feel as did Abraham toward Lot—"We be brethren."—Gen. xiii. 8. Yours, affectionately,

A. BOYNTON.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y., May, 1870.

JOSEPH BARKER.

THIS is the man who chiefly figured in the Convention in Hartford, Conn., in 1853, then a deist, but immediately after became an atheist. It was in that Convention we stood up in Defence of the Bible, and our Defence is now published as No. 2 of our "Campaign Documents."

We find the following article in "The Christian," London, Fngland, of March 3. We give it to our readers, some of whom will be interested in it:

FROM UNBELIEF TO FAITH.

A Glance at the History of Joseph Barker.

"I was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea which were in Christ; but they had heard only, that he which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed; and they glorified God in me."—GAL. I. 22-24.

It ought not to surprise us if, from time to time, we hear of the recantation and conversion of those who have been prominent as enemies of the cross of Christ. It ought not to surprise us if such changes occur, for most of these men are the subjects of earnest and persevering prayer. Their career is often anxiously watched by loving Christian hearts, and not unfrequently by Christian hearts attached to them by ties of nature; and by many a one their names are daily uttered in petitions offered to the Lord God of Israel. It ought not to surprise us, for the Lord's hand is not shortened now, any more than in the day when he who had been "a blasphemer, persecutor, and injurious," repented and found mercy.

On the other hand, it is not to be wondered at if men who have led the van in attacking Christianity, and opposing its ministers, are, subsequently to their conversion, for a season at all events, looked upon with doubt and received with hesitation. But such a course of conduct, though natural, is not right. The text which stands at the head of this article ought to be our guide, and the conduct of the Judæan Christians our model. If we see some prominent antagonist of the faith humbled and repentant; if, after a reasonable time has elapsed, we find such an one pursuing a steadfast course, and seeking, according to his ability, to serve the Lord Christ; if we find him separated from his former associations, and assaying to join himself to the disciplines; it is our duty, after the pattern of the early church, to receive him to our fellowship, and to accord him a good measure of our confidence. No comparison between the apostle of the Gentiles and any living man is intended to be urawn here; but we may fairly illustrate our meaning by a reference to Acts ix. Paul was desirous of joining himself to the church at Jerusalem, but they "were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple." His evil reputation stood in the way. The Christians were however satisfied when one testified of Paul that "the Lord had spoken to him, and that he had preached boldly in the name of Jesus." Am I not right therefore in saying that, if a man has been called of God, and has obeyed the call—has forsaken his former ways, and sought to acknowledge Christ as his Lord and Master—he is entitled to our credence and to our trust? These considerations naturally spring out of the subject on which I am writing, and they will doubtless help to remove some amount of prejudice which might otherwise exist in connection therewith.

The name of Joseph Barker will probably be new to many who read these pages, yet it is a name widely known in the north of England, as that of one who for many years held a position hostile to Christianity, and who was actively engaged in contending with its ministers, and denying its divine origin. He had originally been a minister in the Methodist New Connexion, but had passed by slow gradations to the extreme of unbelief, and to positive atheism. It was an absolute eclipse of faith. Yet God has been graciously pleased to bring back to Christian faith and Christian hope this man who had for long years been wandering in the darkness, and fighting against Him.

Of those dreary years and that sorrowful experience, he thus writes: "For years the worth of my life was well-nigh gone. I lived, because I felt I ought to live for the sake of those who were dear to me. But for myself, the light and joy of my life seemed gone forever. My existence was a long dark struggle with crushing destiny. Though naturally hopeful, I felt the bitterness of blank despair." And again, "The want of trust in God and a hope of immortality tends to darken earth, and to embitter life. When men are severed from God and Christ, and immortality, they suffer both in character and enjoyment. . . . We lost our trust in God, and our hope of immortality. And the heavens above grew dark, and the earth became a desolation. Life lost its value, and sorrow its consolation; and many and many a time we wished that we had never been born."

And this, be it borne in mind, is not a description drawn from the imagination; but it is thr record of the actual experience and feelings of one who had passed months and years in atheism. Nor can we suppose that the experience of other atheists differs from the one thus recorded. Then what a gloom must hang over the mind, and oppress the spirits of these aliens from the life of God! Already, and even here on earth, the "blackness of darkness" envelops them! Oh that this deep gloom may, in many more cases than that of Joseph Barker, be penetrated and dispelled by the rays of the Sun of Righteousness!

Mr. Barker, in writing to one of his old associates, speaks of his return to God in these striking words: "I see that the greatest errors of my life have resulted from a want of a better understanding of the teachings of Christ, and a largrr measure of his most beautiful and blessed spirit. I feel convinced that the Teacher and the teaching are divine; and I surrender myself to them with love, with reverence, and with devotion. I recognize in Jesus, as in days gone by, the 'brightness of the Father's glory,' the rich effulgence of eternal light, and of boundless everlasting love. And that is not all. A return to the religion of Jesus has made me happy—at times unspeakably happy. Account for it as you will, in bowing myself before God, in placing myself at the feet of Jesus, I experience emotions, delights, enjoyments, transports, to which for long, long years I have been a melancholy stranger."

It has always seemed to me that the crowning sorrow of one who has misled and misguided souls, must be the thought of how it fares with those who have accepted his teachings, followed his counsels, and drunk in his spirit, but who afterwards refuse to turn back to light and life with him. How many words he must wish unsaid! How many of his written lines he will, when dying, desire to blot! The only atonement he can make is by seeking every opportunity, as does Mr. Barker, to "preach the faith which once he destroyed."

"Ah, sir," said a poor shoemaker to me, at Victoria Hall, one Sunday morning, "Thomas Cooper was my false prophet; and he led me away from God." I was glad to be able to tell him that Mr. Cooper had come to a better mind, and was now seeking to serve Christ.

Joseph Barker goes on to say: "I do most heartily repudiate all that I ever wrote in an anti-Christian spirit, or of an anti-Christian tendency. I deplore my assaults on the churches. I believe the churches, notwithstanding their imperfections, to be the salt of the earth, the lights of the world, the warm and living heart of humanity. They are doing good, and I take my stand by their side, and hope to aid them in their efforts."

Mr. Barker has embodied his history in a book of considerable interest, entitled "Teachings of Experience; or, Lessons I have learned on my way through Life," to which volume I may, perhaps, at a future time revert.

J. R. C.

THE Lord hath told you what you should be doing till he come; wait and hasten, saith Peter, for the coming of your Lord. All is night that is here, in respect to ignorance and daily ensuing troubles . . . therefore sigh and long for the dawning of that morning, and the breaking of that day of the Son of man, when the shadows shall flee away. Persuade yourself that the King is coming. Read his letter sent before him—'Behold I come quickly.' Wait with the wearied night-watch, for the breaking of the eastern sky.—Samuel Rutherford.

"EVEN SO, COME LORD JESUS!"

IT was centuries ago, on that lonely Isle of Patmos, that the beloved Disciple uttered those sweet words: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." It was in response to the solemn watchword of Jesus Himself, "Surely I come quickly." It was God's Holy Spirit that inspired this affectionate prayer in the heart of the exiled Revelator, and again wafted it in incense before the throne of the Eternal. That Disciple, after beholding wondrous visions of the mighty future, and marking the course of time as events rolled on, closing up the Gentile age with the overthrow of the apostate kingdoms of the world, and the bringing in of a new and better dispensation, his heart was filled with love to the Saviour, and he longed for the triumph and reign of his blessed Lord: for he well knew that with the coming of that event wickedness should cease in the earth, and the glory of the Lord should cover it as the waters cover the deep.

Although eighteen centuries have nearly passed away since these words were first uttered; though many sorrows, trials, and disappointments have befallen God's holy watchers, during those long years, in their struggles to hold fast the "blessed hope;" though Jesus has not yet come in His glory; and though many are growing weary, and are saying, "My Lord delayeth His coming;" His coming is nevertheless certain, and we still say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

Yes, the Saviour will come, for He has promised it, and He never deceives. When He comes he will raise the sleeping saints, restore the earth to its Eden state, and reign with His people. Then will be commingled together in heavenly union, the voices of angelic hosts with those of the redeemed, praising God for His righteous judgments, and for bringing redemption to the world. But, oh what a fearful doom will be that of the wicked, who will then "call upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb!"

Dear reader, do you love Jesus? and if so, do you "love His appearing?" Are you praying to be accounted worthy to escape that hour of trial which is about to come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth? Do you expect to be a guest at the Marriage Supper, or will you be shut out with the unwatchful "foolish Virgins?" These are questions of intense moment for all; for "the day of the Lord is near, it hasteth greatly." "Blessed is he that watcheth." "The watchman said, 'The morning cometh, and also the night.'" Strange that morning and night should come together; but so it is—morning as bringing deliverance to the righteous, but night as bringing destruction upon the wicked. Solemn thought! Are we ready for these things? S. R.

—Prophetic Times.

THE CLOSING HOURS OF TIME.

ARE we really in the winding-up of our world's history? If so, what a solemn thought! All to be over so soon. Our work all to be closed up. A day of settlement to dawn. Yes, the scrutinizing eye of the Judge will then be turned with a searching glance upon us. Our past history of faithfulness, or unfaithfulness, will then reappear, to approve or condemn us. Our hearts, filled with heavenly zeal, or chilling luke-warmness, will then decide our claims to the felicities of a celestial paradise; for we shall then continue "holy still," or "filthy still."

Are we indeed nearing a day of such magnitude? Are we truly living in the closing hours of time? We cannot evade the conclusion that such is the case. Then what is our duty? If the Master is about to return, how should we improve these closing hours? If we have been remiss in duty in days gone by, should we not begin now to do the will of Christ? If we have lived prayerless lives, let us begin to visit the throne of grace, and seek pardon for past indifference, and strength for time to come. Let us go to work for God, and pluck men as brands from the burning. The hours fly—will we improve them? The closing hours of time are upon us; shall we squander them in idleness? Oh! sound out the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" and do it with devoted hearts and earnest minds.—Selected.

MATRIMONY.—The daughter of Themistocles the Athenian general being asked of him in marriage, stated that he preferred an honest poor man to a rich one of an indifferent character, and gave for his reason that in the choice of a son-in-law he would much rather have merit without riches than riches without merit.

VARIOUS ITEMS.

"THE JUST SHALL LIVE BY FAITH."

"This has been understood two ways: 1. That the just or righteous man cannot live a holy and useful life, without exercising continual faith in our Lord Jesus: which is strictly true: for He only, who has brought him into that state of salvation, can preserve him in it, and he stands by faith. 2. It is contended by some able critics, that the words of the original text should be pointed thus: 'O de dikaios ek piseos zesetai. The just by faith, shall live,' that is, he alone that is justified by faith shall be saved; which is also true, as it is impossible to get salvation in any other way. This last meaning is probably the true one, as the original text in Hab. ii. 4 speaks of those who believed the declarations of God when the Chaldeans beseiged Jerusalem; and having acted conformably to them, they escaped with their lives."—A. Clarke on Rom. i. 17.

This latter statement of the case is in harmony with the teachings of our LIFE-GIVER. He said to the Jews, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever. . . . As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me."

NOT DEAD BUT SLEEPETH.

"The maid is not dead, but sleepeth." Upon this passage Clarke remarks as follows: "That is, she is not dead so as to continue under the power of death; but shall be raised from it as a person is from natural sleep."

In the same sense Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are not dead but living, unto God, for they shall rise from the dead.

THE LIFE . . . IS IN THE BLOOD.

"Let us now turn to Leviticus. I read there, 'The life of the flesh is in the blood.' Where did Moses get this information? Were it possible to ask the most accomplished surgeons of the days of Esculapius, they could give you no information. But every enlightened and intelligent surgeon of modern times will tell you that in the blood there is a living principle, and that the life of the body is derived from it. Hence the ablest medical men, when called to a patient, knows that the last thing he will do is to bleed his patient, because he takes away the capital on which he works, and on which he can draw for that patient's recovery. Nothing but the direst necessity will compel him; because modern physiological and medical science has demonstrated that Moses, in Leviticus, stated what was an actual truth, wherever he got it, and however he learned it, that the life is in the blood."—Rev. J. Cumming of London. Reply to Bishop Colenso.

"THE BLOOD IS THE SOUL."

The following is copied from Kitto's Cyclopedia, under the heading, Blood: "In Gen ix. 4, where the use of animal food is allowed, it is first absolutely forbidden to eat 'flesh with its soul, its blood;' which expression, were it otherwise obscure, is explained by the mode in which the same terms are employed in Deut. xii. 23. In the Mosaic law the prohibition is repeated with frequency and emphasis, although it is generally introduced in connection with sacrifices. . . . In cases where the prohibition is introduced in connection with the lawful and unlawful articles of diet, the reason which is generally assigned in the text is, that 'the blood is the soul;' and it is ordered that it be poured on the ground like water. But where it is introduced in reference to the portions of the victims which were to be offered, then the text, in addition to the former reason insists that 'the blood expiates by the soul'"—Lev. xxii. 11, 12.

THE SOUL.

Under the above, in Cruden's Concordance, we extract the following:

"The Scripture indeed ascribes to beasts a soul, a spirit, life and respiration, which may be a second acceptation of the word as in Gen. i. 24, 'Let the earth bring forth the living creature,' in Hebrew, 'the living soul.' So in Lev. xvii. 11, 'The life,' in Hebrew, 'the soul,' 'of the flesh is in the blood.' And in Eccl. iii. 21, 'Who knoweth the spirit of the beast that goeth downward.' This soul is the spirit, the breath, which is the principle of animal life, and which is common to men and brutes. . . .

"II. Soul is taken for the whole person, both soul and body. . . .

"III. It is taken for the life of man. . . .

"IV. It is taken sometimes for death or a dead body. Num. ix. 6, 'Some were defiled by the dead body of a man,' in Hebrew, by the soul of a man. And in Num. vi. 6, 'He shall come at no dead body,' in Hebrew, dead soul." . . .

Neither Clarke, Cumming, Kitto, or Cruden held that man is not dual, yet all of them have expressed ideas as above quoted, that are in harmony with our views that man is a unit. The oxygen of the air gives vitalizing power to the blood, and the blood is thus made the life of the flesh. Christ poured out his soul unto death, and by the new principle of life which he received from the Father he rose from the dead, and that same life principle is now imparted unto all who receive Christ.

Yours, in Christ,
F. H. BURBANK.

PHILADELPHIA, May 2, 1870.

THERE is no real use in riches, except it be in the distribution; the rest is but conceit.—Bacon.

TESTAMENTARY charities are no better than dead sacrifices.—Sherlock.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 11, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE CONFLICT ADVANCING.

THE LIFE VIEWS have awakened attention in every direction. Not only Methodists have shown signs of moving against our views, but the Presbyterians and Congregationalists. We should rejoice if all our opposers would show the same candid and Christian spirit as is manifested in the following article which we take from "The Advance" of April 21.

We append notes:

ANNIHILATION.

The doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked is receiving increased attention in Great Britain and in America, in connection with the discussion of future retribution. The tendency to adopt it arises from the desire of certain good men to find, if possible, a middle ground between orthodoxy and universalism. Shuddering at the idea of eternal punishment, yet clearly perceiving that the Bible does not teach the doctrine of universal salvation, they hope to relieve both their feelings and their critical difficulties by a strictly literal interpretation of the predicted doom of the impenitent. We credit the benevolence and sincerity of such brethren; we appreciate their natural desire to escape the speculative and sentimental difficulties attending the church doctrine, and their purpose at the same time to be loyal to the declarations of Scripture. Furthermore we concede a degree of plausibility to their position, both abstractly and exegetically viewed. It may be regarded as not unreasonable in itself, that those who have utterly failed to secure the true object of being—that which alone dignifies and gives worth to immortality—should perish out of being. The justice of such a doom is not to be disputed. (1.) Also many Scriptural expressions, taken singly and interpreted literally, would easily convey the same idea. It may be admitted, too, that the influence of this opinion will be less pernicious than that of universalism, as presenting more to deter men from a life of sin, and to make them realize the necessity of the salvation which Christ has purchased with his blood. But does the doctrine of annihilation escape the felt difficulties? Is it not encumbered with some peculiar to itself? Is it surely supported either by reason, or Scripture? Let us see.

Abstractly viewed, it as little harmonizes with the ideal perfection of a divine universe as do other theories. If it seem an imperfection in the orthodox scheme, that sin and suffering should abide forever in the small remnant of sinners consisting of the incorrigibly wicked shut up in the prison house of hell; (2.) and if it be equally an imperfection in the universalist scheme, that it admits the entrance and long continuance of sin and suffering under the government of an almighty, benevolent and infinitely pure God; is it not as plain an imperfection, ideally, that God should create a portion of his moral universe only to obliterate it? (3.) Would it not wear the appearance of a failure in his plans as a Creator, were he compelled to annihilate millions of the souls which he has made? (4.) Would it not wear the aspect of weakness in his moral government, if his only resource in the management, of persistent rebels was, to blot them from existence? (5.) It seems to us that no special gain accrues to this scheme on the ideal side. Moreover, so far as human reasoning can fathom the depths of the nature and methods of God's eternal moral government, has any man a right to say, that the wisest and most efficient, and therefore in the end the most benevolent plan for the control and safe education of a universe forever increasing by the introduction of new races, would be the annihilation of the early rebels, rather than their perpetual condign punishment? To us the affirmation would seem a vain arrogance of wisdom, in which no man can be justified. (6.) We come, then, to the testimony of God as to the fact, given in the words of Scripture. What says the Bible?

As the Bible uses human language we must understand its words in their ordinary acceptation, as the original readers would, except when modified necessarily by some peculiarity in the subject or circumstances. (7.) The claim that such words as "die," "destroy," "perish," and the corresponding nouns, "death," "destruction," "perdition" and the like, naturally and inevitably convey the idea of the annihilation of the being of the wicked, will not stand this test. (8.) Even the heathen did not use the word death in that sense, for they had some idea of another life to which death was the passage; while the Jews in our Saviour's time held definitely to a future existence, and to the eternal punishment of the wicked, as Josephus clearly testifies. (9.) Hence Christ and his apostles knew that their words would be understood in harmony with that idea, and intended that they should be. (10.) And even were we not to press this historic usage of the words in question, a similar significance arises from the ordinary use of these expressions in all ages, and among all people, based upon universal facts and ideas. Life and death are opposite and correlative terms, each defining the other. Ascertain what is meant by life, and the opposite is death. (11.) Now nothing is more certain than that the word life, with reference to man, early acquired, and has always retained, a secondary meaning, which has become as common as the primary. (12.) As being has no explanation or value except as it is the condition of well-being, the latter has become the full and emphatic idea of life, and the word is ordinarily so used alike by philosophers, poets and peasants. Life thus means not bare existence, but active, potential, intelligent, sentient, joyous, holy existence, such as has meaning and worth. (13.) The poet well says,

> "That man may last, but never lives,
> Who much receives, but nothing gives."

A man's "daily life" means not his breaths but his acts; not his being so much as his quality of being. The Bible so uses the word constantly. (14.) Paul writes, "For now ye live, if ye stand fast in the Lord." "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." This usage comports with the true conception of the soul as made to know, love and enjoy God; which experience, and nothing other or less, is its life. Surely the promise of eternal life to believers means unspeakably more than endless existence. (15.)

This being so, death, the correlative (which in all language has likewise acquired a popular use in a secondary sense of total ruin) naturally means in application to man not the cessation of existence, but the cessation of holy and happy existence; the loss of all that makes being valuable to its possessor. Hence in the New Testament death often means the ruin of character; as "dead in trespasses and sins;" "let the dead bury their dead;" "my son was dead and is alive again." As the opposite of the eternal purity, honor, and bliss of the righteous it is used to denote the eternal vileness, infamy and misery of the wicked. (16.) Paul clearly sets forth the opposite destinies, in this view, when he says, Rom. ii. 6, 8, "Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality—eternal life; but unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness—indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish." No word here of annihilation, but only of suffering. (17.)

The same may be affirmed of the words "destroy," "perish" and the like. The Bible uses them constantly to denote ruin as to all purposes of use, where annihilation is out of the question; as in the bursted bottles which are said to "perish," the "lost"-sheep, and the "lost" prodigal; none of which ceased to be. So also the declaration of Christ that he "came to save that which was lost." In the original Greek the word is the same as is applied to the perishing and destruction of the wicked. (18.) So the demons, who used it at the time, when they said to Christ, "Art thou come to destroy us?" explained their meaning when they said, on a similar occasion: "Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" (19.) This is made evident, also, by Christ's words: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment;" where the phrase "go away into" as well as the word "punishment" [kollasis] refer to the process and experience of penal infliction, which is described as eternal. In the only other instance of its use in the New Testament, 1 John iv. 18, kollasis is translated "torment." (20.) The idea is thus kindred to that suggested by the fearful picture in John's vision, in which the purpose conveyed by the symbol of fire was not to consume but to inflict pain: "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever." (21.) Scriptural language seems incompatible with the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked. (22.)

We have not even outlined our thoughts on this subject, having omitted all mention of many arguments bearing upon the matter; but this will suffice for the present. Some other time we may return to the topic. Those who wish to see the question ably treated in full, we refer to Prof. Bartlett's "Life and Death Eternal," published by the Boston Am. Tract Society. (23.)

Notes on the Foregoing.

1. This is a grand admission. Does "a just God," who is also "a Saviour" [Isa. xlv. 21] require more than justice? If the demands of justice are fully met, are we to infer something far worse is to be inflicted by the God of love?

2. Does our brother admit that the lost are a "small remnant" of our race? If so, what shall we do with the words of Jesus, "Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it?"—Matt. vii. 13, 14. If we must have the doctrine of eternal torture, let us have it in all its horrors.

3. "Is thine eye evil because I am good?"—Matt. xx. 15. God never created a "moral" being "only to obliterate" it: no such idea is connected with the Life views. The present life is an inestimable blessing; mainly, because it may be improved to secure an eternal life with all its fulness of bliss, to continue unendingly; and it is no fault of God or His administration that men do not thus improve this life and God's abounding love to all.

4. God is not "compelled to annihilate millions of the souls which he has made." He has set Life and Death before men, and asks, most pathetically, "Why will you die?" If moral beings choose death, they go to the dust from the constitution of their nature, for "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. iii. 19. The Creator needs not to exercise power, and is under no compulsion to do so for the annihilation of the sinner. He has only to deny him "His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised him from the dead," [Eph. i. 19, 20], and the sinner "remains in the congregation of the dead," [Prov. xxi. 16]; he "sowed to his flesh," and of his flesh he reaps "corruption;" [Gal. v. 8] no life; he is left among the dead because he died having not that Spirit in him which "raised up Christ from the dead," [Rom. viii. 11]. God is not "compelled" to use any power to keep the sinner in death or to put him there. He has only to refuse to use His power to make him alive when dead, and the sinner is "annihilated" as a natural and inevitable result.

5. We need not repeat our remarks in the previous note, but will ask our brother a counter question—"Would it not wear the aspect of weakness in God's moral government, if his only resource in the management of" unreconciled "rebels was, to" inflict on them eternal torture, and a lack of wisdom in Him to fail in devising means to prevent such a catastrophe to the creatures His own will gave being? When our highly esteemed brother has answered this question, he will find one to his own.

6. "To us the" negative "would seem" equally "a vain arrogance of wisdom," etc. If the idea of controlling "new races" by having before them living and visible objects of eternal torture, Adam had not the best chance, nor have his posterity, thus far, been thus blessed! Does our friend know any stronger motive to obedience than love? Love begets love, if any thing can do it. If that fails, the case is hopeless; for hatred and cruelty may give a slavish fear, but never did and never can beget love or a cheerful obedience.

7. We accept this statement, and on it we are perfectly willing to meet all our opposers and risk the issue. We demand of them the proof of inherent immortality by any "Bible use of human language." Till they have established this point, all their attempts to set aside "words in their ordinary acceptation" must fail to convince the judicious and thoughtful student of the Bible.

8. We think it will "stand the test." But we shall see.

9. That "heathen" men did "use the word death in that sense," Archbishop Whately has clearly shown. In speaking of some of the "wisest of the heathen philosophers," he says:

> They imagined that the souls of men, and of all other animals, were not created by God, but were themselves parts of the divine mind, from which they were separated, when united with bodies; and to which they would return and be reunited, on quitting those bodies: so that the soul, according to this notion, was immortal both ways; that is, not only was to have no end, but had no beginning; and was to return after death into the same condition in which it was before our birth: a state without any distinct personal existence, or consciousness. It was the substance of which the soul is composed, that [according to this doctrine] was eternal, rather than the soul itself; which, as a distinct being, was swallowed up and put an end to. Now it would be ridiculous to speak of any consolation, or any moral restraint, or any other effect whatever, springing from the belief of such a future state as this, which consists in becoming, after death, the same as we were before birth. To all practical purposes, it is the same thing as annihilation."—Scripture Revelations Concerning a Future State: pp. 16 to 26, English edition.

The Jews were divided in their opinions on the subject. If some held to eternal punishment, in the sense of eternal torture, others did not. Josephus we suppose to be of the former class, and doubtless speaks for his class. The Jews, as a body, did not believe the doctrine. But suppose they did, they also believed in the transmigration of souls, and because the Saviour never once explicitly contradicted that notion, shall we conclude it is true?

10. To say that "Christ and his apostles knew that their words would be understood in harmony with" Jewish notions, "and intended that they should be," seems to us "a vain arrogance of wisdom" in the face of the fact that Christ warned his apostles to "beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees."—Matt. xvi. 6, 12. The Pharisees believing in eternal torments to some, and the Sadducees denying the resurrection of any one.

11. The last two sentences are in perfect harmony with the Life views, and we accept them.

12. Our friend here admits our premises. The word life has its "primary" meaning. Will he dispute but that its primary sense is the extinction of a living existence? We presume not. We admit it has "acquired a secondary meaning." Thus far then we are agreed on this point.

13. "Life thus means not bare existence," i. e., in its "secondary" sense. Very true. But does it not necessarily include existence, even a living existence? That is the question to be met.

14. That "the Bible so uses the word" sometimes, we admit; but that it does so "constantly," [i. e., invariably], we do not admit, and trust to be able to show our brother his mistake before we are through.

15. All this may be admitted. If "the promise of eternal life to believers means unspeakably more than endless existence," does it not embrace and include eternal existence? If not, then his existence may come to an end, and there be no violation of promise. Will not our candid brother be compelled to admit that eternal existence is in the promise? And if so, must not the term life inevitably be used in its primary sense in this promise? So it seems to us; while we fully agree with him that the phrase, eternal life, embraces "unspeakably more than eternal existence." Yet that fact is made evident by other statements and promises in the Bible. If the phrase stood alone, unconnected with other promises, who could prove that it involved unmixed enjoyment? But as there are "great and precious promises" given unto believers of no more sorrow, pain or death, it settles the fact that the believer not only will have an endless existence, but that it will be one of unmingled pleasure.

16. That the term death has a secondary sense, we admit; and that in the New Testament it sometimes "means ruin of character," we also admit; but there must be an evident necessity for adopting the secondary sense. Will our brother pretend it has this sense, when it said that Christ tasted "death for every man"—"was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death:" (Heb. ii. 9); "that through death;" (verse 14); "that by means of death for the redemption," etc., (chap. ix. 15); "being made conformable to his death," (Phil. iii. 10); "became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross;" (Phil. ii. 8), and a multitude of like expressions—will he say these come in the category of the "secondary sense?" Were such expressions used "to denote vileness, infamy and misery?" Do they indicate "the opposite of the eternal purity," etc? Our brother will not, dare not assume such a position. Then death is used mainly even in the New Testament, in its primary sense of the literal cessation of living existence; consequently life, its "correlative, naturally means" the presence of living existence.

17. "No word here about annihilation." No, nor about an "immortal soul" or "deathless spirit." "But," says our Br., "only of suffering." Mark well, no word here about "eternal suffering;" no, nor about any suffering in a future state; not one such word did Paul ever utter. If our brother can find one let him bring it forward.

18. That all the terms spoken of, are used in the Bible, at times in a secondary sense, we admit; but that they are "constantly" (i. e. invariably) so used is not admitted. "Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked?"—Gen. xviii. 23. "I do bring a flood of waters . . . to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life . . . and every thing that is in the earth shall die."—Gen. vi. 17. "All flesh died . . . all in whose nostrils was the breath of life . . . died; and every living substance was destroyed . . . both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl . . . they were destroyed . . . and Noah only remained alive and they that were with him in the ark."—Gen. vii. 21–23. Here we have some of the terms spoken of; and can there be any other sense of the words than the primary ones?

But take one more text in the same connection. "I will destroy man whom I have created," etc.—Gen. vi. 7. Whatever goes to make up the work of creation, in regard to man, God says, He will destroy him. If, therefore, man was part flesh and part spirit, or had a created soul, it is all embraced and returns to its primtiive state. Such is the threatened destruction for sin.

19. So far as the testimony of "demons" is concerned, Christ commanded them to "hold their peace:" that is, He forbade their speaking, and He would not accept their testimony, whether it was true or false; and we, following His example, exclude all such testimony; it is both worthless and pernicious; so we say to all such, "Hold thy peace;" you are no witness in the case.

20. Our Br. finds but two instances where kollasis occurs in the New Testament. One of them certainly does not relate to the wicked, but to imperfect believers, who for the lack of perfect love are unhappy—"Fear," saith the loving disciple, "hath kolasin. He that feareth is not made perfect in love."

The rendering of the word torment, by our translators, does not prove that to be its true sense. That is one sense of the term, but it is not its only sense nor its primary one. Its first sense is punishment; but the nature of the punishment has to be determined by the general tenor of the Scriptures on the subject in hand. That the punishment whatever it may be, is eternal we shall not now dispute. The question simply is, What is the nature of the punishment? The term kolasis does not determine that; for the word has also the sense of "cutting;" hence "cutting off" is one of its legitimate significations; and we maintain that relates to life, its "correlative;" so that the true sense of the text is, "These shall go to the eternal cutting off of life; but the righteous unto life eternal." "Death is the wages of sin." Such is the uniform testimony of the Bible, and no system can be allowed to make death as a penalty for sin have a secondary sense. Truth and justice require, that the penalty for transgression be stated in language which can admit of no other construction. Not to do this is to mock the subjects of law, and to render justice uncertain if not impossible.

If our opposers would make their "secondary" theory put on a logical dress, let them first prove that the nature of man is such, that it is impossible for the sentence to be executed literally, or according to the primary meaning of the term death. This they can only do by proving man to be inherently or by creation immortal. This they can never do by the Bible, and all attempts to do so, utterly fail them. What authority then have they for employing the term death, and like terms, when used as expressive of the doom of the ungodly in a secondary sense? Clearly, none at all. The penalty of the divine law, as a finality, is death—extinction of living existence: nothing more and nothing less.

21. As with all other theories which fail of proof from the literal sense of the language of the Bible, the advocates of eternal torture resort to the symbols of Revelation. This only shows the defencelessness of their theory. Does our estimable friend of "The Advance," really believe the devil of Rev. xx. 10, is the veritable theological devil? If so, must not "the beast," in the same "lake of fire," be a literal beast? Then we ask, What sins has this beast committed to be thus eternally tormented? Symbols are "edged tools" dangerous to handle; and we think no cause is strengthened by a resort to the symbolical representations of the Book of Revelation, which is not first clearly proved by the plain and literal testimony of the other inspired writings; and COCHRAN (a Presbyterian) in his exposition of Revelation, though a believer in a spirit-devil, has well said, that the idea of a spirit-devil in that Book has played the devil with its interpretation. We may not have used his exact words, but we have given his exact sense, which was, that no man can ever understand that Book who contends that the devil therein is the spirit-devil.

22. So it doubtless "seems" to our brother and we respect his opinion, though entirely dissenting from it. To us, "Scriptural language seems" utterly "incompatible with," any other view of the fate of incorrigible sinners. Here we quote the language of Rev. T. M. Post, D.D. He says, "God has spoken to man. He has spoken then according to the laws of human language, and it is to be interpreted according to the laws of human speech."—"Immortality: the Argument from Scripture."

God said to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die . . . Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Genesis. "The wages of sin is death."—Rom. vi. 23. Now interpret this language according to the laws of human speech, in human legislation, and see if it embraces any suffering only so much as is unavoidable in carrying the penalty of death into execution. The extinction of living existence is clearly the idea, according to the laws of human speech; nothing more or less; it extinguishes the criminal; call it annihilation if you please; it ends his life—his literal life.

23. We can afford to advertise the work of Prof. Bartlett, as we have no fears of any arguments that a mortal man can produce against the Scripture testimony of man's natural mortality, and "the wages of sin" to such as die in their sins.

A CORPOREAL RESURRECTION.

THE following paragraph, showing the legitimate tendency of the heathen doctrine of the immortality of the soul, we copy from a Sabbath School book published by the American Tract Society:

The body is felt to be an incumbrance to the soul, hindering it in its noblest occupation, and contributing nothing to its most elevated pleasures. So far from the soul being incapable of happiness if detached from the body, it is actually its union with the body, which to all appearance, detains it from happiness. Even now the soul is often able to rise above the body, to detach itself, for awhile, from matter, and soar into regions which it feels to be more its home than this earth. And when compelled to return from so splendid an excursion, there is a sentiment of regret that it must still tabernacle in flesh; and it is conscious of longing for a day when it may finally abandon its perishable dwelling. Thus there is nothing of a felt necessity for the reunion of the soul to the body, to guide us in expecting the corporeal as well as the spiritual resurrection.

If the body is such an "incumbrance" to the soul, as this writer assumes, "hindering it in its noblest occupations," and in fact, "detains it from happiness," what an immense affliction God has heaped upon us by creating this mortal clog! Can it be possible that death is a blessed deliverer—a boon of mercy—an angel of grace—to free us from our earthly imprisonment in this tenement of clay, and yet God has created man with an instinctive dread of its approach? Is it true that death is such a gracious friend, when the Bible everywhere presents it as a fearful enemy, whom Christ will utterly destroy at his second advent?

God's word furnishes us no such light as is here given to the world by popular theology. The Scriptures say nothing about an immortal soul, and it is entirely silent regarding the existence of a deathless spirit, or an immaterial entity of any character that survives the dissolution of the body. Let the members of the American Tract Society show the contrary if they can. They have been educated, just as they are trying to educate the rising generation, to believe that this assumption is founded in the Scriptures. But do they not subject themselves to great condemnation by instilling this fable of the soul's immortality into the minds of the youth when they have treated with silent contempt the repeated demands which have been respectfully made for a single passage of Scripture that sustains it?

Again: If the soul "is conscious of longing for a day when it may finally abandon its perishable dwelling," then assuredly as this writer asserts, "there is nothing of a felt necessity for a reunion of the soul to the body." Therefore the legitimate tendency of this doctrine is to destroy all interest in the second coming of Christ, and the bodily resurrection "at the last day," which was the great beacon-light of the primitive church, and which has been the comforting hope of His people through all ages. All the consolation in the great plan of God to raise the dead by and through a resurrected Christ to be raised "in incorruption," and "in glory,"—and be "fashioned like unto His glorious body," is ruthlessly swept from us by this immortal soul heresy. But thank God the glowing light of the primitive church regarding man's nature and destiny, is breaking upon the world, and even though men "love darkness rather than light," it is soon destined to dispel the gross darkness of heathen theology. W. H. S.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May, 1870.

PATIENCE.

"FOR ye have need of patience that after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise."—Heb. x. 36. "In your patience possess ye your souls."—Luke xxi. 19. "But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." —Jas. ii. 14. "Be long patient, or, suffer with long patience [mar.], unto the coming of the Lord."—Jas. v. 7. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them which dwell upon the earth."—Rev. iii. 10.

The graces of the Spirit seem of two kinds active and passive; patience partakes most of the latter. Action would appear to be the preparatory work for the development of Christian character; a sort of day labor to be succeeded by a night of rest. These two seasons are not less important in the moral than in the physical economy. After a long day of toil and anxiety, Israel reached the Red Sea; here, human effort being of no avail, the command is, "stand still and see the salvation of God." This includes a quieting of mind and spirit, a resting of faith as well as a physical one.

Our kind and loving Father, knows when we ought to work, and when to rest, but as it is a faith and not a sight life, we are to live, our times of rest, or inaction, are appointed just at such times as work would seem to be the most important, the times of greatest peril! God wishes all the glory of our salvation, so he couples the greatest patience, passiveness, rest on our part, with the greatest deliverances and conquests. The three Hebrews fell down bound and helpless into the furnace of fire, and lo, their fetters fell off and they walked with God's angel unharmed by the raging element.

Another thing to induce patience under trial or affliction of any kind, is this rule: cost regulates valuation; we prize things by contrast; labor makes rest sweet. "Our sorrows here will only make us richer there, when we arrive at home." How? By contrast. Will this life's conflicts ever be forgotten? Nor will the contrast ever cease; then shall the poet's words be truthful foreyer! Be encouraged, be calm, be patient, ye tempted, tossed one; for every pang of sorrow, compound interest forever awaits you, "just over there." A. BOYNTON.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y., May, 1870.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND.

BR. STORRS: On the 28th and 29th ult., the Rev. J. Philip Bishop and J. G. Schaff, who lately withdrew from the United Brethren Church, addressed the people of this city on the true nature and destiny of man. Owing to the inclemency of the weather the first evening, the attendance was not very large, but the next evening quite a number of persons were present, among whom I noticed some of the ministers of the city. The people seemed surprised to hear that "Man is mortal," and that eternal life is a gift, and can only be obtained through Christ and a resurrection from the dead. We hope the visit of these brethren may result in much good, and lead many to see the truth as it is, and to throw aside their prejudices and believe what God hath spoken, rather than man. The number of Life Believers here is small and of course we are subjected to persecutions and trials; yet amid these persecutions we can rejoice, earnestly hoping that believers everywhere will pray for the promulgation of the truth in this section. Yours in the hope of eternal life, through Christ the LIFE-GIVER.

C. H. ROBERTSON.

May 4, 1870.

NO RESURRECTION FOR THE WICKED

KEEP firing away brethren, for the truth seems to cause a fluttering; or, in other words, to disturb the minds of our brethren of the other view. We heard an Advent Br. preach a funeral discourse a few days since. He dwelt on the state of the dead. Here he was all right; "the dead know not anything," etc., were quoted. But the resurrection seemed to get him befogged. He quoted, "If the Spirit which raised up Jesus from the dead," etc., "Many that are in their graves shall awake," and a number of verses from 1 Cor. 15, about the sowing of the grain; the germ, etc., seemed to be aware he was only proving the re-living of a privileged class; and as he said nothing definite as to the future of the wicked, whether they had a resurrection or not, the inference might be, in fact was hinted by some, "Universal salvation." Future torment, of however short duration, is becoming unpopular; and not only so, but irreconcilable to thinking men with the great truth, "GOD is love." Universalism or Deism is the result, unless the Life views are enforced and embraced. This we seek to do, especially with sinners; it stills them directly. A. BOYNTON.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y., May, 1870.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE: I want you to say to that dear brother that sent me the package of tracts on "A BIBLE CONTRAST," that I am very thankful. I have perused it with interest, and have embraced every opportunity in circulating them where I trust good will result. Our opposers are fast receding. Truth is getting the upper hand. The dear HERALD is growing better and better every week. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

If we had the means, Br. Thorne's Rich tract should be born at once, so as to enter the battle-field with the rest of God's little evangelists. And there is Br. Spencer's review of Br. Sheldon's mortal resurrection theory would be the next on the list of Campaign Documents. We wonder how it is that they can't see how completely they are answered and put to flight whenever they undertake to fire a gun. But their theory is fast sinking. They are trying hard to stop up the holes our heavy artillery is making in their craft. But sink it must, and sink it will, for the Life boat carries too many guns for the whole fleet of ships arrayed against her. Every time she fires a broadside she hits the mark.

Brethren, cheer up, for we are sure of a complete victory sooner or later. The Lord God is on our side as the Commander-in-chief, and the Lord Jesus Christ, our elder Brother, for our Captain; therefore we have no fears but He will guide the Life boat clear through into the haven of eternal and unending glory. Praise God, I feel happy while writing.

Now let me entreat our brethren who are on board the old mortal resurrection ship to come on board the Life boat, for the breakers are just ahead, and soon you will be dashed upon the sand-bar and shoals a wreck. We say, therefore, come on board. May the Lord help. Amen.

Your brother, in hope of eternal life, when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

GRAFTON, Ill., April 25, 1870.

FROM W. F. GARDNER.

BR. STORRS: To-day I am half way in my eightieth year. I have written you a number of times; this is the 15th. Some have found you; some I know have not. I am supplying the HERALD alternately to three or four of my friends, with tracts from Br. Wolcott; so I am expecting to have the pleasure of sending one or two subscribers next month.

I had the pleasure of a visit from Br. Matthias the first part of January, on his return to Kansas from New York.

Dear Brother: As we understand it, the church, as a whole, is in the dark, partly, if not mainly, because 'tis a politician. As we learn Bible, no man can understand it aright until he gives up country, government, party and vote, and church as well, because they are corrupt (Rev. xviii. 4), command God's people to come out. The most of those claiming to be Adventists are holding on to the fables received in the churches. The "Crisis" men here would not hear Br. M. because he would not teach the resurrection of the wicked dead.

We say all such papers as advocate or tolerate politics are doing more hurt than good. We say a political Christian is a misnomer. A political Adventist is worse than none.

Dear Brother, the hour of Rey. xiv. 7 is Daniel's "time of the end," 40 years, commencing 1843, they reach to 1883; hence we say, there are 13 years to come.

The war of Rev. xii. 7 was between Paganism and Papacy; the Roman emperor on one side and Michael (the Pope) on the other.

We find eleven names applied to the Pope; how many more we know not. Rev. xii. 7, he is Michael; chap. xx. he is called Angel. The first part of chap. xx., as we said years ago, is a recapitulation of the war of chap. xii. The Pope did absorb the political government, and held it in durance vile 1000 years; the Reformation was the means of shortening the days, which were 1000 years after the commencement of Papal rule in 538. The thrones of verse 4 are those that Dan. vii. 9 saw "cast down."

Not the souls, but the Pope and Catholic church, professedly lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

"The rest of the dead," of verse 5 are the emperor and the ten kings, whose thrones are mentioned in the verse previous.

Verse 5, "This is the first resurrection." We say this word is derived from the verb rise of 1 Thess. iv. 16, and means the same thing; nothing more, nothing less.

In much love, yours, waiting for the "LIFE-GIVER" in '83.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29, 1870. New No. 1,432 K st.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BR. STORRS: My last for the HERALD OF LIFE, was on the first of January. At that time I expected to have communicated again long before this, but my position since then has been a trying one. I left this place on the 14th of Jan., and went two hundred miles further west to visit other relatives. Out there it was given me, in the behalf of Christ not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake. They had made up their minds that my faith was a horrible one, and so laid their plans to get me off my foundation in one way, if not in another. So they put me through a hot and long continued furnace, which for the time then present was not joyous but grievous; still I trust it has afterward yielded the peaceable fruit of righteousness. Their infidels are respectable; we are made as the filth of the world, the offscouring of all things unto this day.

We have to be brought into different and trying conditions in order to understand and appreciate different portions of God's word. In the midst of my trials, my naturally proud heart would have prompted me to pack my valise and leave; but like the Master I could only say to myself, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but" I have "not where to lay" my "head." Those that have always had homes don't fully know what that text is. But the servant is not above the Master, neither he who is sent, greater than he who sent him.

But at this point, I ask myself, Why relate these things? Our light afflictions which are but for a moment, work for us a far more and exceeding weight of glory. The gold is not worth much until it is purified; then it is tried; so Peter says, The trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth. It is not the faith, but the trial of faith; and I would say, it was at my faith that all the fiery darts were aimed, but I happened to be grounded and settled on the Rock of ages, so could not be moved.

But their treatment of me was all in keeping with their theory. They set up to themselves a God who is going to torment his enemies for ever, and so they partake of the same spirit. I here pray that the Life believers may never indulge in that persecuting spirit, for it never draws, and always repels.

On my way back here one week ago, I stopped over two days in Milwaukee with Sr. Pierce where I was refreshed and comforted. Had also, a good visit with deacon Brown, who is also of like precious faith.

It seems good to meet those who have taken a decided stand on the side of truth. But what will it be, when the faithful and tried ones will all meet at home? Father help us to be faithful to the death so we shall gain the crown of life. Amen.

RACINE, Wis., April 24, 1870.

FROM HENRY A. TROEGER.

BR. STORRS: Please find enclosed one dollar for the HERALD OF LIFE to be sent to ——. Through an examination of the Word of God, and some argument upon the same, he was lately convinced that the theory of eternal torments was not in harmony with the Bible, but still clung to the mortal resurrection of the wicked; nevertheless with the Lord's help I have been enabled to prove to him, by the plain declaration of Christ, "but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more,"—Luke xx. 35, that if the wicked are raised they cannot die again, but are, according to Paul, incorruptible. Truth he said was what he wanted, and if that was it, the truth he would have in spite of all the consequences.

He belongs to the Eng. Ep. Meth. Church; and his brethren visit him frequently in hopes of converting him from his crazy notions again, but he preaches, No life out of Christ to them with a vigor and earnestness which they cannot understand. I hear that it is all my fault; that I have turned his head; but I praise the Lord for giving entrance to his blessed truth.

A few weeks ago the Ger. Meth. preacher of my church, accused me of doing wrong, by belonging to the church, holding the views which I did, and after some argument upon the subject I informed him that, if there really were any members in the Church whose consciences were so weak as to take offence at my views, I would demand a vote upon the matter, as I would not do a wrong, if I could avoid it; and if such proved to be the case I would withdraw. It was accordingly done, and all desired me to leave except one sister. So I left. They wanted me to cease agitating the subject, and then I could stay. My answer was, It is God's truth, and I must agitate it; and bless the Lord their course of action has been the means of creating quite an inquiry about the matter, and giving me more opportunities to spread the truth. And blessed be the Lord, I feel better and see more and more of that infinite Love of God the Father, which was so long obscured by the clouds raised through the vain endeavors to prop up immortal soulism.

I hope the brothers and sisters will pray for us here, (as only one here besides my wife and myself, fully believes in no future life out of Christ) that we may be faithful in word and deed. Br. Davids is not firmly settled yet as to the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, although he is beginning to use our arguments against orthodoxy, and is manfully helping in the good work. He has believed in the destruction of the wicked, after the resurrection, for years, but has not advocated it so openly as in the last year past.

How any one can allow this blessed truth to remain uninvestigated after his attention has once been called to it, is incomprehensible to me, as it required but a fair candid statement of facts by Br. Rondthaler, nearly two years ago, for me to see and believe almost at the same time.

May the Lord bless you, and aid you in your arduous duties connected with the spreading of His blessed truth. I am your Br. in Jesus.

SANDWICH, Ill., April, 1870.

FROM MARIA M. WEAVER.

BR. STORRS: The general expression is, "The last two numbers of the HERALD are the best we've had." You may be sure my heart was comforted the other evening by hearing an aged brother speak in favor of the HERALD. He was once a bitter opposer of the Life views. We used to lend him papers to read, and his son has published some tracts on the subject. At last he loved the paper enough to subscribe for it six months; at the end of six months he sent again, and now says, "I should not like to be without the HERALD." It does me good to see the aged veterans of the cross filled with love for the truth, and I love to read their letters in our paper.

When we get home we shall not need these instructions, exhortations and comfortings. Here we greatly need them; and it is saddening to see how some who are well qualified to write persist in holding "back more than is meet." Let such be modest in their fault findings in regard to "reading matter."

Soon our labors will end, and all our tears, groans, pains and cares be over. O what a blessed hope—the hope of living in a sinless world with deathless natures, among beauties and glories eternal! Brethren and sisters, will it not repay us for all we may suffer here? Can we not bear to be "cast out" from the society of those who walk in darkness here, if we may but enter the society of "the saints in light?" For my part I can "count it all joy" to be counted worthy to suffer with Christ, for his truth's sake. There is one text that comforts me; "If they have hated me, they will hate you also." Of late we have had much experience in this kind of "practical preaching," and have had a chance to know which we love most, the praise of men or the gospel of Christ. We thank God, that the conflict has not been all victory for our foes, for a few are rejoicing in the light of truth and are pressing toward the kingdom of God. Your Sr. in hope of life.

FEEDING HILL, Mass., April 22, 1870.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

BR. STORRS: I am glad the word of God is as a bright shining light, that shines more and more unto the perfect day.

When we first begin to see light we are somewhat like one of old, when he "Saw men as trees walking;" but when the mist and fog has been cleared away, and the scales have fallen from our eyes, how plain the gospel appears.

If Jesus has "abolished death" and brought life and immortality to light, it is clear as the sun at noon-day, that he brought no other kind of life to light only that kind that is connected with immortality.

Again: We read that, "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Now, as Jesus sowed only one kind of seed, and that was wheat, I don't think he will be careful to reap the tares at harvest time. Yours truly in the hope of life.

EAST BOSTON, Mass., 1870.

FROM JOEL A. SIMONDS.

BR. STORRS: If we want a strong and conclusive argument on the nature of man, we go to the account of his creation. There we find his nature, his business, and his destiny with more definiteness than anywhere else in the Bible. So if we want to know what the earth is made for, there we find it more distinctly than anywhere else. If we want to know the nature and jurisdiction of the law it is more fully explained there than anywhere else. If we want to know the nature of the punishment for sin, here we have it—"Thou shalt surely die," and nothing beyond. Under the curse of the law, "In sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life." All the suffering is in this life. The end of sin is death; "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This ends the matter. All the sufferings contemplated in the law are in this life, and there is but one death. The law must guide in all future judgments against sin.

It is in this record God's purpose is unmistakably revealed in regard to the earth, and the man to inhabit the earth, and the law to govern the man. The purpose in all these respects is definite and simple.

Man sins: but this did not carry him out from under the law. It held him to its penalty. Others suffer the same penalty. Paul refers it to the same law.

The preparation of the kingdom when the Lord made the world, affords the surest indication of God's purpose in the matter that we have.

Yours, truly, in search of the whole truth.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., 1870.

FROM C. N. BUZZELL.

BR. STORRS: I have intended to report myself before now, but have not for the following reason: Three weeks ago my little boy, three years old, was out at play near a chestnut log, twelve feet long and twenty inches in diameter; which lay upon the side hill and began to roll. My wife seeing the danger of the child ran to his rescue, but before she could reach him he was caught and crushed beneath it. She then turned to run to the mill where I was, but was overtaken by the log which passed over her body and was stopped by the shed, and rested upon her head and shoulder, where she must have remained some fifteen minutes, and was then taken out as we supposed a corpse; but He who has said whatsoever ye ask in my name, I will give it you, I know has heard my poor petition; and strange as it may seem to those of little faith, the child is quite well and the mother is alive and doing well, yet is quite low; but I trust in the Lord for her recovery and my faith grows stronger and brighter every day, and I can sing,

"O for a faith that will not shrink."
Lord give me such a faith as this,
And then what e'er may come,
I'll taste e'en here the hallowed bliss
Of an eternal home.

Pray for us, dear children of God. Your brother in the gospel.

SPRING CREEK, Pa., May 2, 1870.

FROM DR. C. C. BARKER.

BR. STORRS: I am about moving to Hartford—will you send my HERALD there? I go there with the intention of preaching regularly each Sabbath. A portion of my time I shall be obliged to prosecute my dental business in order to gain support for my family.

Br. Brown and myself held a series of meetings here in March, perhaps you remember. In the course of the campaign I invited criticism of our views, and expressed my willingness to meet any of the Woodbury clergymen in public discussion; but I received no response from either denomination: but although no one stepped into the arena, the Episcopal clergyman opened upon us from within his entrenchments. I listened to his discourses and took notes. After his first sermon I waited upon him, and expressed my intention of a public review of his position. This review I made before large and attentive audiences in the Town Hall last Monday and Tuesday evenings. A large portion of my auditory on the second evening I know were convinced I had the truth; and several I have met show a disposition to rejoice in it. The tracts which Br. Wolcott so kindly furnished, have done I believe, good execution. I am now going away, but I feel to dare hope that a good effective tent meeting may be held there a few months hence. There are Advent Brethren North, East, and West of here, within twelve or fifteen miles, who never scarce get a sniff of the Life views. We cannot preach to their churehes—the wire pullers shut us out. But if we can give the real gospel sound near by them, may be some will imbibe enough of the Elixir of Life to produce a healthy alterative effect. With much love, your brother.

WOODBURY, Conn., May 1, 1870.

CHARLES W. MORSE, Manchester, N. H., writes: Enclosed find one dollar, for which please send me some of the Campaign Documents. We are getting along well as to our meetings. The truth is in God's hands, and if we put our trust in him, we will see it prosper. I thank him that my prayer was answered and we can have the truth preached to us. Some try to hurt us here, but the more they try, the more they help us. I know of one, that was brought to see the truth by hearing it preached against. I hope you will help us by your prayers.

May 4, 1870.

A. W. DURKEE, Lake City, Minn., writes: Dear HERALD, I thank thee that through all the weeks of my inconstancy as to thy support, thou hast (through the untiring aid of our beloved Editor and the noble efforts of the children of the true and living God) made thy regular visits to cheer and comfort our hearts, and help us to withstand the temptations that surround us, pointing us to Christ, who is "the resurrection and the life" to all such as believe on Him and keep his commandments.

I WOULD not give one moment of heaven for all the joys and riches of the world, even if it lasted for thousands and thousands of years. —Luther.

No man is a better merchant than he that lays out his time upon God, and his money upon the poor.—Bishop Taylor.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE, Edited by Thos. Guthrie, D.D. The May number is received. It is profusely illustrated.

CONTENTS.—1. Episodes in an Obscure Life: being Experiences in the Tower Hamlets. By a Curate. Part viii. Illustrated. 2. How to Study the Old Testament. By W. Lindsay-Alexander, D.D. Leviticus—Notes on Particular Passages. 3. A Bit of a Battle. A Poem. By Isabella Fyvie. Illustrated, 4. John Newton and his Hymns. By Isabella L. Bird. 5. Cousin Tom. By B. Orme. Illustrated. 6. Part in Peace. By J. S. B. Monsell, LL.D. 7. The Desire to do Great Things. By the Rev. A. L. Simpson. 8. The Chorister. By A. J. Mason. Illustrated. 9. The Struggle in Ferrara. By W. Gilbert. Part viii. Illustrated. 10. One Christ in Four Records. A Popular Argument on a Point recently Started. By a Member of the Scotch Bar. Second of Two Papers. 11. On the Miracles of our Lord. By George MacDonald, LL.D. viii. The Raising of the Dead. Illustrated. 12. Una and her Paupers. By H. A. Page. Illustrated. 13. The Companions of St. Paul. By John S. Howson, D.D., Dean of Chester. viii. Julius. 14. Our Strength and Shield. By the Rev. Henry Downton. 15. Supplement—Notes for Readers Out of the Way.

TERMS.—Yearly subscription, $3 50. Single number, 30 cents.

J. B. Lippincott & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

THE RESURRECTION: OR BIBLE CONTRAST. DEMONSTRATING THAT ONLY THE RIGHTEOUS SHALL HAVE A FUTURE LIFE.—BY J. S. POTTER, EAST BOSTON, MASS.

We have once before noticed this work. Since then it has been revised and a new edition printed. Br. Potter asks us to give the following notice of it:

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS in the Eastern States, Greeting: I have got out a new tract on the Resurrection of the dead; for which I have been at considerable expense. I thought I would give you an opportunity to help scatter some of them. Price three cents. Address me, 67, Bennington St., EAST BOSTON, Mass. J. S. POTTER.

APPOINTMENTS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, May 15.
ORRINGTON, Me., at Chapel, May 22.
GEO. W. BROWN.

OCEANPORT, N. J., A. M.; EATONTOWN, P. M., Sunday, May 15.
S. W. BISHOP.

LEWISTON, Me., Sunday, May 1 and 22.
MANCHESTER, N. H., Sundays, May 8 and 15.
WEST LEEDS, Me., Sunday, May 29.
J. C. WHEELER,
North Turner, Bridge, Me.

BANGOR, Me., Bakerville School House, Sunday, May 15.
NEWBURGH, Arnold School House, Monday eve., May 16, at 7 o'clock.
LEWISTON, Sunday, May 22.
S. BRAGG.

WALLINGFORD FARMS, Conn., Sunday, May 22.
WEST MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, May 29.
WM. STUART.

All letters respecting preaching, or other matters, designed for Br. Wm. Stuart, should be addressed to him at New Britain, Conn., care of Geo. Storer. We hope our friends will keep Br. Stuart employed, for he has a mind to work, and we doubt not he will do his work well.—EDITOR.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—A. W. Durkee, Laura Clough, Geo. Flint, Mrs. S. H. Thurston, A. K. Morse, D. Cass, E. S. Piper, Mary A. Beasly, Charles Griffith, A. T. Dawley, M. A. Sawyer, J. D. Bryant.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Jas. N. Gladding, H. B. Lambert, H. J. Smith.

VARIOUS SUMS—Mary Winchester, Jonathan Lynn, Miss Lemira Leavitt, $1 10 each; Wm. Smith, 50 cts.; A. G. Merwin, $4; George Waterhouse, 50 cents; Wm. L. Johnson, $1 50; Nathan Howe, $2 50; Jas. Smith $1 50; Betsy Murphy, 50 cents; R. D. Chase, $15 on pledge; Eld. Wm. P. Shockey, $3; Mrs. J. P. Brock, $3; Loman Upson, $5 on pledge; Wm. Forrester, $3.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

E. W. Child's, Lois V. Elliott. "To Coventry Centre, R. I." Wm. A. Hough, Eld. Y. Higgins, E. A. Mansfield, Mrs. Sarah G. Hayward, Mrs. Mary Mansfield, Franklin A. Sheldon, James Smith, A. K. Morse, E. L. Piper, C. W. Morse, Lucretia B. Lamb, Mrs. A. P. Wilson (two parcels), Eld. Wm. P. Shockey, Loman Upson, M. A. Sawyer, Wm. Forrester.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ELD. HENRY PERKINS.—The letter and its contents has never reached us.

LUCRETIA B. LAMB.—We have none of the papers left you speak of. Have sent Life from the Dead: will send the tracts when published.

MRS. A. P. WILSON.—The letter you speak of was not received. We have sent an extra quantity of tracts this time,

Antichrist Once More.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

If it was not for a strong desire to enlist the spirit of prophetic inquiry, and to remove some uncalled for constructions that Br. Green made on my article of his review, I should ere this have closed my remarks on his expositions of certain prophecies, the fulfilment of which, I understand some, to be directly at the Advent coming. We are all equally interested in the truth, and of that Christian courtesy and respect that the magnitude of the subject demands; and let us keep if possible unstained, the columns of the Herald of Life (the best paper in the land,) from all technical arguments that are foreign to the subject, and given for the sake of a vain victory of self, even if an occasional word of chagrin should leak out on certain points.

I know that I have some opinions that are not common to all, but should we not, before we drive the prophetic stake of our opinion, examine all the parallel prophecies that are in any way connected with the subject of inquiry, and see that there are no jars of confliction, but one harmonious support in their various ways pointing out the transaction for which they were designed? This has been my rule and plan for their adjustment of understanding. But to force, or even try to force a transaction into a prophetic mold that will not fit it, is to me revolting. But to the subject.

The difference between me and our brother in regard to the Antichrist of 2 John 7, and the hindering power of Paul is too small for debate, though he accuses me of putting the former in the future, which I have not done only in part, believing it to extend from one advent to the other.

Our Br. says in substance, The admission that Pagan Rome was the hindering power, is fatal to my views, it being taken away by Constantine in A. D. 313, when the church conferred upon him the honors of a "Second David" to fight the "battles of the Lord." Here our Br. quotes Paul, "And then shall that wicked be revealed." Here our Br. gives us the time or date of the abomination from which to count Daniel's 1290 and 1335 days or years to be A. D. 313. Now add the two last numbers together, and we have 1648. So Daniel stood in his lot 222 years ago. This is our brother's theory and not mine. If we move this supposed prophetic abomination to the Justinian edict, in A. D. 532 or 533, when death and banishment were made the penalty for all who did not in three months embrace Roman Catholicism, it would not improve the case a particle.

If we suppose that Daniel's days are years, and their date is from any Papal persecution, it is impossible to put it this side of the one mentioned 532–3. So my conviction is, that the year-day theory is rotten, and of course belongs to an anti-Christian element of understanding.

But our Br. thinks that the Papacy must be this Man of sin and that his revealment was at the commencement of that persecution. Then, in this case, are we justified in supposing prophecy to mean that his punishment of death shall be postponed some 1300 or 1400 years after he has been revealed? But again I ask, who was it that revealed to the world that the Papacy was this prophetic Man of sin, and as such made him known? Would not this revealment have been fatal to the Papal power as being at the head of the church? A man may be a thief twenty years, but if there is no testimony of his guilt, he is not considered as such, for want of truth revealed. It is the demonstration of truth that reveals corruption. But when is this Man of sin, this son of perdition to receive his blow of death? Shall we say, when he is revealed? Then what does this word mean? Let Webster decide. "To disclose; to make known from heaven." Hence the Messiah from heaven, with an overwhelming power, truth and testimony proving and revealing to the world of mankind that this Man of sin whom he finds in the temple of God, is the veritable prophetic son of perdition, "who comes to his end and none to help him."

Our Br. says, there can never be a persecution after the time of the end commences, because knowledge will then increase. But although Daniel says knowledge shall increase, he also says at the same time, that "many shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity and by spoil many days."—Ch. xi. 33. And remember that this takes place when the King places the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain, when Michael stands up. Verse 45. But if our Br. thinks he can nullify the fulfilment of this by putting it in the past, he can try it; but I hope Michael may be saved, and Daniel in his lot.

Again, Br. says of me, "In reference to the development of the Man of sin, our brother asked," ("Now suppose the majority of this council, A. D. 451, Chalcedon, and the Imperial power that sustained the act of it, had been applied in confirming and establishing the act or creed of the other council, would it not then have been as much Roman Catholic as the one they accept?") "In the first place, we have no business to suppose anything; it is facts we want and not ifs nor ands." Very good, brother, let us stick to facts after this.

But if I had no right to suppose a case to illustrate my idea, I had no right to hold my pen to give the idea. But did I write the above extract of my article in reference to the Man of sin, the son of perdition? No, I did not think of him when I penned it; but in direct reference to the commencement of the Papacy I wrote it. Let us have facts and not assumptions.

Again in reference to the saying of Paul, that the Man of sin sitteth in the temple of God, our Br. asks the question, "Does not Paul refer to the temple of a heathen God?" If this was the meaning of Paul, why did he not say so? Shall we say he lacked the ability and required help to do it? As for the old and young devil mentioned, I believe in neither, therefore our brother can have both gratis.

Our Br. gives a quotation from Bower's history of the Popes ("The Pope claims to be infinite, omnipotent, incomprehensible, having all power in heaven and in earth,") and then gives him the highest brand of blasphemy. But this Papal assumption is no greater than the one claimed by the Grand Lama of Thibet, who may be considered the counterpart of the Romish. But do not all such ignorant and palpable fools deserve Christian commiseration as well as such a stigma? But both of these powers are dynasties of long standing, but the Man of sin represents an individual—the seventh head of the Leopard beast. My principal argument, our Br. has not touched: why does he not take the xith of Daniel from the 21st verse, and prove the king of the North there, to be the Papacy? Then he would have some argument. Br. admits that the Roman kingdom was divided into ten divisions, and that there are ten kingdoms that are to make war with the Lamb.—Rev. xvii. Then as the Lamb has not come, why not suppose it is the same as Dan. vii. 25? Again, he says; if the flight of the woman into the wilderness is yet future, then these kingdoms are not risen; because he thinks the stand-point of John's description was in A. D. 1764. If this was intended to be the date of the Apocalypse, which was given to shew things which must come to pass; then the fulfilment of the prophecies of the book must all be subsequent to 1764. But who can admit this? Yet I suppose the idea is, that John in this special instance comes down to near the time of this date, and then and there shows to the Christians some of the corruptions of the apostate powers. "And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings." But how can we see them, only by taking a stand-point subsequent to their existence as such? We can now see them on the historic page; "which have received no kingdom as yet." This expression takes us back prior to their existence; i. e. the date of the Apocalypse—"but receive power as kings," etc. Here they come into their existence, and as kings enter their kingdom. And of course "Shall receive power as kings," as the Douay Bible has it.—Rev. xvii. 12. "These shall give their power and strength unto the beast;" i. e., the Papal power. And have they not done it? "These shall make war with the Lamb; and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful." Is not the culmination of this portrayed scene at the battle of Armageddon—the commencement of the great day of the Lord? But how any one can suppose that the Lamb, as here described, and they that are with him—they that are faithful, and they that are chosen, can be anything less than the same mentioned in Dan. vii. 21–28, (whose opposers are) there headed by the Son of perdition—the king coming "from the further end of the North," (Jewish translation, Ezek. xxxviii.) I know not. And yet to put all of this in the dark and benighted regions in the centre of the Christian Apostacy is in my opinion preposterous. But our brother seems desirous to know how it is possible for these ten kings to be accessory to this future war or persecution, and at the same time be the identical divisions into which the Roman empire was divided, when in fact there have been so many changes, transfers and loss of nationalities? This all may be, and yet Providence in his Revelation sees fit to make these old divisions a type or figure of those powers who give their aid and influence to this king of the North in his abomination; and especially as they partake of the Papal element.

Let me here observe that the Revelator does not accuse the beast—the Papacy—as making this war, but it is the seventh or last head of the beast, having its origin in the Dragon power, "and eyes and a mouth speaking very great things."—Dan. vii. 20. Again. Mal. iv. 15 says, "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and dreadful day of the Lord." And Christ says after the death of John the Baptist, that "Elias shall truly first come and restore all things."—Matt. xvii. 11. And it is said of Christ, "Whom the heavens must retain until the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began." Now the question is, Is not the Temple of God (a church edifice) as mentioned in 2 Sam. vii., and Mal. iii., and 2 Thess. ii. 4, and Rev. vii. 15, and also xi. 1, 2, 19, among the things that are to be restored before the return of the Messiah? If not, I ask what things are to be restored? If Elias is to come as our Saviour said, may we not suppose that he will see that it is erected? Remember it is said in the last verse, "And there was seen in the Temple of God the Ark of his testament." In Ex. xxv. 21, it is said, "And in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee." Also, Num. vii. 89, "The ark of the testimony." And Josh. iii. 15, where the waters of the Jordan rolled back to let Israel pass over, because they had the ark of God.

This ark was either lost or secreted by some of the Jewish priests, near the time of Israel's captivity by the Babylonians, and has not since been restored. Now as the Temple of God was destroyed and his ark lost, we find them again prophetically in existence, and are again united; and of course are among the things that are to be restored.

Then, shall we say that the Temple of God, having in it his ark, is nothing more than a common place where two or three can have a religious chat?

But our brother says, that the belief that this temple is again to be rebuilt, and that the Man of sin is to take a seat in it, is a strong argument of the Catholic church. Now I presume that there is not one Catholic in ten hundred who knows that anything of this kind has been advocated by any writer of their Church. But even if it was an article of their faith it would not prove it false, any more than the general belief in the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ.

But our brother seems to think that the abomination spoken of by Matt. xxiv. 15, and Mark xiii. 14, and Dan. xi. 31, and xii. 11, and the war on the saints, Dan. vii. 21, xii. 11, and the Papal abominations and their persecutions are all synonymous; or rather, these prophecies have been fulfilled in them. But in this view I see insurmountable difficulties; some of which are, (1.) The abomination is located by the prophets at the time of the world's greatest affliction, at the end of the age, when all nationalities are dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel. (2.) To remove the location of this time to the centre of the apostacy, and there scatter the time into some 1300 or 1400 years, would violate the language. (3.) It would not only remove the time of location but also the place of it from Jerusalem, the holy place mentioned, to Constantinople or to Rome, a distance of from 700 to 1,400 miles. (4.) It would make the admonition of Christ to his people at Jerusalem, not to return to the field or to the house to take anything, but to flee immediately, uncalled for, inconsistent and injurious. And, (5.) It would make all of the Papally persecuted, which our brother says is from 50,000,000 to 80,000,000, saints of the Most High.—Dan. vii. 21. But who composed this number? It was made from all classes of mankind that the Papal power could reach, who would not accept their creed. It was of heathen, of Mohammedans, of Jews, of apostate Christians as well as of true, and of Indians, all of which make the number. It is said that 12,000,000 of the aboriginal inhabitants of this continent have received Papal persecution, because they did not at the word of command accept the religion. And of course these were all perfectly ignorant of Christian truth; and we must suppose that a far greater number and equally ignorant were slain by the same power on the Eastern continent than on this. But will our brother, of this material, identity and number, make so many saints? If he can, will he not beat the Universalists?

I do not question the number persecuted, nor the wicked and barbarous law that inflicted the cruelty; nor yet the naturally honest and virtuous characters of the victims slain. But to say that they had the Abrahamic faith sufficient to entitle them to the appellation of saints in the old patriarchal sense so that Daniel recognized them as such is another thing. And he either does or he not. The latter is my position. For there must be a qualifying test that entitles a person or persons to that distinction; and what is that test but the true knowledge and a practical co-operation in the united efforts of God's people without confliction of understanding in behalf of the Christian plan of man's salvation?

[To be Continued.]

The Terms of the Gospel.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptised shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark xvi. 15, 16.

This text expresses the conditions upon which we can be saved. They are plainly stated. They are the same for all, old and young, rich and poor, bond and free. They have not been changed since they were first published. Nothing is put in for show. Nothing is left out to avoid giving offense. The conditions named comprehend all that is necessary to salvation, and nothing more. To believe the gospel with all the heart, and to be baptised according to the gospel, will secure our salvation, whatever else we do or do not believe. The terms are faith and baptism, in the order given to them in the text. So that none need be deceived. Every one may know just what it will cost him to be saved. There are three things named in the text which are necessary to salvation.

1. The gospel must be preached.

Matt. xxiv. 14. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations. This gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. How can any one believe in a gospel of which he has not heard? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. If this gospel is not preached, there can be no salvation. Paul says, "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Then, the preaching this gospel of the kingdom (for there is no other) is essential to salvation. It must be preached or men cannot be saved.

2. This gospel must be believed.

What is it to believe? It is the simplest thing we can do. It is what the child does when its father makes it a promise, or a threatening. It receives it as true. To believe is simply to credit testimony. It gives the assurance of things hoped for, or of things feared. It determines our choice. It accepts or rejects propositions. By it, we yield ourselves to an end. It is what we do inwardly, before we act outwardly. Our outward acts are all the result of our faith. It is the power in us that controls our lives. It is the mainspring of every action. We all know how to believe, we have practiced it all of our lives. The apostle Paul said, We believe and therefore speak. So we all do; we believe and therefore speak; we believe and therefore act.

By faith one man plants his grounds with fruit; by faith in something else another man refuses to plant fruit. By faith in our government one man is loyal; by faith in something else another is disloyal. By faith in the gospel one man becomes a Christian; by faith in something else another man becomes an infidel.

Thus it is what a man believes, that makes him what he is. The thing that a man believes determines his character and controls his life. If a man has a living faith in the gospel, the gospel will control his life. Every man that hath this hope in him, will purify himself as Christ is pure. If a man love me, said Christ, he will keep my word; and it is impossible to love him without faith in him.

This faith or confidence in the gospel is indispensable to salvation. It is this faith that makes us worthy to be saved. Without faith in the gospel we cannot be saved, whatever else we may believe or do.

Some propositions are self-evident, and some need to be confirmed by testimony. Of this sort is the gospel. In reference to it we need to prove all things, and hold fast that which is good. We must hear the gospel and examine it in order to understand it; we must understand it, in order to believe it and make its purposes our own; we must believe it, in order to be saved by it. Those who would be saved, must hear the gospel and understand it; they must receive it into good and honest hearts and keep it, and bear fruit with patience, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold.

What does faith do for us? We are among the rebels. We hear the gospel, we believe it, we yield ourselves to its instructions, we make its purposes our own. This changes our mind, and brings us into sympathy with God, and under the influence of the word. We are now ready to pass over the line which separates between the rebel and the loyal citizen. We now occupy the position of rebels in the late rebellion, who, having heard the proclamation of pardon to such as would lay down their arms and take the oath of allegiance, have laid down their arms and are ready to take the oath, and in this way become citizens of the U. S. So we by faith have made up our minds to renounce our rebellion against God, and to become a citizen of the household of faith, by baptism. He that believeth the gospel and is baptized shall be saved.

3. The Gospel Baptism must be received.

He that said, "He that believeth," said also, "and is baptized shall be saved." These are the terms of the gospel which must be preached to every creature. These are the conditions upon which salvation is promised. The apostles were sent out to teach and to baptize.—Matt. xxviii. 20. They did teach, and they did baptize. There is one baptism for all believers.—Eph. iv. 5.

All who believe must be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, and in this way they take his name.—Acts ii. 38. As many as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ.—Gal. iii. 26. In this way they become Christ's, and the seed of Abraham and heirs to the promise. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, which is Christ. And have all been made to drink into one Spirit. We are now members of his body, and joint heirs with him to his inheritance.

By faith we become worthy to take the name of Christ, and become members of his body; by baptism this relation to Christ's name and body is legalized.

By Baptism we become fellow-citizens with the saints. Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God.—Eph. ii. 19. How did we become such? By the circumcision of Christ, which is baptism. "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, by the circumcision of Christ, (which is being) buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him, and you who were dead in your sins, and the uncircumcision of your flesh, hath he quickened with him (by the circumcision of Christ), having forgiven you all trespasses."

These Christians had been aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, in the uncircumcision of their flesh. But they became fellow-citizens with the saints, and the household of God, by the circumcision of Christ, having been buried with him in baptism. In this circumcision of Christ, or baptism, they ceased to be aliens, and became citizens. In it, they put off the body of the sins of the flesh, and were quickened together with Christ, and were forgiven all their trespasses.

By faith the alien makes up his mind to become a fellow-citizen with the saints. By baptism or the circumcision of Christ, he becomes a naturalized citizen of the household of God. His rebellions are now all pardoned. He is now entitled to all the privileges and promises which belong to the saints.

What then, are the undisputable conditions of salvation, as set forth in the commission of Christ to his apostles, which was to be preached to every creature?

The gospel of the kingdom must be preached. It is the only power of God unto salvation. It must be heard. It must be understood. It must be believed. It must be obeyed. What good will it do us to believe the gospel? By believing it, we obey one of the conditions of salvation. By faith in it, we make its purposes our own. By this faith we are prepared for baptism, which is the line between the alien and the loyal citizen. Without this faith we cannot be saved. The conditions of salvation are very simple, and may be easily understood. They are such as will secure the most cordial obedience to God, and sympathy with his purposes. They are simple faith, trust, confidence in God, as he has revealed himself in the gospel. An assurance that God knows best, that his plan is best, that his conditions of pardon are best, and that they are our only hope. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Grand Rapids, Mich., March, 1870.

Children's Department.

"I'm not too Young."

"I'm not too young for God to see,
He knows my name and nature too;
And all day long he looks at me,
And sees my actions through and through.

He listens to the words I say,
He knows the thoughts I have within;
And whether I'm at work or play,
He's sure to see it if I sin.

If some one great and good is near,
It makes us careful what we do;
And how much more we ought to fear
The Lord, who sees us through and through.

Thus when inclined to do amiss,
However pleasant it may be,
I'll always try to think of this,
I'm not too young for God to see."

—Family Christian Almanac.

Before and After.

Willie was not a healthy boy, and his father sent him to board in the country, where he could have plenty of fresh air, and milk and fruit. Some twenty rods from the house where he boarded was a beautiful spring of very cool, pure water; and before Willie's father left him, he made him promise that he would bring a small pail full of water from that spring every day of his life. His father knew that he was idle and not fond of exercise; he knew also that he was truthful and would never break his word. So he went home to the city, feeling sure that Willie would take a nice little walk every day. And Willie did so, but when do you think he took it? It is a law that always holds true that we are happier after we have done our work than we are before. So if Willie had brought the water before breakfast, he would have been happier for it all day. But he did not know this; so he brought it the last thing at night, sometimes when he was very tired and could hardly walk, sometimes when it was so dark that he was afraid to go. But he always brought it at last, and all day long he had this thought hanging over him like a cloud—"Rain or shine, light or dark, cold or hot, I must bring that pail of water before I sleep." If he had brought it in the morning, all this play would have come after the work. Now it came before the work, and that is not half as pleasant.

Willie had a sister named Grace, who was very much like him. When Grace was twelve years old, her mother said, "Hereafter you must always make your own bed;" and Grace soon learned to make it very neatly. She had a very pleasant chamber; when it was in order it was the prettiest room in the house. And how large a part of the time do you think it was in order every day? Just about five minutes. All day long Grace avoided her room as much as possible. If she looked in for a moment, if she even thought of it in the midst of her play, there was a cloud upon her pretty face. It was the shadow of the tumbled bed. "Oh dear, I must make it by-and-by," she said, and so the shadow staid.

One bright morning Grace made her bed before breakfast. She was going to see Willie and so she must make it then or not at all. And the sun looked in upon the white spread and smooth pillows, as if he had never seen such a sight before. He saw something else, too, something equally strange, twenty miles away. It was Willie bringing water from the spring. His mother had written, "We are coming early, and shall want a draught of that sweet spring water as soon as we arrive." All that day the children were happy with a new happiness. Their work was done; that was a very pleasant thought. It was so pleasant that they did not like to lose it; they learned that play and privilege are sweetest after work. "When I do my work early," said Willie, "I do it because I choose, not because I must. I like that a great deal better."

Letter from a Little Girl.

Dear Br. Storrs: I am a little girl, and want to make mother a present: could think of nothing better than some of your Campaign Documents. Please send me two of each numbers of 6, 7, and 8, and one of No. 16. Please direct to Lois V. Elliott, Waterbury, Vt.

Remarks by the Editor.

It gives us much pleasure to answer the above request of one of Christ's lambs: and we have no doubt the "mother" of that dear child will be very happy to think of her little daughter's choice. Happy are those parents whose little ones think of more value the things pertaining to Christ and life eternal, than the toys which so often are uppermost in the minds of children and adults; and happy are those children whose parents have early imbued their minds with the love of Christ and his truth. May the Lord abundantly bless our little friend, and make her a blessing to her parents and others.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price, bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "You are Immortal," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1870.

VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 31.
WHOLE NUMBER 317.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York.
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

MORE ABOUT THE "QUESTIONS."

[THE following communication was received two weeks since from Rev. WM. D. BRIDGE, in reply to Br. L. C. THORNE's Response to questions by the former in the HERALD OF LIFE of March 16. We place it before our readers by Br. Bridge's urgent request. Br. Thorne will follow it with a Rejoinder.—EDITOR.]

NOTES BY A QUESTIONER.

"Truth is truth, since God is God.
And truth the day must win."

"Ti estin aletheia?" "What is truth?" Pilate's question should be the query of every intelligent soul.

"Get but the truth once uttered, and 'tis like
A star new-born, that drops into its place,
And which, once circling in its placid round,
Not all the tumults of the earth can shake."
LOWELL.

I would request the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE to turn to their paper for March 16, and read carefully the Questions by myself and the Response by Br. Thorne. The Response is courteous and kind, and yet is by no means entirely satisfactory. Br. Thorne commences by affirming, "We have never known but one standard of appeal in determining questions of doctrine."

We grant it, and affirm the same. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. viii. 20.

Br Thorne enters a caveat or protest against my statement: "By their fruits ye shall know them." His argument is this: Br. Bridge's statement is not satisfactory, else the following syllogism must be satisfactory, which is not.

Premise 1st. The fruits of true religion are an upright walk, just dealing with fellow-men, and large sacrifices for the good of others.

Premise 2d. Many Infidels are upright in walk, just in their dealing with their fellow-men, and sacrifice largely for the good of others:

Conclusion: Therefore infidels are possessed of true religion.

This syllogism, as all must know, is a non sequitur, for the conduct of the supposed infidels may spring from other causes or motives than true religion, and some of the fruits of religion, e. g., those of the Holy Spirit, infidels do not exhibit.

But though the syllogism is defective in validity, my affirmation is not defective in validity. Look at the following facts: Universalism, Unitarianism, Roman Catholicism, Annihilationism, Spiritualism, and Orthodox Trinitarianism pretend to found their doctrines on Scripture. Now all cannot be right—totally so. Elements of truth may be in each. No one, perhaps, has the whole of truth. Equally learned, and equally truth-loving men disagree on the exegesis of the same texts. Br. Thorne says: "If a doctrine is sustained by the plain import of Inspiration, let it be henceforth a part of our living faith." But equally truth-loving men find diverse doctrines in the "plain" Scriptures. What are you to do then, Br. Thorne? Both cannot be right. Who shall judge? Where is your criterion of judgment? Millions of men in different denominations differ directly on their explanation of the same texts. What shall decide where truth is? I reply, What is the result of the preaching of such opposite doctrine? For instance, place Roman Catholicism over against Protestantism. What results are plainly visible to all? On the one hand oppression, poverty, ignorance, degradation, crime, idolatrous mummeries; on the other freedom, honesty, uprightness of character, pure worship, absence of crime, national ennoblement.

Were you, Br. Thorne, to look back on history and there see that Roman Catholicism had always, since Christ's day, elevated mankind, given freedom to soul and body, expelled crime, sustained men in the highest virtues, made them Christlike in thought and life; and then observed that Protestantism had come in, in 1517, as a demoralizer, a disturber, a general corrupter of life and thought and feeling, withering men's highest sensibilities, depraving their purity, etc., etc., etc., you would say at once, "The tree (the doctrine) is known by its fruit." Indeed, I exceedingly doubt if you would say "Protestantism is God-given, notwithstanding its fruits are so pernicious."

You would say:

"Men must be far from wrong,
Whose lives are nearest right."

It seems to me that Br. Thorne is illogical in the following sentences: "Then there are men in every religious denomination who hold theoretically the doctrines of their respective churches, but whose lives are the very opposite of those described [before], and who are a shame, a reproach, a disgrace to the cause of religion. Are such lives a test of doctrine, a proper ground of its admission or exclusion?" [The italics are mine.] He says: "Who hold theoretically." I say: "Who hold actually and practically" the specified doctrines. I am not speaking of one who holds the doctrines of his church theoretically, but actually lives out his church doctrines.

And then, I say, if the churches differ as to their doctrines, and you are at a loss, in any doubt, go and study their fruits, the resultants of their faith, for "The tree is known by his fruit."—Matt. xii. 33.

In Philip. i. 11 we read: "Filled with the fruits of righteousness," and in Matt. vii. 16, etc., we read: "Ye shall know them by their fruits: do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles, even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." These texts clearly declare the possibility of knowing the tree by the fruit. Doctrines lived out produce fruits; as necessarily, as constantly, as visibly as trees. Taking, then, a wide observation of men and their fruits we can discern the tree of doctrine within them.

Spiritualism (Spiritism) has its special fruits, Roman Catholicism its fruits, Calvinism its fruits, Universalism its fruits, Arminianism its fruits, Annihilationism its fruits. And my "Questions" were founded on this undeniable fact; and my query is: "Are the special, natural, necessary, and visible fruits of Annihilation superior in spirituality to those of "Orthodoxy," so called?

Br. Thorne says, "If among advocates of any system of doctrines a more perfect development of vital godliness is found than exists among votaries of opposing ones, the fact must indeed constitute an argument in favor of those doctrines, but cannot establish their truth." Grant it, but you can (or should) go a step farther, my dear Br. Thorne, and say that such "more perfect development of vital godliness" is a strong presumptive evidence that the first doctrine has more of truth in it, or is nearer the truth, than the second. And this is all I ask, for I do not pretend to be a Pope, infallible in judgment on points of doctrine. And I gave the query in substance: Does Annihilationism give us in its advocates generally "a more perfect development of vital godliness" than "exists among" actual (not theoretical) "votaries [believers and livers] of opposing doctrines?"

I pass to my second Question, and Br. T.'s Reply. "In any given place, at any given time, by pastors of contiguous churches laboring with equal zeal and fidelity, will the results of the first doctrine [Man's non-immortality save through Christ], preached equal or surpass the second [Man's inherent immortality]?" The reply is, "The circumstances have not [existed] and probably will not exist." Why so? Are there not such pastors to-day laboring beside pastors of unlike faith "with equal zeal and fidelity?" If not, there ought to be, if the doctrine they hold has in it the stirring, arousing elements predicated of it. Does Br. Thorne say then that "The circumstances suggested have not existed?" But he says: "Suppose they did exist, and it should transpire that three times as many persons should be converted under the preaching of the second doctrine, it would prove nothing." Would it prove nothing? Let me illustrate. Two kinds of cream are brought me; one three times as rich as the other. Would the respective qualities of the cream prove nothing? "Exactly nothing," says Br. Thorne. "The best cow would be best, not because of its success in giving better cream, but because it was best, in esse." I reply: Would not the better cream PROVE the better cow to be better; or, in other words, would not the evidence, instead of "proving nothing," prove something? So if the constant and general results of the preaching of one doctrine are better and holier men (so far as human eye can see), do those results prove nothing respecting the doctrine? I certainly dissent from Br. Thorne's conclusion, which is that they "would prove nothing."

Passing over the Third Question and Reply, we glance at the Fourth Question: Can the revivals of religion among Methodists and Baptists be parallelled, in power and frequency, among Life Believers? Br. Thorne replies: "We think not." And says, "As a body, we do not believe in attempting to frighten sinners into repentance, nor do we seek the aid of animal excitement in winning them to Christ." Why did not Br. Thorne stop at "We think not?" For the reason apparently that he would bring out an "argumentum ad populum," or present a "fallacy of objections" as Whately calls it. He states what "as a body we (Annihilationists) do not believe in" seemingly that his readers may assume (what is surely not a fact), that Methodists or Baptists "do believe in attempting to frighten sinners into repentance," etc. Surely Br. Thorne is not acquainted with, and is falsely informed concerning Methodist customs, and the general, prevalent character of its hortatory preaching!

I am glad (if it be a fact), to hear Br. Thorne say that "With our (Annihilationist) people, steadfastness is the rule, backsliding the exception." And Br. Thorne from an inside position in his church has a right to speak that truth, if he have grounds for it, but he has no right to affirm of us Methodists (what I from the inside position and observation deny), that we "seek the aid of animal excitement in winning sinners to Christ."

Allow me to touch on one more point only. I referred to the time in French history when men rabidly proclaimed "Death is an endless sleep," and said, "Now the same doctrine (though now given us in the interests of religion), asks of us a candid reception."

Br. Thorne, if I understand him, denies this, in toto. Let me quote, however, a few words from Br. Thorne. "He [Br. Bridge], mentions the fact that those infidels held 'Death is an eternal sleep,' and he understands us to hold to 'Life from the dead through Jesus Christ,' and yet he avows them to be the same." Not a bit of it. Never! I do not avow them to be the same by any means. Death and Life are opposites, not the same.

Br. Thorne says: "We cast the mantle of charity over the assertion, and humbly ask its author to think again, and more wisely." Thank you, brother, we will think again, and yet again.

Now let me state the point I make: "Death is an endless sleep," said the Frenchman. That is, "to all." Death, not Life. "Death is an eternal sleep," say Annihilationists. That is "to some!" Death, not Life. Does not the "all" embrace the "some?" The naked doctrine was: "Death is an eternal sleep." Death eternal, sleep eternal. What is your doctrine, Br. Thorne? Is it not "Death Eternal?" Is it not "sleep eternal?" Where is the difference? The point of agreement in the doctrine of the Frenchmen and the Annihilationist is this: "Sleep," and "Eternal sleep." They predicated these qualities for "all," and you for "some."

Let me further show that Br. Thorne must acquit me of error. Their (French history) doctrine is "Death—sleep eternal." The doctrine spoken of by Br. Thorne (of which I said nothing) is "Life from the dead through Jesus Christ." In other words, Br. Thorne says I avow "death eternal for all" is the same as "Life from the dead for some." Preposterous! Br. Thorne. Preposterous!

I say that "death for all" includes "Death for some," and that "sleep eternal for all" includes "sleep eternal for some." There is where I stand. Am I right or wrong? So that, "the same doctrine (though now given us in the interests of religion), asks of us a candid reception." Can we accept it?

I have written at greater length than I intended, but have compressed my objections (to the adequacy of Br. Thorne's reply) into as few words as possible.

I acknowledge the general urbanity and Christian sweetness of his "Response," and trust that all theological discussions may be conducted by myself and others in the same courteous manner.

Yours, in Christ,
WM. D. BRIDGE.

REJOINDER TO THE FOREGOING

BY LEONARD C. THORNE.

The writer of the foregoing affirmed, in his article propounding certain questions, that in determining questions of doctrine "the great test after all is: 'By their fruits ye shall know them;'" and we maintained that the word of God is the only standard of appeal in determining such questions. At the outset of his present article, he admits our position. So much gained, then, if we only find him consistent throughout. In reviewing our remarks upon this point, he improperly attributes to us a syllogism which we place beside our statement, that the reader may judge of its character.

SYLLOGISM.	OUR STATEMENT.
"The fruits of true religion are an upright walk, just dealing with fellow-men, and large sacrifices for the good of others. "Many infidels are upright in walk, just in their dealing with their fellow-men, and sacrifice largely for the good of others— "Therefore, infidels are possessed of true religion."	"There are Infidels who walk uprightly; whose dealings with their fellow-men accord with the principles of justice and right; who labor zealously for the good of others; men who judged by their intercourse with their fellow-men, might almost be thought to love their neighbors as themselves. Does the purity of their life afford proof of the truth of their belief? But it may be urged that despite all this they are ungodly. We are willing to grant it," etc.

We believe no one but W. D. B. ever thought of such a "conclusion" as consequent to our reasoning. We plainly admitted and do affirm that something more than unbelievers possess is necessary to constitute men, followers of Christ; and we reasoned from the premise in question to show that Br. B. nor any other human being is capable of determining the correctness of men's faith by the way they act. The soundness of their religion, or the truth of their belief is just what we affirm cannot be known by their actions merely. Don't think, good brother, we underestimate the value of "fruitage." We give it its proper place.

But, alas, our brother has so soon turned upon himself. A moment since the Bible was admitted to be "the great test" of doctrine, and now he falls back upon his affirmation that "the great test" is fruits; and all because the various sects "pretend to found their doctrines on Scripture." "Now all cannot be right," he says. That is true; and that the extent to which each is right can only be decided by appeal to "Scripture" is also true. We warn our Br. that in settling questions of doctrine he had better hold on to the Scriptures; and make them second to nothing. He says: "But equally truth-loving men find diverse doctrines in the 'plain Scriptures.' What are you to do then?" We are unable to say what we would do if it were true that "truth-loving men find diverse doctrines in the plain Scriptures;" but since it is a fact that they only think they find them, we call upon them, saying, Come, dear brethren in Christ, let us endeavor to rid ourselves of mere traditions of men, of our prejudices and preconceived opinions, and prayerfully and carefully search the Bible, and thus get nearer together by attaining to a more perfect knowledge of the truth. Let us get such conceptions of God and His dear Son; let us possess and proclaim so much of truth, yielding our hearts to its sanctifying power, that to whatever sect we may belong, its history will be made richer in the precious legacy of holy lives and its influence for good be broadcast and deep. Do we well, good Br.? Calling thus upon them, what do we find? We find that most religious organizations have each a creed formed; some of them ere yet the sacred page shone with half the effulgence it now does to many minds; that all members of such bodies have been required to subscribe to some article of faith; thus practically pledging themselves to learn nothing more of truth than said creed contains. Some heed the call, see the darkness in which they have been groping, and receive more and glorious light. Filled with delight because of the new-found joy; the fire of devotion burning brighter; the spring of love bubbling up within them and sending forth its delicious streams to refresh and gladden other hearts, and with the sweet spirit of praise making sweeter melody than they had before known, they go to their brethren and sisters, and lovingly and confidingly place before them the sweet morsels of truth. What follows? Why, the gag of creed-proscription is placed in their mouths, and they are thus compelled to choose between silence and ostracism. This, it is true, is less the case than formerly, and will soon cease through fear of depleting their ranks. But, "Where is your criterion of judgment?" he asks. We reply: Between the lids of the Bible.

Our Br. names a list of evils resulting from Roman Catholicism, and a list of virtues resulting from Protestantism (neither is entirely correct), and offers them as evidence of the efficiency of his mode of determining between truth and error. So far, however, from favoring his position they militate against it; for nearly every doctrine held by Protestantism, as a whole, or nearly so, and regarded as vital, is held by Roman Catholicism. This should not be so if his theory be correct. The difference in amount of good accomplished by the two systems arises not so much from a superior quality of doctrine on the part of one, as from other causes. Protestantism, as a whole, so far as respects its dogmas, is much nearer Roman Catholicism than it ought to be after 350 years of existence. It should have learned more, doctrinally, and made greater progress in the general practice of justice and uprightness. "Absence of crime" surely cannot be said of it. The difference in results attained is largely attributable to the fact that while one encourages ignorance, the other seeks to promote the diffusion of knowledge among all classes. Knowledge alone, but especially when assisted by even the most general influences of Christianity, tends to promote freedom and "national ennoblement." Far greater success would have been attained, we think, by Protestantism, had not its children fettered themselves with creeds of their own making. One might infer from W. D. B.'s remarks that we regard the "fruits" of Protestantism as only "pernicious." We trust no such intimation was designed.

Our friend says, on another point, "I am not speaking of one who holds the doctrines of his church theoretically, but actually lives out his church doctrines." Truly this is marvelous logic. Now the great difference between our good Br.'s people and ours is upon two points, viz., the immortality of the soul, and eternal torments for the wicked. They believe the doctrines; we do not: and that is the essential difference between us. What, then, has he to derive benefit from by living out which we have not? Can he "live out" the doctrine of the immortality of the soul? Would he like to try the experiment of living out the doctrine of eternal torments? His mode of judging seems to be to take two religious bodies, select out all who are not consistent (who only hold the doctrines theoretically), and then decide as to the comparative merits of those who do live consistently. Stupendous project! We would rejoice, were it possible to institute a proper and perfect comparison, to have it done, so confident are we respecting results.

It is amusing to see our Br. change positions. A little while since he insisted a certain thing was "the great test" of doctrinal quality; now he only asks that it be considered "strong presumptive evidence." We are disposed to be accommodating, but having gone as far as it is proper to go we "should" not "go a step farther."

Br. Bridge lingers on his second question respecting "Pastors of contiguous churches laboring with equal zeal and fidelity," etc. We will state two existing cases. In a certain village, not many miles from where we reside, there has many years been two contiguous churches. One is Methodist, the other Presbyterian, and the pastors of each have labored with "zeal and fidelity." At no time has the Methodist membership been large, while the Presbyterian membership has so increased that a second church was organized and is thriving. In another neighborhood are two contiguous churches; one Methodist, the other Presbyterian. The pastor, so far as we know, has labored with equal zeal and fidelity. While the Methodist church flourishes, the Presbyterian church has at times barely existed. Do these facts prove Presbyterianism to be nearest right at one place, and Methodism nearest right at the other? Comment is unnecessary except to say, it must be seen that our Br.'s theory makes his "cream" rich only in streaks, and makes the Methodist "cow" give milk of varying quality (we use the expression neither irreverently, nor in a spirit of levity). His "cow and cream" argument is rather too sophistical to answer his purpose with intelligent readers. Still we thank him for the illustration. It reminds us of something that once occurred in connection with a friend of ours, then residing in New York city. That his family might have pure milk, he purchased a cow. The good creature gave a larger quantity of the delicate fluid than was needed, and so a contract was made with a neighboring family to furnish them with the pure article.

A day or two after the delivery commenced the mistress of the neighboring household came and eagerly inquired what was the matter with the milk. She was informed that nothing was the matter. "But" said she, "it is not like what we have always used, and there must be something wrong, for a yellow scum gathers on it." Now, mankind in general throughout the religious world have been accustomed to use gospel milk so diluted with error, that, like much of the merchantable article, it is almost blue; and when we go to them with the "sincere milk of the word, that" they with us, "may grow thereby," its richness is something new to them, and they reject it, and warn others not to touch it, insisting there is poison in it. That which they reject is the very "cream" of the gospel; it manifests God's matchless love. The truth certainly has all the "stirring, arousing qualities predicated of it;" but this terrible prejudice has first to be overcome and removed.

Br. B. thinks our reply to his fourth question contains an implication that certain religionists believe in frightening sinners into repentance, which he says is not true. We admit the implication. We will now make no account of the much "hortatory preaching" we have heard, having a bearing on this subject, nor will we say, of course, that all of any religious body do thus believe and practice, but, taking Br. B. as a representative of a class, we propose to show from his own argument that we have a "right to affirm" what we only implied. In his first article he remarked: "I am led to doubt the power of the doctrine in question" (eternal life only in Christ) "to convert souls. I am led to think that when a man is brought to think that sin's penalty is extinction of being, that when he dies that is the 'end of him,' he will say to himself, who cares then? . . . and so rush on madly, recklessly, ruthlessly." We see, then, it is not the belief of no inherent immortality that he thinks must so much soothe the sinner, but the denial which that doctrine involves, of eternal torments. Thus, in his mind, the danger consists in removing the sinner's fear of suffering. It follows, then, that when W. D. B. preaches the doctrine of eternal suffering, he does it to excite the sinner's fear of hell torments. Is not such preaching an attempt to "frighten sinners into repentance?" The avowal of our friend that he does not believe in frightening sinners into repentance ought to be sufficient to settle the matter so far as he is concerned, but the fact that his argument is so at variance with his avowal suggests the probability that he does not altogether comprehend his own position. This suggestion too furnishes a sort of key to the remarkable expression which followed the language quoted: "I may be in error in this conviction; indeed I hope I am." He cannot strongly believe our doctrines are dangerous if he both desires and expects he is wrong in the belief. He will remember that hope is made up of expectation and desire.

Our friend expresses much surprise at our treatment of his statement respecting French Infidelity. "We would not vilify our brethren in Christ," said he, . . . "but we look back to the time in French history when men rabidly proclaimed, 'death is an endless sleep,' and strode in their wild carnival of fury and blood. And now the same doctrine (though now given us in the interests of religion), asks of us a candid reception." We treated this statement of our Br., the learned clergyman, charitably, and asked him to think again and more wisely. He has thought again, but more unwisely still. He says, "the French Infidel doctrine was eternal sleep for all," and that "now, the same doctrine" is "given in the interests of religion, and asks of us a candid reception." If this is not saying substantially "your doctrines are now given in the interests of religion, it is true, but they are a repetition of that of French infidelity," then we confess to an inability to understand plain language. What, according to Br. B., was their doctrine? It was, that beyond this life, there will never be a conscious existence to any one. He knows we preach no such doctrine, and he should know that a simple point of agreement in two doctrines does not constitute them the "same." We will show that in the doctrines in question, there is no point of agreement. Endeavoring to get out of one difficulty by other than the right way, as it seems to us, he has fallen into several. He argues substantially as follows: "They," (French Infidels) "believed death is an endless sleep to all; and you believe death is an endless sleep to some. Their all embraces your some, consequently you proclaim the same doctrine they did." It is almost a pity to spoil this little labored explanation, but we do not believe death is an endless sleep to any body. The term sleep implies life. When used in the New Testament, with reference to the dead, it implies life existing in the purpose of God to bestow it. "The designation sleep," says Dr. Lange, "is used in the New Testament to denote the death of believers only." The righteous die it is true, but they are said to "sleep" because their "life is hid with Christ in God." This is the gospel message, life from the dead to all that fulfil the gospel conditions. The gospel does not treat of the wicked as "asleep," but dead, destroyed, perished; just as the righteous, too, would have been had not Christ been raised from the dead. None can help seeing, therefore, that the doctrine of the French Infidels is

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie. in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

not the "same" as ours in any sense whatever. But suppose it were admitted that our doctrines are in part the same as that of French Infidelity, that their "all" embrace our "some," it would even then be entirely untrue that "the same doctrine" is now given in "the interests of religion." To the state of death the race do by nature tend; and unless mankind experience the power of the grace and Spirit of Christ, irrevocable must be that state. That is the law. What we present "in the interests of religion" is the gospel promise of Life from the dead through him who is the way, the truth, and the life. Does Br. B. get some light? He sums up by saying: "Sleep eternal for all includes sleep eternal for some. There is where I stand." Does he really fail to see that the inclusion, supposing it to be true, does not constitute the first doctrine the "same" as the last? By parity of reasoning the following would be true, viz., One hundred dollars include fifty dollars, therefore fifty dollars are the "same" as one hundred. Not quite so, however, as our Br. would painfully see should his parishioners act upon that principle in paying their preacher. We must of course, believe he intended to deceive none by his original statement, but he surely must see that his avowal is eminently calculated to deceive all not familiar with our views. May God help us to know the truth, to love it and become willing subjects of its blessed sanctifying power.

Faith.

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

We read that, "Without faith it is impossible to please God." It is a reasonable thing for us, before we approach God in prayer, to believe he is, or exists, and that "he is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him." Thanks be to his name for what little faith I have in God as a hearer and answerer (or rewarder) of prayer. Many times since I started in his service I have found need of more than human help, and can testify to the faithfulness of Him who said: "Ask, and ye shall receive." So much have I learned of the superior assistance it is the Christian's privilege to have, that in all my affairs, temporal or spiritual, I feel unwilling to lead off without asking God's direction. It is a nice point here to discern between God's will and our own imaginations; and we need to be careful not to make fanaticism of faith. But the true child of God has the privilege of being led by the Spirit; and in the darkness of his pilgrim journeyings he may hear his Father say, "This is the way; walk ye in it."

I feel afraid of every species of "visions;" particularly when they are given to us as the oracles of God. That sometimes, even now, God reveals to individuals things for their own special benefit may be quite likely; but when one wishes to regulate the church by his "dreams" and "visions," we have a right to ask by what authority they ask us to accept them? Often we hear well-meaning brethren and sisters say, "I had a vision," or "I saw in vision," such and such things. Why not say, In the exercise of my abundant imaginative faculties, I seemed to see so and so? This is all you can make of it. Any thing more is but what is termed, "Modern Spiritualism."

I never had a "vision" myself, but have seen some wonderful things, after all. The old prophets used to be exercised that way, and what they "saw in vision" has been a light to our pathway many years. They saw the visions; we see the realities. These are visions "whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." They have not run out yet, so there is no necessity for a new lot.

For over a year I have had in my house four volumes of visions, purporting to be divinely inspired. But they are no more in harmony with the teachings of Christ and the old prophets than light is like darkness. Read them; and if you don't get thoroughly disgusted with "I saw in vision," and "I was shown," and like expressions, you have more imitated "charity" than I have. Read especially those chapters on the Judgment, Second Death, etc., comparing them with the Bible, and see if the "same Spirit worketh in all." God keep us from error.

God loves to have us pray with earnestness. The best proof of earnestness is simplicity. Better in God's sight are the broken but heartfelt utterances of a child than the highflown utterances of some who think themselves wonderful in prayer.

Strong as our passions are, they may be starved into submission and conquered without being killed.

Good Words.—An illustrated Monthly Magazine of Literature, Science, Art, and Travel. The May Part is received. Fernyhurst Court, an Every-Day Story, by the author of "Stone Edge," is commenced in this number.

Terms.—Yearly subscription, $2 75. Single number, 25 cents. Liberal Clubbing rates. Specimen number mailed, postage paid, to any address, on receipt of 25 cents.

J. P. Lippincott & Co., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 18, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Rich Tract."

This tract will be issued in a few days: but owing to a "protest" from the Methodist Minister, the two articles intended for one tract will be furnished separately, so that each shall stand on its own merits. This arrangement, however will not prevent those who desire it from having both at the same time. Each tract will be twelve pages—24 pages in all. Fourteen copies of either, or 7 of each, will be sent for twenty cents; which includes the postage.

"Eld. Grant" not "a Convert."

In the "World's Crisis" of last week we find the following:

IS ELD. MILES GRANT A CONVERT?

In the "World's Crisis," for April 20, we find in an editorial item the following:

The punishment of the wicked is eternal death in hell, or hades; not eternal life in misery.

That will do, Br. Grant, if you mean what you say; for, if the wicked have "eternal death in hades," then they never will and never can have a revival. Hades is where the wicked dead are now. Is Br. Grant converted to the blessed truth of "No life, future or eternal, out of Christ?" It would seem so. We welcome him to the trials and joys of such a faith. It has "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The doctrines of "eternal life in misery" and a "future life in misery" are twins, and live or die together. Kill one and you kill the other. One life blood sustains them both.

The above is from the Herald of Life, April 27th. As we do not like to have our friends entertain erroneous opinions, or rejoice in a mistake, perhaps it may be best to say that our belief in the following Scriptures is unshaken: "And many of them [or the multitudes, as some render it] that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."—Dan. xii. 2. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John v. 28, 29.

"But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."—Acts xxiv. 14–15.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell [hades] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged, every man according to their works.—Rev. xx. 13. After hades has "delivered up the dead which" are in it, and they are judged, then they die "the second death," and are returned to sheol, or hades, and there remain dead eternally.

Remarks by the Editor of the Herald of Life.

We certainly would not have Br. Grant's "friends," for a moment, "entertain erroneous opinions" as to his position on the Life question. In setting them right, after quoting our remarks of April 27, he says, "Our belief in the following Scriptures is unshaken;" and then quotes four texts. If Br. Grant thinks the belief of the Editor of the Herald of Life in those "Sriptures is" shaken, we will assure him, and all others, it is not. Our belief in his and his fellow-workers' construction of those texts is just this—They imagine they prove their position of the revival into life of all the wicked dead to be put to death again. Let us test them by a parallel.

They reject the inherent immortality of man, and fight manfully against the doctrine of eternal suffering. Their orthodox opponents, just as coolly as Br. Grant expresses himself, come forward and declare their "belief in the following Scriptures is unshaken," viz:

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment" . . . "Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels."—Matt. xxv. 46, 41. "The devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone . . . and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever."—Rev. xx. 10. "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever."—Rev. xiv. 11. "Cast into hell (gehenna), into the fire that never shall be quenched: where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."—Mark ix. 45, 46.

We have quoted only four orthodox texts, to parallel Br. Grant's four. Does he accept these, and like texts, as proof that the punishment of the wicked is eternal torture? Certainly he does not; but why not? They are as strong or stronger in support of such a theory than his four texts are in support of the revival into life of the wicked dead to die again: or his idea of their being brought out of sheol or hades with the certainty of putting them back again. With the light that now shines on our mind, if we could believe Br. Grant's view of this matter, we could accept the "orthodox" view in a short time. And the first great champion of Br. G.'s view, as opposed to the views now held by us, has gone backward toward eternal torments, till silence has become his method, and he begins to utter words which indicate a return to the doctrine of eternal torture, which he once manfully opposed. Such we believe is the tendency of the doctrine of the revival of the wicked dead to torment and kill them again.

The reason of such apostacy, to our mind, is obvious. The human mind cannot stand still: it either advances or recedes. It follows truth, it may be, for a season; but by and by a truth is presented so much opposed to its prejudices that the person resolves he will not accept it, and sets himself obstinately in opposition to it. Persisting in this course awhile, he becomes indifferent to those truths which led him up to this one; from indifference, at length, he becomes hostile; and ultimately the light that was in him becomes "darkness; and how great is that darkness."

Such, it seems to us, is likely to be the end of those who persist in their opposition to the doctrine that Life, both future and eternal, is only to those who have dwelling in them (at death) "the Spirit of Him who raised up Christ from the dead." Of the wicked dead it is said:

"Drought and heat consume the snow waters: so doth the grave (sheol) those which have sinned."—Job xxiv. 19. "The ungodly shall not stand [koom, rise up] in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous."—Psa. i. 5. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave: death shall feed on them . . . their beauty shall consume in the grave (sheol) from their dwelling:" [margin: "the grave being a habitation unto every one of them."] . . . "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light. Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish."—Psa. xlix. 14, 19, 20. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise."—Isa. xxvi. 14. "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you."—John vi. 53.

Here is a sample of testimony concerning the destiny of wicked men; and so far as mere textual quotations can do it, they prove as much against a revival into life of the wicked dead, as Br. Grant's do for it; and we think far more; but then, all must see that it is not textual quotations alone that is to decide this or any other Scriptural question. The context must be consulted—the general tenor of Scripture must be taken into the account, and the known or revealed character of God must be kept in view. Any construction put upon words or texts that does not take all these things into the account is no more to be relied on than any other human speculation. We ask no man to receive our views on this question because we quote texts. Every one has a right to demand of us to show that such is the general tenor of the Bible, and that it is in harmony with the revealed character of God, and His government.

All men are dying—going out of life. "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world might live by means of him." Syriac, John iii. 17. The Gospel proclamation is one of Life. No additional penalty or pains are inflicted for the rejection of this offered benefit; the sinner goes out of life as he was going, though under greater guilt. Our Lord himself has stated the case in this same chapter as follows: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John iii. 14, 15.

It requires none of the traditions of men to understand this testimony. "In the wilderness," men were dying from the sting of fiery flying serpents. God provided a remedy. A brazen serpent was lifted up; whosoever looked upon it, lived. If they refused or neglected to look, they died. They would have died, if no brazen serpent had been lifted up. Was there anything added to their punishment if they did not look? Did they die twice for it? If so, there is no record of it.

Thus, men are dying—the serpent's sting or poison of sin is in them, and they are going out of life hopelessly. Christ is lifted up as was the brazen serpent in the wilderness. What for? Ans. "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Suppose they do not believe in Him; what is the result? Do they die twice? Not if the Saviour's statement above is correct. They die as they would have died if Christ had never been "lifted up." They die in unbelief; and have no revival into life from that death. Not one text, from Genesis to Revelation saith they shall ever live again, and when our opposing brethren can find such a text, they will find "immortal soul," and "eternal torments" along with it; and then their theory of the "second death" being a literal death is swept away, and their whole fabric falls.

When the Saviour says of the believer, four times in one chapter, "I will raise him up at the last day," the language clearly excludes the resurrection of the unbeliever: "he shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. No life out of Christ.

The Two Resurrections Abandoned.

W. H. Booker inquires if "all the righteous are included in the first resurrection."

All the dead in Christ rise first (1 Thess. iv. 16); that is, before the living are changed. But you probably refer to Rev. xx. On the first ten verses of this chapter we cannot at present give light, but are prepared to receive it. The entire Bible, with the exception of the first part of this chapter, teaches that the righteous and the wicked will rise at the same time, and not a thousand years apart. (John v. 28, 29; Dan. xii. 1–3.) We cannot build a theory on one text.

We take the above, except the heading, from the "Advent Christian Times," of May 10. We are glad the "Times" has come to the conclusion that it "cannot build a theory on one text." We are, also, gratified to find the editor of the "Times" has abandoned Rev. xx. 1–10 as proof of the resurrection of the wicked dead; because if it proves their resurrection, it equally proves the event is a thousand years later than that of the saints "that sleep in the dust of the earth," and that would ruin the mortal resurrection theory, which is built on not even "one text" in the Bible: it is "created out of nothing," as theologians say the world was.

The "Times," of the same date as the above, in answer to another question, says:

The wicked after their resurrection out of hades are to be cast into gehenna, or the lake of fire, which is the second death.—Matt. x. 28; Rev. xx. 14.

As to Matt. x. 28 nothing is said of any resurrection; and it remains to be proved that the text has any thing to do with a resurrection; and as Rev. xx. 14 is but "one text," the "Times cannot build a theory on" it, and should not try to do what itself says, "We cannot" do. Outside of the symbols of Revelation the term "second death" never occurs in the Bible; and if the "Times cannot at present give light" "on the first ten verses of Rev. xx.," which many suppose—and its editor once did—teaches two resurrections a thousand years apart, how can we trust its assumption that the 14th verse teaches that, "the wicked" are first to have a revival into life "out of hades," and then to have a "second death?" If the "Times" does not know what to do with "the first ten verses," how does it know, and how does anybody know, that its assumption on verse 14 is reliable? "Death and hell" certainly do not die twice; and yet this same verse saith, "Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." If death and hell go to the second death, and yet never die but once, how is the "Times" to prove, that language means die twice?

As to the statement of the "Times," that "The entire Bible with the exception of the first part of this chapter (Rev. xx.), teaches that the righteous and the wicked will rise at the same time," etc.; we remark, if the Bible teaches the revival into life of the wicked dead at all, the "Times" is correct. But the question is, Does the Bible teach that wicked dead men will live again? "John v. 28, 29; Dan. xii. 1–3," do not teach that doctrine; the latter text clearly does not; and if the first does, it is but "one text," and the "Times cannot build a theory on one text," though it has tried long, apparently, to do so on this question of the living again of the wicked dead.

But we have not quite done with this matter. The idea that the wicked will live again at the same time that the saints do, is palpably contradicted by many testimonies. When Christ says of the believer, "I will raise him up at the last day," and repeats it to the fourth time in John vi., what value is there in this promise, if He will, also, at the same time, raise the unbeliever?

When our Lord says, "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hades shall not prevail against it" (Math. xvi. 18), what more is promised than the wicked dead will realize? for, saith the "Times" "The wicked after their resurrection out of hades are cast into gehenna," etc. Hence hades does not "prevail against" the wicked; for they are taken "out of it," saith the "Times," and are therefore, so far, subjects of deliverance as really as the "Church," and our Lord's words are meaningless as to a peculiar event.

Again: Paul tells us that he labored and suffered, "If," said he, "by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. iii. 11. Can any candid criticism make anything else of this verse than this; Some will not have a resurrection from the dead: I labor and suffer that I may have? It, at least, proves Paul had no idea that the wicked dead would live again at the same time the saints do.

These are samples, which we might easily multiply, of texts which go to show that either the wicked dead are not brought out of hades—the state of death—or, if brought out, it is not at the same time the righteous are. In either case the mortal resurrection theory is shown to be an error, without "one text" for its support. Let it die, and along with it, dies the theory of the reliving of the wicked dead; and then the glory of the redeemed, clothed with immortality, comes into view, rising in one glorious company, unmixed with corruptible beings, they shall be "caught up together . . . to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be ever with the Lord."—1 Thess. iv. 18. "Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."—Verse 19.

The Judgment Message.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

A strange fascination clusters around the symbolic history of this dispensation as viewed in the pages of Revelation. Whether we contemplate the numerous events therein symbolized, which are now facts of history, or those grand and crowning events of the future, presented to us in glowing scenes by the Holy Spirit, our hearts cannot fail to be stirred with peculiar interest.

THE SWIFT TRAVELLING OF THE GOSPEL SYMBOLIZED.

One of the first thoughts in this passage which arrest our attention is the representation of God's messengers travelling swiftly, "having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." Let us for a moment consider the lightning-like rapidity of travelling in our times, introduced by the invention of steam power, and a more suitable application of this symbol cannot be found; and the rapidity with which the gospel has travelled in these latter days can hardly be more appropriately represented than by the divinely-commissioned messengers flying swiftly "in the midst of heaven."

"THE EVERLASTING GOSPEL"—WHAT IS IT?

We are told that this proclamation is the "everlasting gospel;" but the Scriptures, we believe, will not warrant us in understanding this gospel to be a different proclamation—or message to man—than what is elsewhere found in the pages of inspiration. Let us look at a few passages in proof of this position: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all things."—Heb. i. 1, 2. And again, the apostle Paul speaks to us: "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. . . . For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Gal. i. 8, 12. Thus we are to understand that even an angel from heaven could not preach a different gospel, from that which Paul preached, with Divine sanction; for he received it not from man, but was taught it by the revelation of Jesus Christ. Therefore, Paul was but an instrument in the hands of Christ, and the gospel which he preached proceeded from the great Head of the Church. What was the nature of the gospel which Paul, thus divinely-inspired, delivered unto man? He preached the gospel, (which signifies good news) of a coming kingdom, to be set up by Christ; the inheritance of the saints, promised to Abraham and his seed; and Paul tells us that "if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. iii. 29. Therefore, we believe that the gospel, which is represented as being carried with rapidity into all parts of the world, is this good news of the kingdom of God, which shall soon dash into pieces all earthly governments, and, like a great mountain, fill the whole earth. Then this groaning world, redeemed, purified, and glorified, shall shine forth in all the lustre of its Edenic glory. This same gospel message we have presented to us in the prediction of Jesus that "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached into all the world as a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. xxiv. 14. This universal preaching of the gospel is not for the purpose of converting all nations, but the whole world are summoned to "fear God, and give glory to Him, for the hour of His judgment is come," i. e., it is near at hand, and soon the vials of His indignation shall be poured out upon the rejectors of His grace. The wide-spread proclamation of this message, during the past twenty-five years, until the uttermost parts of the earth have heard the thrilling news of Christ's return, gives us strong assurance that the end, of which He spoke, is near at hand.

THE OVERTHROW OF ROME.

The passage which we have chosen for our text clearly presents to us the certainty of a day of judgment in the future—a day for the outpouring of God's wrath upon all the workers of unrighteousness. But we may properly consider this passage with special reference to God's judgment upon the great anti-christian power which John in vision had beheld as "drunken with the blood of the saints," and as making war upon the Christian Church the largest portion of the gospel dispensation. He says: "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornications."

The overthrow of the Papal power—"that great city"—will undoubtedly immediately follow the judgment proclamation presented in our text. All Scripture seems to warrant this conclusion. In other portions of Revelation the overthrow of Rome is graphically pictured to the Church as occurring.

(1.) At a time, when, in the height of her haughty pride, she shall say in her heart, "I sit a queen and am no widow; and shall see no sorrow;" at a time, when, in a forsaken condition, she shall be accused of widowhood, and threatened with sorrow. Such was her condition when the Ecumenical Council assembled in Rome; and we have these words of the Revelator verily fulfilled in the Pope's opening address to the Council.

(2.) Her overthrow shall come suddenly—"And she shall be utterly burned with fire"—for "in one hour is she made desolate."—Rev. xviii. Many of Zion's watchmen anxiously await this epoch of destruction to Antichrist, and of triumph to the Church.

A DANGER IMPLIED—ITS EXTENT.

From the reference to Babylon's overthrow in immediate connection with our text, many have been led to suppose that the judgment, represented as being at hand, would be visited solely upon this anti-christian power; but many facts compel us to believe that it has a wider application. The warning message goes forth to the whole world; and a warning supposes a danger to exist. If the danger was confined solely to Rome, an inconsistency, not easily reconciled, would appear by embracing in the warning proclamation those who are not in danger of the visitation of the judgment. The fact that this message goes forth to the whole world is conclusive proof to our mind that the truth of this passage is, that God's judgment will not fall upon one anti-christian power, but that the fearful hour of His wrath will be visited upon the whole ungodly world.

The overthrow of Rome, in the hour of God's triumph, is a prominent feature in this judgment day, and is one of those grand scenes in the closing hours of this dispensation, when it will sink in the darkness of destruction, never more to arise in her deceptive power. Christ and His Church will finally triumph gloriously, and the fearful blot of sin will be forever wiped out.

"Saints, lift up your heads! the day is near
When your Redeemer shall appear,
To take the kingdom and the crown,
And make His ransomed Church His own."

[To be Continued.]

Rochester, N. Y., May, 1870.

Saving Truth.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

The question whether preaching the resurrection from the dead through Christ, or, no future life out of Christ, draws so many into the churches, is an interesting and important one; and we feel drawn to look at the matter as it now exists, and as it formerly existed.

First, we will look at Papacy. What are its teachings? The mystery of iniquity, we believe, with its head taking the place of God. But what is its membership? Thousands, tens of thousands, yea, millions. This first is of ancient origin, although not so ancient as they claim; so we will look at one of a more recent beginning, Spiritualism.

We can all remember its starting point, and we as well know its vile teachings and practices. The Spirit speaks expressly of them in 1 Tim. iv. The Lord help us utterly to shun all such things. How does this Spiritualism, or, more properly Animalism, rank as to numbers? Alas, they can be counted by the millions.

Now the orthodox churches come up before us. We do not class them with the two above mentioned, although they hold some doctrines in common with them, which we positively assert are not found in the word of God. We mean the immortality of the soul. That is a dogma of the Papal church, so also the root and foundation of so called Spiritualism. Thinking men and women; Bible reading men and women; when will you honestly search the Bible for yourselves? But we were particularly looking at membership. The orthodox churches taken singly, don't for a moment rank with those two first. And take them as a whole, Romanism far out numbers them; still, they far out-number us few Life believers. But don't we have a Supreme Court to resort to? Yes; and an unfailing one. To the Word of God.

First, look at John, his teachings, his baptism. He was a man sent from God, and came saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. John told them to do something: an outward ordnance,

Here are numbers, sufficiently so, all the region; but what is their character? Let us have the man of God's testimony. O generation of vipers, . . . bring forth fruits meet for repentance. Isn't baptism a saving ordinance? It seems it did not save those men. Still they came out, and were baptized too. There was another Baptizer and baptism coming. Let us see if they were as popular, if they drew as many into the church.

We now come to the Great Teacher. The Master himself. John introduced him, saying, I knew him not; but that he should be made manifest to Israel therefore am I come baptizing with water. He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire. Here is a grand change in the programme; a spiritual teacher, a Spirit baptism. But how goes the numbers now? This last comes highly recommended. He that sent John to baptize with water said, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit, John saw and bare record that this is the Son of God.

We can't follow this blessed one through all his wanderings and teachings. Space forbids. We find him selecting a few faithful ones to be with him. Sometimes we find him in the midst of a multitude feeding them, etc.; but were his teachings received? Listen to him in the vith chap. of John. There, he comes out plainly on the resurrection, and makes it conditional too. In the 38th verse, His doings and his will are in harmony with his Father's. So here is high authority. This is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me, I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day. Next verse. That every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day. Ver. 44. No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day. But stronger yet. Ver. 53–4. Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. Here is strong meat; "an hard saying; who can hear it?" This is conditional resurrection, without doubt; and it is the Father's will as well as the Son's. Are other parts of Scripture out of harmony with this? No, never. They may not be quite so plain, but all agree. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. We need the baptism of the Spirit before we can be raised; "the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." What of numbers now? "From that time many of his disciples went back and walked no more with him." Alas, "you have broken up the church!"

Was he moved? Did he turn round and preach something pleasing to get them back? Was not he afraid of the influence? No, no. He simply turned to the twelve and said, "Will ye also go away?" It was the truth. He had proclaimed it; "I am the resurrection and the life." "He that believeth not on the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Thank God, Jesus has some true followers who will preach the naked truth, whether men will hear or go away.

Racine, Wis., May, 1870.

The Tabernacle.

God said to Moses, See thou make the tabernacle in all things according to the pattern shown to thee in the mount. How anxious Moses must have been on some points, in the dimensions, figures, embellishments, furniture, etc. I imagine I hear him often ejaculating, Lord help me. We learn that the tabernacle was completed with all the vessels, and not a word of reproof that anything was left out or wrongly constructed. On the contrary, the Divine glory fills it, and approved of its fitness and the fidelity of its master-builder.

These things are written for our admonition. What then is our pattern to follow but the great example, the Lord Jesus? Can the Christian be fashioning his life after the pattern who takes advantage of circumstances to enrich his coffers to the detriment of others, or is anxious to secure the gold that perishes? Can we be imitating the pattern if we array ourselves or families in gold or costly apparel, or ride in princely state? We hear of Jesus riding but once except on the water. Did he enter Jerusalem in a carriage of state, drawn by caparisoned horses, attended by liveried servants, while the populace shouted because of his regal splendor? No; he entered that city on a colt, the foal of an ass, without even a saddle; nothing but the garments of his disciples, with palm branches strewed in the way. True the attending multitude made the city ring with their shouts, which were not because of magnificence and splendor, but from a strong conviction that one more than man was guiding that colt. See, said the people, never man spake like this man.

Does the Christian copy after this pattern when he returns railing for railing, blesses his friends, and loads his enemies with bitter invectives, or when he reproves with taunts that bite like a serpent and sting like an adder? Our pattern, when reviled, blessed; when persecuted, suffered it. In reproof, how mild. When in the agony of the garden—when sorrowful even unto death—finding self-confident Peter asleep, he did not reproach him, but said, Peter could you not watch one hour? After twice agonizing in prayer, Jesus finds them all asleep again, but he makes the most tender allowance saying, The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. When on the cross, as nature was yielding to the dread monster, death, He remembers his mother and disciples. In this dread hour, He rises to such a height of disinterested love as makes the human mind dizzy in its contemplation, while He remembers his crucifiers and prays, Father forgive them, they know not what they do. This is a pattern, beloved friends. Will we build according to it in all things? Thus will the Divine fulness fill our hearts, and peace and joy reign there that no outward circumstances can disturb. When the great consummation takes place, and we see Jesus on the throne of his glory how delightful will the sound of welcome be to us; we shall then fully comprehend the wisdom of our course and the love and faithfulness of our great Exampler.

Lucretia B. Lamb

St. Paul, Minn., May, 1870.

Getting Blessed.

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

Some people think the only way to "have a blessing" during religious meetings, is to "get happy." If their sympathies or imaginations of celestial things are fully wrought upon, until they, forgetting the cross, seem almost to be in possession of the crown, why, they have been blessed. Well, it is a pleasant state to be in, I confess, and the poet says:

> "My willing soul would stay
> In such a frame as this,
> And sit and sing itself away
> To everlasting bliss."

But, dear soul, there's something to be done in the vineyard of the Lord besides singing and shouting. These are religious recreations —our family amusements. But many a more profitable blessing has been a source of shame and humiliation. It was a rich blessing that St. Paul got on his way to Damascus; but it made him fall to the ground a blinded man. Ah! that was getting blessed, blessed with a knowledge of sins and of his Saviour.

It is more natural for people to lift up their heads and rejoice, when listening to descriptions of coming glory, than when learning how to walk in this world, or having their preconceived doctrinal opinions dissected. It should be a cause of rejoicing when we find that our views of the Bible have been incorrect, and our hearts should thankfully yield to the light of truth.

There certainly is more than one way of "getting blessed." Going to meeting and feeling happy is one way; but being exhorted, instructed and built "up in our most holy faith" is another way. The first may be most agreeable to human nature, but the blessing of knowing our failings is the most profitable.

Feeding Hills, Mass., April, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

We can hardly forbear adding the following item in illustration of excitement happiness and "flying to heaven." We have had it in our pocket several weeks:

At an enthusiastic meeting among the negroes in Blount county, N. C., last week, the mourner's bench was crowded with penitents when one of them, a sable damsel of elephantine proportions, sprang to her feet crying, "If dis nigger had de wings of a June bug she'd fly right to heaven." Her enthusiasm was checked at that juncture by a matter-of-fact sister, who raised her head and brought the new convert's thoughts back from the ideal to the real, thusly: "You fool, what do you mean? If you had a June bug's wings, don't you know a woopecker'd gobble you 'fore you got half a mile!"

Mrs. Eliza Bennett to Eld. Brush.

Dear Sir: I cannot forbear to express thus publicly, my deep gratitude to the Father of mercies, for the great benefits he has conferred on my family and this community, within the past few weeks.

My gratitude, also extends to all who were instrumental in carrying forward this glorious work; for this reason I am prompted to address you, thankfully acknowledging the success of your labors here.

Before you came, revival meetings had been protracted for some weeks in and about Riceville. God's Spirit was working in the hearts of the people, but many Christians stood aloof, leaving the faithful few, to prosecute the work. Spiritism was defiant, and fools saying in their heart, "There is no God."

At this juncture, official duties as Presiding Elder led you among us. Earnestly and persistently you held up the mirror of God's word before the people. Sinners flocked by scores to the position of penitents. Numbers of men who had spent from thirty to fifty years in the service of sin, and little children just old enough to comprehend the fact that Jesus loved and died for them, knelt together asking pardon and strength to begin a new life. A flame of love spread to every Christian heart, leading them in "one accord, to one place." Spiritism was subdued, and one who had been an avowed infidel, said to me, "Since Monday noon I have not doubted the existence of God, and I can trust Him implicitly."

I should be derelict in duty were I not to acknowledge here my belief, that in the case of my family, God is honoring the truths I have inculcated, especially that of "No future life out of Christ." I have observed with interest and curiosity, its workings on a hard heart and a most resolute will, and it seems to me that its effect has been to soften the heart, relax the will, and lead the person to surrender all to that loving Father who "gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life."

On that first "day of the feast," among the motives enumerated which should lead men to Christ, you stated this truth, that only through a union with Him could vitality (or life) be secured, illustrating this point by the cut artery which must result in death, unless a remedy be applied. Just here, it seemed to me that you could not trust your logical weight upon the decaying plank of men's inherent immortality. Indeed, if I mistake not, you more than once exhorted us to seek it as a boon only to be obtained by "patient continuance in well doing."

What was the "Thou" God addressed in Adam's case when he said, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return?" Was it not the intelligent, rational part of his nature? As a failure, he was personally condemned and made to understand that he would be resolved into the original elements from which he was created, showing that he could no more have a living existence after death, than before his creation.

In conclusion, allow me to express the hope that you may find the very keenest weapons in God's armory of truth, with which to repel the on coming hosts of Spiritism, and at last win the reward of those who "turn many to righteousness" at that great day, when the King of kings shall come with his shining retinue, to judge the nations, and "shake terribly the earth." Yours in gratitude, respect and Christian hope.

Riceville, Iowa, April 4, 1870.

The Resurrection.

Touching the resurrection of the dead, after admitting the fact, there remains but one great question, which is, whether the same identical body, after death and absolute decomposition takes place, is to be reorganized or recreated from the same original elements, and thus be raised again, and be the same individual he was when alive, mortality excepted. I will answer this question by proposing another. Can a house after being burned to ashes be remodeled or rebuilt, and yet be the same original house?

An all-creative power might indeed recreate a structure in the exact similitude of the original body or being, but to make it the same would be to require impossibilities. I know it is said, "With God all things are possible." But we must learn to understand by this expression that absolute incongruities are to be an exception. All things in the mind of infinite wisdom and goodness necessary to be accomplished for the promotion of his own glory, and the best ultimate good of subordinate beings, can be done.

Having briefly reviewed the first side of the question, we will give to Paul the opposite. "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" —1 Cor. xv. 35. In this sentence two questions are involved. To the first he replies, "Thou fool: that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." That is, cannot be brought to a new life, or the old one restored, except it first die; and "that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be;" that is, you do not expect the return of the same identical seed sown, but its exact likeness in a new crop, the true representative of the original seed.

All this in accordance with the laws which govern the reproduction of vegetable seeds; which when fully matured is as nearly the same with the original as creative power could make it. The strength and beauty of the figure applied to the resurrection of the dead is of better adaptation to the design, and a more complete answer to the question than mere human wisdom could have devised.

The first question having been answered, he proceeds to the second. "And with what body do they come?" For the answer I refer the reader to v. 40, and onward. First a terrestrial, second a celestial body; sown in corruption, raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor, raised in glory; sown in weakness, raised in power; sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body.

Here it is objected that Paul contradicts his own figure, but it is not so. He makes no other allusion to the resurrection than that strictly carried out in the above figure. Not the resurrection of the same seed sown but an existence derived, a new growth from the same original seed. Paul says, "To every seed he giveth his own body;" that is its own natural product, the same in appearance, substance, quality and nature.

This figure when applied to the resurrected state of the saint, implies a new mode of existence connected with a new life, identical with the original in his most perfect state of manhood. The elements which secure his future immortality existed in his first estate, such as faith, hope, and charity, with every grace and virtue, engendered by the power of Christianity. Connected with eternal life, these are elements which cannot die.

The future state of the righteous is set forth in beautiful language by Peter. "According to his abundant mercy hath he begotten us again to a lively [or living] hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead; to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled," etc. That is, begotten from a state of death by the resurrection of Christ. What to? An incorruptible inheritance. "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever." The ever living and ever abiding word of God, which is the incorruptible seed, first sown in the human mind while in the present life. Though the human body may crumble to dust and all its natural elements be dissolved, that living word assures us of a new and other mode of existence beyond the reach of sickness, pain, or death.

Allen Crocker.

[Note.—Our venerable brother's age and candor entitle him to a hearing, however we may disagree with his conclusions.—Ed.—Advent Ch. Times.

Remarks by Editor of Herald of Life.

We have no knowledge of the "venerable brother" who speaks in the foregoing article: but he speaks like one who has studied his Bible, and his words are worthy of consideration, and contrast well with the mortal resurrection theory. No wonder the "Times" should "disagree with his conclusions."

Letters and Extracts.

From Samuel Brown.

Br. Storrs: I send you ten dollars to finish paying my pledge. I sent you ten last November, and now I enclose ten more. I hope I shall be able to do more the year to come. I feel that under God you are doing a great work. May the Lord spare your life to labor in it still.

Ministers and churches feel the power of truth, and know not what to say. It is wonderful how they have changed in their manner of preaching while they seem to hold on to their old views of the immortality of the soul, yet they say very little about it, and use the Bible language in their preaching, and they don't look upon those of us who stand up for the truth as being infidels.

One prominent member of one of our churches said, if he should give the subject as thorough an examination as I had, he thought he might come to the same conclusion. There is where the difficulty is. They are afraid to examine for fear they will have to give up their traditions; but some will read, and their foundation is crumbling from under them. Time and God's truth will work a revolution; be patient therefore, brethren unto the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who will bring to light the hidden things of darkness.

I some expect to come East this summer, and if I should, I shall come and see you if the Lord will. I have never seen Jesus, yet I love Him. I have never seen Br. Storrs, yet I have learned to love him. Why not? We are all members of the same body, all drink at the same fountain, all partake of the same Spirit, are all one in Christ Jesus. I have learned to love many that I have never seen, but I hope to see them when Jesus comes.

Milwaukee, Wis., May 2, 1870. No. 1,614, Fond du Lac Ave.

From James Smith.

Br. Storrs: I am yet in the land of the living; and yet it is the land of the dying. The God of love has raised me up to comfortable health, thank His dear name. Last summer I expected I should be laid in the narrow house before this; but here I am a spared monument of God's mercy. My prayer was, that the Lord would raise me up to comfortable health, and thank his dear name that He heard the voice of my supplication, and I am now able to labor and support myself and family at present. I thank the Lord that you are preserved to give the Church the gospel hope that has so long been buried up by traditions. I have been searching for truth for 27 years, and I am satisfied the dead know not anything, and never will, unless the Life-giver comes to give them life. O the goodness of God in the gift of his Son to save a lost race; for all are lost in Adam. But all that get into Christ will live again, having obtained life and immortality through him. I am often cheered by this faith and hope; and I am glad to find so many cheering epistles in the Herald of Life. I read them over and over, they are so good. Brethren and sisters, let us lay aside every weight that we may run with patience the race set before us, looking unto Jesus who is the author and the finisher of our faith and hope. I write simply to let you know how good the Lord is to raise me up again from a feeble state to enjoy com fortable health. I will just say, my age is 82, in October next. Yours in hope of life when the Life-giver comes.

Orrington, Me., May, 1870.

From Eld. Wm. P. Shockey.

Br. Storrs: Please say that I have come to this vicinity to preach the word of the kingdom. And as there is an inability to pay the heavy expense of travel, and a small amount to feed and clothe myself and family, and as about forty have a great desire to be taught the word of the kingdom vs. sectarianism, they have sent for me to spend three months with them, and have put me in a three months' term of school at $40 a month. I will remain till July, and inform you of progress. Where there are a few of the faith, it seems very hard to get them to see that each one is commanded to supply the poor according to their ability. If a faithful preacher tell them so, it is easy to get insulted, and they see a thousand microscopic errors magnified into "camels going through a needle's eye;" and he must plod alone in this world of opposition. I can only be faithful, to say: "Be ready to communicate; with such sacrifices God is well pleased."—Heb. xiii. 13. "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things richly. That they do good; that they be rich in good works; ready to distribute; willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the day to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."—1 Tim. vi. 17, 19. Then, and not until then, can we get it. Then will not the hard-run have to draft on their little above their ability; and the rich feed in great increase and luxury, and complain that "it takes so much for this and that, that we can't meet it." O what are you doing? Who has left a weeping wife and dependent children to meet the frowns of a cold and apostate world? Who is willing to unite in his sacrifice their money, that their prayers may be heard, to meet the necessities of the preacher, and relieve him of doctors' bills, and shed a balm to his broken heart, away from all earthly subjects of true affection, so as to get a crown in the soon coming kingdom of our Lord? "God help you," the last prayer of my weeping wife.

Tipton, Mo., April 23, 1870.

From S. & L. W. Bragg.

Beloved Pilgrims in the Gospel Hope: Salvation is free, and is sweetly and freely flowing, as we go from place to place. The foretaste of the eternal weight of unfading glory never was sweeter than now. Though hope has been long deferred, yet it proves as an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, and entereth to that within the veil. We can never be satisfied until we awake in the likeness of Christ, and are settled down in glory with all the immortal host of God, to be parted no more forever.

In Corinna and Exeter, Me., there has been quite a rising in the Lord, of late; and poor wanderers coming home to Father's house with rejoicing on the part of the saints and angels; and one poor sinner seemed resolved to serve the Lord, while deep conviction was felt by others. Have had a good time in Surry with a small company of saints, composed of a few sisters, who have kept up their prayer meetings for the most part ever since '54 without any brother to help, only as occasional ones happen along. At times they feel almost discouraged, but still they are hoping on, and trusting in the Lord for help in every time of need.

At Tody Pond, Surry, there is quite a waking up with two or three of the saints, who have lived there. Backsliders, church members, the worldling, and all, seem to be stirred with the truth, and are searching almost daily to know what truth is, and longing to hear more. Others around are saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us. O that we might see more humble and faithful laborers in the harvest-field. For the harvest truly is great, but laborers are few. O, thank the good Lord that we can see a few coming in at the eleventh hour, to receive the crown of eternal life, so soon to be given. O yes, soon we shall lay our armor down for the honor and glory eternal. O, the prospect is so transporting. Saviour, hasten thy coming, we pray. We sigh for the land thou hast promised; for the dawn of the bright and endless day. O bless and praise the good Lord forever and evermore, is the language of our unworthy hearts, for the blessing of love Divine, which leads our hearts to love His soon-coming glory, when we'll no more be pilgrims in this, the enemy's land of sorrow, sickness and death; but shall be citizens of the New Jerusalem, all clothed upon with immortality, eternal vigor and beauty; with fulness of joy and pleasures forevermore. O, our longing hearts are exulting to go to be with Jesus and angels, our kindred so dear. None guess how wondrous our journey will prove. Here we look like poor, weary, wayworn travellers, outcast and despised by the wise and noble (so-called) of the earth. But what a change when the last great scale shall turn for eternal joys to the sacrificing company; and eternal death to those who have lived in self-gratification all their days.

The good Lord help us to live more and more for Jesus every day. Living more and more by faith, which brings a present and full salvation from sin, now, and eternal salvation when Jesus comes.

From pilgrims and strangers in the gospel hope and love.

Orrington, Me., May 11, 1870.

From Mrs. J. P. Brock.

Br. Storrs: I enclose $3 for the Herald of Life. I love the doctrine it advocates, viz., No future life only to those who believe in Christ our Saviour. I can truly say, it has been the means of sanctifying me more fully unto the Lord. I do not believe it is always wisdom to believe as did our fathers before us, for the wise man assures us that the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Prov. iv. 18.

We that have got the truth, let us sell it not; neither enter into any compromise that shall in the least abridge our liberty in the Lord. I do praise the Lord for the freedom there is in the gospel of Christ. May we ever be ready to defend the truths that the Lord hath entrusted to us, not in word only, but in deed, and according to His blessed word. Then, when the Nobleman shall return to reckon with us, his servants, we may be able to render up our account with joy.

Yours in the bond of love, the fellowship of the Gospel and hope of soon seeing Jesus and being made like him, to die no more.

Manchester, N. H., May 5, 1870.

Thomas W. Vick, Kalamo, Mich., writes: This is to say to you, and all the loved ones scattered in different parts of the Master's vineyard, that we dearly prize the Herald of Life and the truths it contains. The paper does not remain long in the house before it is well looked over to see if there is not a friendly greeting from some familiar face; but they are rare indeed. I humbly trust, that if we are so unspeakably happy as to overcome the world with all its trials and temptations and meet where Jesus is, and gain admittance to the tree of Life, we shall all recognize each other.

God has ordained, man shall never be at rest out of Christ. He only is our rest and our peace.

Happy Illustration.

I remember that on my return to France, in a vessel that had been on a voyage to India, as soon as the sailors perfectly distinguished the land of their native country, they became in a great measure incapable of attending to the duties of the ship. Some looked at it wistfully, without the power of minding anything else: others dressed themselves in their best clothes, as if they were going that moment to disembark; some talked to themselves and others wept.

As we approached, the disorder of their minds increased. As they had been absent several years there was no end to their admiration of the hills, the foliage of the trees, and even the rocks which skirted the shore, covered with weeds and mosses. The church-spires of the village where they were born, which they distinguished at a distance up the country, and which they named one after another, filled them with transports of delight.

But when they saw on the quays their fathers and mothers, their wives, their children, and their friends, stretching out their arms with tears of joy, and calling them by their names, it was no longer possible to retain them on board; they all sprang on shore, and it became necessary, according to the custom of the port, to employ another set of mariners to bring the vessel to her mooring.

What then would be the case were we indulged with a sensible display of that heavenly country, to be inhabited by those who are worthy of our most sublime affections? The laborious and vain cares of this life would from that moment come to an end. Its duties would be forsaken, and all our powers and feelings would be lost in perpetual rapture. It is wisdom, therefore, that a veil is spread over the glories of futurity. Let us enjoy the hope that the happy land awaits us, and, in the mean time, let us fulfil with cheerfulness and patience what belongs to our present condition.—Selected.

The Most Beautiful Hand.—I recollect that once there was a dispute between three ladies, which had the most beautiful hand. One sat by a stream, and dipped her hand into the water, and held it up; another plucked strawberries until the ends of her fingers were pink; and the third gathered violets until her hands were fragrant. An old haggard woman passing by asked, "Who will give me a gift for I am poor." All three denied her, but another who sat near, unwashed in the stream, unstained with fruit, unadorned with flowers, gave her a little gift and satisfied the poor woman. And then she asked them what was the dispute; and they told her and lifted up before her their beautiful hands. "Beautiful indeed," said she, when she saw them; but when they asked her which was the most beautiful, she said, "It is not the hand that is washed clean in the brook; it is not the hand that is tipped with red; it is not the hand garlanded with fragrant flowers; but it is the hand that gives to the poor which is the most beautiful hand." As she said these words, her wrinkles fled; her staff was thrown away, and she stood before them an angel from heaven, with authority to decide the question in dispute.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex one, and in prudently cultivating an undergrowth of small pleasures, since very few great ones are let on long leases.

"The Antichrist Again."

We are compelled to omit till next week, the continuance of that article.

Appointments.

W. N. Pile will preach at Cooper Institute (Room 24), New York City, Sunday, May 22.

Orrington, Me., at Chapel, May 22.
Geo. W. Brown.

Lewiston, Me., Sunday, May 1 and 22.
West Leeds, Me., Sunday, May 29.
J. C. Wheeler,
North Turner, Bridge, Me.

Lewiston, Sunday, May 22.
S. Bragg.

Wallingford Farms, Conn., Sunday, May 22.
West Meriden, Conn., Sunday, May 29.
Wm. Stuart.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Moses Hampton, James Roswell, S. J. Bronson, Thomas Jardine, F. N. Fry, R. F. Rowell, J. W. Buckland, Charles Hoxie, A. Carter, Russell Barnard, Jas. Harling, D. H. Willard.

Two dollars each from—J. D. Sheridan, Wm. J. McCormack, Moses Winslow, E. D. Daniels, Andrew Wheeler, J. M. Smith, Sereno Fisk.

Various sums—A. Powell, $25 on pledge; L. J. Beach, $10 on pledge; E. H. Beach, $5 on pledge; David W. White, $25 on pledge; Samuel Brown, $10 on pledge; W. J. Waller, $4.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Thos. W. Vick, J. W. Gregg, (book), R. D. Currier, A. W. Prescott, Lois V. Elliott, Horace Story, S. Bragg, Russell Barnard.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Thos. W. Vick.—We have sent the works again.

Knocking at the Door.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."—Rev. iii. 20.

Hark! methinks I hear one knocking,—
'Tis the Saviour at the door;
See, He pleads with arms extended,
For your heart,—He asks no more.
Will you give it gladly, freely,
Have it washed and purified,
In the stream of crimson water,
Flowing from His wounded side?
Yes, He knocks for you, poor sinner,
Saying, "Bruised one come to me!"
Will you still resist His pleadings
And scorn His death on Calvary?
Linked by love in chains of promise
The cruel cross He bore for you;
Hear Him there, so sweetly saying,
"Oh, they know not what they do!"
Hear Him in a gentle whisper,
Lisping, "Dear one, come this way,
'Tis the path where I will lead you
To a bright and endless day;
Lead you where the living waters
Ever sparkle, ever roll;
Where the tree of life is wafting,
Gentle zephyrs o'er the soul."
Oh, dear sinner, will you listen
To the Saviour's yearning plea?
He has suffered death and anguish
All to make redemption free.
He will give you rest when weary,
He will give you sight when blind;
Riches, honor, power and glory,
All for you He has designed.

WM. H. SPENCER.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May, 1870.

A Retrospect.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

A through view of God's purpose in the gospel of the kingdom. A look at the ground gone over.

Now of the things which we have written, this is the sum. Heb. viii. 1.

The gospel means, good news, glad tidings, a joyful message. It always pertains to the kingdom of God. It was designed to affect the condition of the kingdom, for good. Hence it is called the gospel, or good news of the kingdom. Everything in the gospel is for the kingdom, and to improve its condition.

WHAT KINGDOM?

The kingdom which God prepared when he made the world.—Matt. xxv. 34. The kingdom wherever the children of men, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven dwell.—Dan. ii. 38. It is the kingdom where all people, nations, and languages dwell under the whole heavens.—Dan. vii. 14, 27. The Lord shall be King over all the earth.—Zech. xiv. 9. This is the kingdom which is promised to Christ, and to those who are joint heirs with Christ. And of which the gospel is good news.

WHAT IS THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE KINGDOM?

There are in the kingdom now, people, nations, and languages, who do not serve God. —Dan. vii. 14. The will of God is not done in it now as it is done in heaven.—Matt. vi. 10. There are things in it, which offend, and them which do iniquity.—Matt. xiii. 41. There are enemies in it, and things to be subdued.—1 Cor. xv. 25, 28. All the things spoken by the prophets, which need to be restored are in it.—Acts iii. 21.

The Gentiles are now in the kingdom. Rom. xv. 12. The curse in all its length and breadth and depth is in it.—Rev. xxii. 3. Thus, the kingdom is in a condition which needs all the provisions in the gospel to put it in complete order.

HOW DOES THE GOSPEL PROPOSE TO AFFECT THE KINGDOM?

It does not propose to change the arrangement which God made for the kingdom when he made the world, or to supersede it. But it does so propose to affect the kingdom, that all the nations which now learn war, will learn war no more; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father; that all things that offend in the kingdom shall be removed out of it; that all enemies and unsubdued things in it, shall be subdued unto God, that the will of God will be done in it, as it is done in heaven, and that there shall be no more pain, nor death, nor curse, in it. This is the way the gospel proposes to affect the kingdom. It is restoration as well as destruction.

This gospel of the kingdom must be preached in the world. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. But, to believe it, it must be understood; and in order to understand it, we must understand the nature of the kingdom to which it pertains.

THE NATURE OF THE KINGDOM.

Its preparation, when the world was made, was for the kingdom. Not simply for its beginning, nor for a kingdom to commence in 6000 years; but it was a preparation to take effect immediately, as soon as it was completed. The preparation was an immutable arrangement for an everlasting kingdom, and must, therefore, stand.

WHO ORIGINATED THIS KINGDOM?

God originated it. His power, his wisdom, his knowledge, and his goodness, are all infinite. Such a Being could not fail to make the best arrangement for a kingdom that could be made. Therefore his purposes in the matter must be immutable, and his counsel must stand.

THE PREPARATION.

1. He prepared the territory. He made the earth to be inhabited. He laid its foundations so that it cannot be removed forever. He arranged for seed time and harvest, summer and winter, day and night, while it shall continue. The Lord shall be king over all the earth, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. This gives us a through view of God's purposes in the kingdom, so far as the earth is concerned. Let this point, then, be forever settled.

2. He prepared an earthy man to be the subject in the kingdom forever. He commanded him to multiply and fill the earth and subdue it. He made him subject to his own law, and in the gospel we have the assurance that his race will serve the Lord as long as the sun and moon endure. One like the Son of man was to have dominion over all his race and this dominion was to be an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away. Here, we have a through view of the subjects of the kingdom. They are adapted to the earth and the earth to them; both will stand or fall together.

3. He prepared a law for the kingdom. This law was to have jurisdiction over the race of Adam forever. It provided that, by obedience, man might have access to the tree of life, and eat of it, and live forever. It also provided that if he should transgress the law, he should live a sorrowful life, be excluded from the tree of life, and surely die. This law contains a through view of God's purpose in the government of the world. If man had continued obedient he would have enjoyed all the prosperity provided for him, and lived forever under the law given to him. But if he should disobey, he would be deprived of the prosperity provided for the obedient, and in sorrow he would eat his bread all the days of his life, till he should return to the ground from which he was taken, being held to the penalty of the same law which would have secured his life forever had he continued obedient. The jurisdiction of the law remained unchanged. These three elements of the kingdom God prepared at the same time. The earth was adapted to an earthy man; the man was adapted to the earth; and the law was adapted to both. They constituted the preparation for the kingdom. They were to stand or fall together. Thus we have a through view of God's purpose in the kingdom prepared when the world was made, and to which the gospel pertains.

4. This preparation was complete when it was made. The earth was just as well adapted to man; and man was just as well adapted to the earth, and the law to both, before the fall, as they will be after the restitution. Their nature cannot be improved, or God's work was not perfect.

5. The reason why the nature of this kingdom can never be changed. God is immutable. His work must be like him. All the attributes of his being were brought to bear in the conception and the preparation of this kingdom. When it was completed He said that it was very good. If the nature of the kingdom when it was prepared was very good, for the same reason the same nature will always be very good for the kingdom through its entire future history. It will never need to be changed. Its territory will always be the earth; its subjects will always be earthy people; and its law will always be the law given to Adam. These elements prepared when the world was made will constitute the elements of the kingdom forever.

This kingdom is now under the curse of its own law. Adam sinned and became subject to the penalty of the law of the kingdom. In him his race was condemned. All men sustain the same relation to the law given to Adam, that Adam did after he sinned. "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Adam's sin did not remove the jurisdiction of that law over his race forever. The curse passed upon Adam for his sin, is the same curse under which his race have ever lived. The law which held Adam to its penalty, is the same law that holds his posterity to the same penalty. The curse upon Adam is the curse upon the world to-day, and the curse that must be removed by the gospel of the kingdom if removed at all.

The kingdom then, is in disorder and rebellion, and under the curse of its own law. Therefore, it needs the gospel to put it in order, subdue the rebellion, and remove the curse.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

The gospel pertains to this sinful and groaning and cursed kingdom. It is good news of it, because it proposes to restore it to loyalty and remove the curse. This gospel was blindly hinted at in the garden: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head;" but it was more fully brought out in God's promise to Abraham, and comprehended in this saying, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." This promise and the oath by which it was confirmed, are the two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie. These have been the strong consolation of all who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the gospel.

This promise is the gospel, and comprehends the whole of it. Christ was born to fulfil this promise. Luke i. 54, 55, 69, 73. He was raised from the dead in order to fulfil this promise. Acts xiii. 32, 33. He will occupy the throne of David, and of his kingdom there will be no end, in order to secure the blessings promised to all the nations of the earth. Paul hoped for the fulfilment of this promise. Acts xxvi. 6. He called it the gospel, (Gal. iii. 8.) and said, Though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than this, let him be accursed.—Gal. i. 8. We are sure then, that this is the gospel.

How does this promise propose to affect the kingdom? The nations of the earth are now under the curse; they are subject to death. The promise gives assurance that the time will come when all the nations of the earth will be blessed so as to be cursed no more. This will put the kingdom in complete order. Just as much as the nations need to be blessed, just so much the kingdom needs to be improved. How does the promise propose to bless the nations, and thus put the kingdom in order? The seed of Abraham shall bless all nations by ruling over them. The nations are one class of people. They are earthy people. They will be the subjects in the kingdom forever. The seed are another class of people. They will be the heavenly and rulers in the kingdom forever. This is just what the kingdom needs. The nations need to be blessed, and they need a righteous Rulership. These are the two leading propositions in the gospel, (1) That all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, as a final result. (2) That the seed of Abraham shall bless the nations. The blessing of the nations is the end to be secured. The seed of Abraham is the means or instrumentality by which to secure that end. This relation between the seed and the nations, the means and the end, cannot be changed while the promise is valid.

WHO ARE THE NATIONS OF THE EARTH?

They are the inhabitants of the earth in an earthy state. They are not the seed of Abraham. They will never become the seed. They will always remain a distinct class, separate from the seed. They are called all the families of the earth, all nations, the heathen, the children of men, all the kindreds of the nations, all people, nations, and languages and all flesh. They are just what the promise describes them to be, "The nations of the earth." And as such, will be the recipients of the blessings of the promise.

WHAT POSITION DO THEY OCCUPY IN THE KINGDOM?

They will always occupy the position of subjects so far as the record shows.—Dan. vii. 14, 27.

THEIR BLESSINGS.

Their blessings will consist in things which pertain to an earthy people; such as a righteous government, and things growing out of it. Justice and judgment will be executed among them. They will have war no more. They will enjoy peace as long as the sun and moon endure. They will plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, build houses and inhabit them without molestation. The leaves of the tree of life will be for their healing. Then shall the earth yield her increase, and the land that was desolate shall become as the garden of Eden; and there shall be no more curse. The seed of Abraham will do this work of blessing.

WHO ARE THE SEED OF ABRAHAM?

Christ and those that are Christ's, are the seed of Abraham. They are joint heirs of the same promise. They will share the same position and do the same work. Christ will be the head, and Christians the members of his body. They jointly will constitute the Seed that will bless all the nations of the earth, according to all the prophets have said. Before they commence this work, they will be made the heavenly, by a resurrection from the dead.

WHAT POSITION WILL THE SEED OCCUPY IN THE KINGDOM?

They will jointly occupy the throne of David; and have power over all the nations of the earth.

What will the Seed do? He will reign over all the earth. He will execute justice and judgment among all nations. He will restore all things spoken by the mouth of the prophets, and subdue all things unto himself. He will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend; and in him shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

WHEN WILL THE SEED BEGIN TO DO THIS?

At the second coming of the Lord. When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory and begin his work to reign. (Matt. xxv. 37.) Then the twelve Apostles sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28. Then all who are found worthy to attain unto the resurrection of the dead, will be made alive, and sit down with Christ in his throne and have power over all the nations; (Rev. iii. 21; ii. 26); and then he will commence the work of restitution as spoken by the mouth of the prophets. Acts iii. 21.

HOW LONG WILL THE SEED CONTINUE TO BLESS THE NATIONS BY REIGNING OVER THEM?

His reign will continue as long as the sun and moon endure. Psa. lxxii. His throne shall endure as the days of heaven, and as the throne before me. Psa. lxxxix. Of the increase of his government there shall be no end. Isa. ix. 7. His dominion over all people, nations and languages, shall not pass away. Dan. vii. 14. After all things are subdued unto him, and the new heaven, and the new earth appear, and after all things are made new, and the tree of life restored, and after the nations have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life, so that there is no more pain nor death, nor curse, then it is said, "they shall reign forever and ever." The Seed then will bless the nations of the earth, by ruling over them during the endless future. In this we have a through view of the work of the Seed.

THE QUALIFICATION OF THE SEED FOR THIS GREAT AND LONG WORK.

If the seed are to do so great a work, and so long a work, they must be qualified for it. They must have a moral character in harmony with such a work. They must love such an object. Their good will must flow out in the direction of such blessings. They must have a physical character which can endure and perform so long a service. How is it with the seed? Are they thus qualified? completely. Christ loved his Father so that he always did those things that pleased him. He loved the work so, that he said, It is my meat to do the will of my Father. He loved the world so that he gave his life for the life of it. In prosecuting this work, he endured the contradiction of sinners; was tempted in all points like as we are. He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. He being tempted, can be touched with the feeling of our infirmity, and succor them that are tempted. Thus Christ was fitted by his own experience to be a complete Ruler of the world.

Being found worthy to obtain that world, he was raised from the dead, no more to die. He will live forevermore. Thus he became qualified physically to do the work of the seed through the endless future. To this work he was appointed by his Father. "As my Father hath appointed unto me a kingdom." His qualifications, therefore, are complete for the position, and the work of the Seed of Abraham.

Those who are Christ's, and have thus become the seed of Abraham, must have a qualification to make them complete in Christ. They have believed the gospel, and have thus made its purposes their own. They were sinners, but they have repented of their sins, and have yielded themselves unto God. They were aliens, but have become citizens. They have confessed their sins, and have been cleansed from all unrighteousness. They have been baptized into Christ, and thus become members of his body, and joint heirs to his inheritance. They have loved Christ and the cause which he represents, more than they have loved their fathers and mothers, their wives and children, their houses and lands, and more than their own lives. They have had his spirit, loved the things that he loved, and hated the things that he hated. They have purified themselves even as he is pure; and thus, like Christ their head, they become worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, so that they can die no more. To them will be appointed the kingdom, which was appointed to Christ. The Seed then, as a whole, will be completely qualified to occupy the position, and do the work of the Seed of Abraham.

On what principle will the work of the Seed be done? How can a sinner be pardoned and blessed?

This work must not be done in a way to dishonor the law which says, "thou shalt surely die." This penalty must not be laid aside, neither must it be doubled. It must be allowed to remain the final punishment of a righteous law. It must not be done so as to supersede the law, or to amend it, to add to it, or to diminish from it. It must not be done in opposition to this law, but in harmony with it. It must be done on the principle of Surety, as one man pays a debt for another.

This work must be done through the atonement of Christ. He gave his life for the life of the world. He died for us while we were yet sinners. With this sacrifice God was well pleased, and said, "Hear ye Him." The value of the price paid, was equal to the value of the thing purchased. The demand of the law was met, its claim was satisfied in the death of Christ, as a basis on which to offer pardon and blessing to the world.

The terms of salvation in this dispensation are faith and baptism. Faith in the gospel, commits us to its purpose, its plan, and its instructions, and makes them our own. It brings our lives into harmony with the gospel.

By baptism we become members of Christ's body, and joint heirs to his inheritance.

This summary contains a through view of God's purpose in the kingdom to which the gospel pertains. 1. The earth will be the territory of the kingdom forever. 2. The inhabitants of the earth, in an earthy state, will be the subjects in the kingdom forever. 3. The law given to Adam, will be the law of the kingdom forever. These elements show a through view of God's purpose in his kingdom.

The subjects in the kingdom became disloyal. This did not carry them out of the kingdom, but it brought the curse of its law into it. This is the present condition of the kingdom. To bring the subjects of the kingdom back to loyalty, and remove the curse, is the object of the Gospel of the kingdom. The through view of God's purpose in the gospel is shown in its purpose, (1) Its final purpose is to bless all the nations of the earth in an earthy state, so that there shall be no more curse. This will restore them to loyalty, and put the kingdom in complete order.

(2.) This work of restitution and blessing will be done by the Seed of Abraham, after being raised from the dead. This seed will bless all people, nations, and languages, by ruling over them, and of this kingdom and dominion there shall be no end.

Thus we have given a "Through View" of the one system revealed in the Bible, which view we believe will never need to be unlearned.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March, 1870.

Children's Department.

Little Blossom's Dove.

BY MARY LATHAM CLARK.

LITTLE Blossom received one day a beautiful present from her Cousin Willie. He sent it in a little basket by their dear grandmother, who had been there to make a short visit. It was something white and alive.

"O, a kitty!" you say; "of course it was a kitty!" No, it was not a kitty, for Willie would not have sent a kitty so far, when he knew that his little cousin had three or four already.

"A rabbit, then; a darling little rabit with long ears and pink eyes!" No, it was not a rabbit, but a dove, white as snow, excepting around its neck, where the feathers were tinged with blue. It was a charming and unexpected present, and little Blossom was delighted with it.

The little dove was so tame that it would eat from her hand, or even take a bit of sugar or cracker from between her lips.

Willie sent word to her that its name was Blanche.

"I will ask papa to build me a little house for my pretty dove," said little Blossom, as, the evening after her grandmother's return, she sat in her old place in her lap, while the dove, on the table beside her was cuddled up to sleep in its little basket.

"That will be fine," said grandma, stroking the white feathers of the dove, and then the soft hair of her pet.

"O grandma!" exclaimed the little girl, giving the dear old lady a "tight hug" as she spoke, "how I have missed you all these long days—you and your sweet Bible stories!"

"Have you, dear?" said the grandmother. "Then I must tell you one to-night, to help make up for the days you have been without."

"Could you?" asked little Blossom, looking up with sparkling eyes. "I should like to hear it, O! so much! but I thought I would not ask you, for fear you might be too tired."

"Not so tired but I can tell you one little story, my darling. What shall it be about this time?"

"Is there any thing," said the child, hesitatingly, "about a dove in the Bible?"

"O yes," answered grandma; "there is a beautiful story of a dove, that will please you very much, I know."

"What a wonderful book the Bible is!" said little Blossom; "full of stories about everything. How I shall love to read it when I am old enough, and how it will always make me think of you!"

"Yes it is indeed a wonderful book," said the grandmother; "full of every thing good and comforting."

"I am going to tell you now about Noah," continued she, "and his dove."

"And Noah's ark?" asked the little girl, thinking of one of her favorte toys.

"Yes, and Noah's ark. This is the story: "Many years ago, the people had grown so wicked that God determined to destroy them all except the family of a good man named Noah. God wished to save them, so he told him to build a large boat, called an ark, so that he and his family, and some of all kinds of birds and beasts, could be saved from the great flood that he was going to bring upon the earth.

"Noah went to work at once to build the ark, and when it was done, he and his wife, and his three sons with their wives, and all the animals that God wished them to save went into it, and God shut the door.

"Then it began to rain. O how it rained for forty days and forty nights! The water kept rising higher and higher until the trees hills, and mountains were all covered, and far above them all, floated the ark with its precious burden."

"Of course every body and every thing else were drowned," said little Blossom with a sorry look in her eyes. "Doesn't it seem almost too bad grandmother?"

"It was a very dreadful punishment, to be sure," said the grandmother, "but it was right, for God did it.

"When several months had passed away, God caused a wind to pass over the earth which dried up the water so much that, by and by, the ark rested upon the top of a high mountain.

"After awhile Noah opened the window in the top of the ark and let out a raven, which did not come back.

"Next he sent out a dove, perhaps a little white dove like yours, but it found no place to rest its 'pretty, rose-colored feet' upon, so it went back to its home in the ark, and Noah took it in at the window.

"When seven days more had passed away he sent his little dove out again, and in the evening it came back with a green leaf from an olive tree in its slender beak.

"Noah and his family must have been very glad to see that green leaf, because now they knew that the water was so far gone that they could soon go out into the pleasant sunshine and free air again.

"God told them at last that they might go out of the ark, and very happy they must have felt to set foot on the solid earth once more, after having been shut up in the ark so long!

"How joyously the animals must have frisked about in the sunshine, and how merrily the birds must have sung."

"It makes me happy just to think of it," said little Blossm.

"God set a beautiful bow in the clouds," said the grandmother in conclusion, "and said that it should be a sign that he never would send another flood upon the earth."

"I shall think of that," said the child, "the next time I see a rainbow; and I am sure I shall love my sweet dove all the better to know that it is a Bible bird."—Morning Star.

No person ever got stung by hornets who kept away from where they were. It is so with habits.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,6[illegible], NEW YORK.

KNOCKING AT THE DOOR.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock."—Rev. iii. 20.

Hark! methinks I hear one knocking,—
'Tis the Saviour at the door;
See, He pleads with arms extended,
For your heart,—He asks no more.
Will you give it gladly, freely,
Have it washed and purified,
In the stream of crimson water,
Flowing from His wounded side?
Yes, He knocks for you, poor sinner,
Saying, "Bruised one come to me!"
Will you still resist His pleadings
And scorn His death on Calvary?
Linked by love in chains of promise,
The cruel cross He bore for you;
Hear Him there, so sweetly saying,
"Oh, they know not what they do!"
Hear Him in a gentle whisper,
Lisping, "Dear one, come this way,
'Tis the path where I will lead you
To a bright and endless day;
Lead you where the living waters
Ever sparkle, ever roll,
Where the tree of life is wafting,
Gentle zephyrs o'er the soul."
Oh, dear sinner, will you listen
To the Saviour's yearning plea?
He has suffered death and anguish
All to make redemption free.
He will give you rest when weary,
He will give you sight when blind;
Riches, honor, power and glory,
All for you He has designed.

WM. H. SPENCER.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May, 1870.

A RETROSPECT.

BY JOEL A. SIMONDS.

A through view of God's purpose in the gospel of the kingdom. A look at the ground gone over.

Now of the things which we have written, this is the sum. Heb. viii. 1.

The gospel means, good news, glad tidings, a joyful message. It always pertains to the kingdom of God. It was designed to affect the condition of the kingdom, for good. Hence it is called the gospel, or good news of the kingdom. Everything in the gospel is for the kingdom, and to improve its condition.

WHAT KINGDOM?

The kingdom which God prepared when he made the world.—Matt. xxv. 34. The kingdom wherever the children of men, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven dwell.—Dan. ii. 38. It is the kingdom where all people, nations, and languages dwell under the whole heavens.—Dan. vii. 14, 27. The Lord shall be King over all the earth.—Zech. xiv. 9. This is the kingdom which is promised to Christ, and to those who are joint heirs with Christ. And of which the gospel is good news.

WHAT IS THE PRESENT CONDITION OF THE KINGDOM?

There are in the kingdom now, people, nations, and languages, who do not serve God.—Dan. vii. 14. The will of God is not done in it now as it is done in heaven.—Matt. vi. 10. There are things in it, which offend, and them which do iniquity.—Matt. xiii. 41. There are enemies in it, and things to be subdued.—1. Cor. xv. 25, 28. All the things spoken by the prophets, which need to be restored are in it.—Acts iii. 21.

The Gentiles are now in the kingdom. Rom. xv. 12. The curse in all its length and breadth and depth is in it.—Rev. xxii. 3. Thus, the kingdom is in a condition which needs all the provisions in the gospel to put it in complete order.

HOW DOES THE GOSPEL PROPOSE TO AFFECT THE KINGDOM?

It does not propose to change the arrangement which God made for the kingdom when he made the world, or to supersede it. But it does so propose to affect the kingdom, that all the nations which now learn war, will learn war no more; that at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father; that all things that offend in the kingdom shall be removed out of it; that all enemies and unsubdued things in it, shall be subdued unto God, that the will of God will be done in it, as it is done in heaven, and that there shall be no more pain, nor death, nor curse, in it. This is the way the gospel proposes to affect the kingdom. It is restoration as well as destruction.

This gospel of the kingdom must be preached in the world. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. But, to believe it, it must be understood; and in order to understand it, we must understand the nature of the kingdom to which it pertains.

THE NATURE OF THE KINGDOM.

Its preparation, when the world was made, was for [illegible] for its beginning, nor for a kingdom to commence in 6000 years; but it was a preparation to take effect immediately, as soon as it was completed. The preparation was an immutable arrangement for an everlasting kingdom, and must, therefore, stand.

WHO ORIGINATED THIS KINGDOM?

God originated it. His power, his wisdom, his knowledge, and his goodness, are all infinite. Such a Being could not fail to make the best arrangement for a kingdom that could be made. Therefore his purposes in the matter must be immutable, and his counsel must stand.

THE PREPARATION.

1. He prepared the territory. He made the earth to be inhabited. He laid its foundations so that it cannot be removed forever. He arranged for seed time and harvest, summer and winter, day and night, while it shall continue. The Lord shall be king over all the earth, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. This gives us a through view of God's purposes in the kingdom, so far as the earth is concerned. Let this point, then, be forever settled.

2. He prepared an earthy man to be the subject in the kingdom forever. He commanded him to multiply and fill the earth and subdue it. He made him subject to his own law, and in the gospel we have the assurance that his race will serve the Lord as long as the sun and moon endure. One like the Son of man was to have dominion over all his race and this dominion was to be an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away. Here, we have a through view of the subjects of the kingdom. They are adapted to the earth and the earth to them; both will stand or fall together.

3. He prepared a law for the kingdom. This law was to have jurisdiction over the race of Adam forever. It provided that, by obedience, man might have access to the tree of life, and eat of it, and live forever. It also provided that if he should transgress the law, he should live a sorrowful life, be excluded from the tree of life, and surely die. This law contains a through view of God's purpose in the government of the world. If man had continued obedient he would have enjoyed all the prosperity provided for him, and lived forever under the law given to him. But if he should disobey, he would be deprived of the prosperity provided for the obedient, and in sorrow he would eat his bread all the days of his life, till he should return to the ground from which he was taken, being held to the penalty of the same law which would have secured his life forever had he continued obedient. The jurisdiction of the law remained unchanged. These three elements of the kingdom God prepared at the same time. The earth was adapted to an earthy man; the man was adapted to the earth; and the law was adapted to both. They constituted the preparation for the kingdom. They were to stand or fall together. Thus we have a through view of God's purpose in the kingdom prepared when the world was made, and to which the gospel pertains.

4. This preparation was complete when it was made. The earth was just as well adapted to man; and man was just as well adapted to the earth, and the law to both, before the fall, as they will be after the restitution. Their nature cannot be improved, or God's work was not perfect.

5. The reason why the nature of this kingdom can never be changed. God is immutable. His work must be like him. All the attributes of his being were brought to bear in the conception and the preparation of this kingdom. When it was completed He said that it was very good. If the nature of the kingdom when it was prepared was very good, for the same reason the same nature will always be very good for the kingdom through its entire future history. It will never need to be changed. Its territory will always be the earth; its subjects will always be earthy people; and its law will always be the law given to Adam. These elements prepared when the world was made will constitute the elements of the kingdom forever.

This kingdom is now under the curse of its own law. Adam sinned and became subject to the penalty of the law of the kingdom. In him his race was condemned. All men sustain the same relation to the law given to Adam, that Adam did after he sinned. "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Adam's sin did not remove the jurisdiction of that law over his race forever. The curse passed upon Adam for his sin, is the same curse under which his race have ever lived. The law which held Adam to its penalty, is the same law that holds his posterity to the same penalty. The curse upon Adam is the curse upon the world to-day, and the curse that must be removed by the gospel of the kingdom if removed at all.

The kingdom then, is in disorder and rebellion, and under the curse of its own law. Therefore, it needs the gospel to put it in order, subdue the rebellion, and remove the curse.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

The gospel pertains to this sinful and groaning and cursed kingdom. It is good news of it, because it proposes to restore it to loyalty and remove the curse. This gospel was blindly hinted at in the garden: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head;" but it was more fully brought out in God's promise to Abraham, and comprehended in this saying, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." This promise and the oath by which it was confirmed, are the two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie. These have been the strong consolation of all who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before them in the gospel.

This promise is the gospel, and comprehends the whole of it. Christ was born to fulfil this promise. Luke i. 54, 55, 69, 73. He was raised from the dead in order to fulfil this promise. Acts xiii. 32, 33. He will occupy the throne of David, and of his kingdom there will be no end, in order to secure the blessings promised to all the nations of the earth. Paul hoped for the fulfilment of this promise. Acts xxvi. 6. He called it the gospel, (Gal. iii. 8.) and said, Though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than this, let him be accursed.—Gal. i. 8. We are sure then, that this is the gospel.

How does this promise propose to affect the kingdom? The nations of the earth are now under the curse; they are subject to death. The promise gives assurance that the time will come when all the nations of the earth will be blessed so as to be cursed no more. This will put the kingdom in complete order. Just as much as the nations need to be blessed, just so much the kingdom needs to be improved. How does the promise propose to bless the nations, and thus put the kingdom in order? The seed of Abraham shall bless all nations by ruling over them. The nations are one class of people. They are earthy people. They will be the subjects in the kingdom forever. The seed are another class of people. They will be the heavenly and rulers in the kingdom forever. This is just what the kingdom needs. The nations need to be blessed, and they need a righteous Rulership. These are the two leading propositions in the gospel, (1) That all the nations of the earth shall be blessed, as a final result. (2) That the seed of Abraham shall bless the nations. The blessing of the nations is the end to be secured. The seed of Abraham is the means or instrumentality by which to secure that end. This relation between the seed and the nations, the means and the end, cannot be changed while the promise is valid.

WHO ARE THE NATIONS OF THE EARTH?

They are the inhabitants of the earth in an earthy state. They are not the seed of Abraham. They will never become the seed. They will always remain a distinct class, separate from the seed. They are called all the families of the earth, all nations, the heathen, the children of men, all the kindreds of the nations, all people, nations, and languages and all flesh. They are just what the promise describes them to be, "The nations of the earth." And as such, will be the recipients of the blessings of the promise.

WHAT POSITION DO THEY OCCUPY IN THE KINGDOM?

They will always occupy the position of subjects so far as the record shows.—Dan. vii. 14, 27.

THEIR BLESSINGS.

Their blessings will consist in things which pertain to an earthy people; such as a righteous government, and things growing out of it. Justice and judgment will be executed among them. They will have war no more. They will enjoy peace as long as the sun and moon endure. They will plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them, build houses and inhabit them without molestation. The leaves of the tree of life will be for their healing. Then shall the earth yield her increase, and the land that was desolate shall become as the garden of Eden; and there shall be no more curse. The seed of Abraham will do this work of blessing.

WHO ARE THE SEED OF ABRAHAM?

Christ and those that are Christ's, are the seed of Abraham. They are joint heirs of the same promise. They will share the same position and do the same work. Christ will be the head, and Christians the members of his body. They jointly will constitute the Seed that will bless all the nations of the earth, according to all the prophets have said. Before they commence this work, they will be made the heavenly, by a resurrection from the dead.

WHAT POSITION WILL THE SEED OCCUPY IN THE KINGDOM?

They will jointly occupy the throne of David; and have power over all the nations of the earth.

What will the Seed do? He will reign over all the earth. He will execute justice and judgment among all nations. He will restore all things spoken by the mouth of the prophets, and subdue all things unto himself. He will gather out of his kingdom all things that offend; and in him shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

WHEN WILL THE SEED BEGIN TO DO THIS?

At the second coming of the Lord. When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory and begin his work to reign. (Matt. xxv. 37.) Then the twelve Apostles sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Matt. xix. 28. Then all who are found worthy to attain unto the resurrection of the dead, will be made alive, and sit down with Christ in his throne and have power over all the nations; (Rev. iii. 21; ii. 26); and then he will commence the work of restitution as spoken by the mouth of the prophets. Acts iii. 21.

HOW LONG WILL THE SEED CONTINUE TO BLESS THE NATIONS BY REIGNING OVER THEM?

His reign will continue as long as the sun and moon endure. Psa. lxxii. His throne shall endure as the days of heaven, and as the throne before me. Psa. lxxxix. Of the increase of his government there shall be no end. Isa. ix. 7. His dominion over all people, nations, and languages, shall not pass away. Dan. vii. 14. After all things are subdued unto him, and the new heaven, and the new earth appear, and after all things are made new, and the tree of life restored, and after the nations have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life, so that there is no more pain nor death, nor curse, then it is said, "they shall reign forever and ever." The Seed then will bless the nations of the earth, by ruling over them during the endless future. In this we have a through view of the work of the Seed.

THE QUALIFICATION OF THE SEED FOR THIS GREAT AND LONG WORK.

If the seed are to do so great a work, and so long a work, they must be qualified for it. They must have a moral character in harmony with such a work. They must love such an object. Their good will must flow out in the direction of such blessings. They must have a physical character which can endure and perform so long a service. How is it with the seed? Are they thus qualified? completely. Christ loved his Father so that he always did those things that pleased him. He loved the work so, that he said, It is my meat to do the will of my Father. He loved the world so, that he gave his life for the life of it. In prosecuting this work, he endured the contradiction of sinners; was tempted in all points like as we are. He did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth. He being tempted, can be touched with the feeling of our infirmity, and succor them that are tempted. Thus Christ was fitted by his own experience to be a complete Ruler of the world.

Being found worthy to obtain that world, he was raised from the dead, no more to die. He will live forevermore. Thus he became qualified physically to do the work of the seed through the endless future. To this work he was appointed by his Father. "As my Father hath appointed unto me a kingdom." His qualifications, therefore, are complete for the position, and the work of the Seed of Abraham.

Those who are Christ's, and have thus become the seed of Abraham, must have a qualification to make them complete in Christ. They have believed the gospel, and have thus made its purposes their own. They were sinners, but they have repented of their sins, and have yielded themselves unto God. They were aliens, but have become citizens. They have confessed their sins, and have been cleansed from all unrighteousness. They have been baptized into Christ, and thus become members of his body, and joint heirs to his inheritance. They have loved Christ and the cause which he represents, more than they have loved their fathers and mothers, their wives and children, their houses and lands, and more than their own lives. They have had his spirit, loved the things that he loved, and hated the things that he hated. They have purified themselves even as he is pure; and thus, like Christ their head, they become worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, so that they can die no more. To them will be appointed the kingdom, which was appointed to Christ. The Seed then, as a whole, will be completely qualified to occupy the position, and do the work of the Seed of Abraham.

On what principle will the work of the Seed be done? How can a sinner be pardoned and blessed?

This work must not be done in a way to dishonor the law which says, "thou shalt surely die." This penalty must not be laid aside, neither must it be doubled. It must be allowed to remain the final punishment of a righteous law. It must not be done so as to supersede the law, or to amend it, to add to it, or to diminish from it. It must not be done in opposition to this law, but in harmony with it. It must be done on the principle of Surety, as one man pays a debt for another.

This work must be done through the atonement of Christ. He gave his life for the life of the world. He died for us while we were yet sinners. With this sacrifice God was well pleased, and said, "Hear ye Him." The value of the price paid, was equal to the value of the thing purchased. The demand of the law was met, its claim was satisfied in the death of Christ, as a basis on which to offer pardon and blessing to the world.

The terms of salvation in this dispensation are faith and baptism. Faith in the gospel, commits us to its purpose, its plan, and its instructions, and makes them our own. It brings our lives into harmony with the gospel.

By baptism we become members of Christ's body, and joint heirs to his inheritance.

This summary contains a through view of God's purpose in the kingdom to which the gospel pertains. 1. The earth will be the territory of the kingdom forever. 2. The inhabitants of the earth, in an earthy state, will be the subjects in the kingdom forever. 3. The law given to Adam, will be the law of the kingdom forever. These elements show a through view of God's purpose in his kingdom.

The subjects in the kingdom became disloyal. This did not carry them out of the kingdom, but it brought the curse of its law into it. This is the present condition of the kingdom. To bring the subjects of the kingdom back to loyalty, and remove the curse, is the object of the Gospel of the kingdom. The through view of God's purpose in the gospel is shown in its purpose, (1) Its final purpose is to bless all the nations of the earth in an earthy state, so that there shall be no more curse. This will restore them to loyalty, and put the kingdom in complete order.

(2.) This work of restitution and blessing will be done by the Seed of Abraham, after being raised from the dead. This seed will bless all people, nations, and languages, by ruling over them, and of this kingdom and dominion there shall be no end.

Thus we have given a "Through View" of the one system revealed in the Bible, which view we believe will never need to be unlearned.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March, 1870.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

LITTLE BLOSSOM'S DOVE.

BY MARY LATHAM CLARK.

LITTLE Blossom received one day a beautiful present from her Cousin Willie. He sent it in a little basket by their dear grandmother, who had been there to make a short visit. It was something white and alive.

"O, a kitty!" you say; "of course it was a kitty!" No, it was not a kitty, for Willie would not have sent a kitty so far, when he knew that his little cousin had three or four already.

"A rabbit, then; a darling little rabit with long ears and pink eyes!" No, it was not a rabbit, but a dove, white as snow, excepting around its neck, where the feathers were tinged with blue. It was a charming and unexpected present, and little Blossom was delighted with it.

The little dove was so tame that it would eat from her hand, or even take a bit of sugar or cracker from between her lips.

Willie sent word to her that its name was Blanche.

"I will ask papa to build me a little house for my pretty dove," said little Blossom, as, the evening after her grandmother's return, she sat in her old place in her lap, while the dove, on the table beside her was cuddled up to sleep in its little basket.

"That will be fine," said grandma, stroking the white feathers of the dove, and then the soft hair of her pet.

"O grandma!" exclaimed the little girl, giving the dear old lady a "tight hug" as she spoke, "how I have missed you all these long days—you and your sweet Bible stories!"

"Have you, dear?" said the grandmother. "Then I must tell you one to-night, to help make up for the days you have been without."

"Could you?" asked little Blossom, looking up with sparkling eyes. "I should like to hear it, O! so much! but I thought I would not ask you, for fear you might be too tired."

"Not so tired but I can tell you one little story, my darling. What shall it be about this time?"

"Is there any thing," said the child, hesitatingly, "about a dove in the Bible?"

"O yes," answered grandma; "there is a beautiful story of a dove, that will please you very much, I know."

"What a wonderful book the Bible is!" said little Blossom; "full of stories about everything. How I shall love to read it when I am old enough, and how it will always make me think of you!"

"Yes it is indeed a wonderful book," said the grandmother; "full of every thing good and comforting."

"I am going to tell you now about Noah," continued she, "and his dove."

"And Noah's ark?" asked the little girl, thinking of one of her favorte toys.

"Yes, and Noah's ark. This is the story: "Many years ago, the people had grown so wicked that God determined to destroy them all except the family of a good man named Noah. God wished to save them, so he told him to build a large boat, called an ark, so that he and his family, and some of all kinds of birds and beasts, could be saved from the great flood that he was going to bring upon the earth.

"Noah went to work at once to build the ark, and when it was done, he and his wife, and his three sons with their wives, and all the animals that God wished them to save went into it, and God shut the door.

"Then it began to rain. O how it rained for forty days and forty nights! The water kept rising higher and higher until the trees hills, and mountains were all covered, and far above them all, floated the ark with its precious burden."

"Of course every body and every thing else were drowned," said little Blossom with a sorry look in her eyes. "Doesn't it seem almost too bad grandmother?"

"It was a very dreadful punishment, to be sure," said the grandmother, "but it was right, for God did it.

"When several months had passed away, God caused a wind to pass over the earth which dried up the water so much that, by and by, the ark rested upon the top of a high mountain.

"After awhile Noah opened the window in the top of the ark and let out a raven, which did not come back.

"Next he sent out a dove, perhaps a little white dove like yours, but it found no place to rest its 'pretty, rose-colored feet' upon, so it went back to its home in the ark, and Noah took it in at the window.

"When seven days more had passed away he sent his little dove out again, and in the evening it came back with a green leaf from an olive tree in its slender beak.

"Noah and his family must have been very glad to see that green leaf, because now they knew that the water was so far gone that they could soon go out into the pleasant sunshine and free air again.

"God told them at last that they might go out of the ark, and very happy they must have felt to set foot on the solid earth once more, after having been shut up in the ark so long!

"How joyously the animals must have frisked about in the sunshine, and how merrily the birds must have sung."

"It makes me happy just to think of it," said little Blossm.

"God set a beautiful bow in the clouds," said the grandmother in conclusion, "and said that it should be a sign that he never would send another flood upon the earth."

"I shall think of that," said the child, "the next time I see a rainbow; and, I am sure I shall love my sweet dove all the better to know that it is a Bible bird."—Morning Star.

No person ever got stung by hornets who kept away from where they were. It is so with habits.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

[illegible]

NEW YORK.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.
DIRECTORS.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 25, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 32. WHOLE NUMBER 318.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE
Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrie, in New York City, 20 cents additional.
The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.
We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.
TO CORRESPONDENTS.
ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:
GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.
All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE JUDGMENT MESSAGE.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

[Continued from last issue.]

THE certainty of a day of judgment—a day for the fearful outpouring of God's wrath upon all the enemies of the Head of the Church—we have noticed as fully demonstrated in our text, and we may notice as another great truth, that the judgment will take place at Christ's second coming, and will be administered by Him.

THE BEACON LIGHT OF THE CHURCH.

No event is more susceptible of proof in the pages of inspiration than the literal return of Christ from His position at the right hand of the Father, at the end of this dispensation, as the appointed Judge; and no subject occupies so much space and prominence in the New Testament Scriptures. This event is the grand beacon light of the Church, around which all the hopes of God's people regarding a future life centre; for if Christ does not return from heaven then will God's promises be of none effect, and the hope, which has animated our hearts and illuminated our pilgrimage, will be in vain. The second coming of Christ is the great well from which we draw consolation, rejoicing in that "blessed hope," and waiting for the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is the bounden duty of all to "watch," lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

THE CERTAINTY OF CHRIST'S COMING.

The Scriptures speak of but two advents of Christ: first, in humility, and second, in the glorious triumph of a king. He says: "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you."—John xvii. 24. Many, at the present age of the world, assume that His coming is of a spiritual nature, and not a literal bodily advent. But did He "go away" spiritually? Nay, verily! He showed himself to His disciples to be the same literal, bodily Jesus that had been crucified. He exhibited the scars where the cruel nails had held Him to the cross, and told faithless Thomas to thrust his hand into His side, where the Roman soldiers had pierced Him, and henceforth be not faithless. And finally, His disciples beheld Him "as He went up," and received the comforting message, from angelic ambassadors, that "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come again in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts i. 10, 11. He will come again "in the clouds of heaven," and so visibly that it will be impossible for God's people to be deceived in regard to the event. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming (Emphatic Diaglott—'presence') of the Son of man be."—Matt. xxiv. 27. The apostle Jude informs us that even Enoch, the seventh from Adam, taught the personal second coming of Christ, "with ten thousand of His saints to execute judgment upon all."

A DAY OF SEPARATION.

The characteristics of this "hour of his judgment," spoken of in our text, (elsewhere referred to as "the day of the Lord," etc.,) is worthy of our consideration, and eminently so when we take into consideration the various opinions of men respecting it. But it is sufficient for us to know the light in which the Scriptures present it; indeed it must prove far more satisfactory than a discussion of doubtful theories, which have been offered by multitudes in exposition of the subject.

The Scriptures present this day of the Lord's return as a time of separation between the good and the bad; between an oppressed and persecuted Church waiting the Master's return, and those who have scoffingly asked, "Where is the promise of His coming?" Between those who have taken up their cross and followed Him, and those who by their rebellious course have "crucified afresh," the Son of God; yes, between those who "love His appearing" and have gone forth to meet the heavenly Bridegroom, and those whose lamps have gone out, and who say in their heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming." In proof of this we need introduce but few of the many passages which declare this great truth.

Jesus in answer to the inquiries of His disciples regarding the signs of His coming, says: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (which was one of the signs of His second coming) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. xxiv. 29-31. It is not our purpose now to give an exposition of the "tribulation" here spoken of, or the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, the "shaking of the powers of heaven," and the sign of the Son of man; but the truth is undeniably stated that the righteous are separated from the wicked, as Jesus elsewhere declares in the same chapter—"One shall be taken and the other left." One class have accepted the offer of eternal life—have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb—and will share in the rapturous glory of the Messiah's reign; the other class have disdained the great love of God in giving His Son to die for a sinful race, and have refused His offer of full and free pardon, and life beyond the grave, and they will share the fate of unrepentant rebels. Let this truth sink deep into our hearts; life and death are placed before us, and the exercise of our powers of choice will decide our eternal destiny.

Again: In Matt. xxv. 31, 32, Jesus refers to this same great truth. He says, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats, and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on his left." Sheep is the divinely chosen emblem of harmlessness, of innocence and virtue, and is very appropriately therefore, applied by our Lord to his followers. How truly Jesus has said, "I am the door of the sheep. By me, if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep and am known of mine." (John x. 7, 9, 14.) In this great separation scene, at the return of our Master, the sheep,—the Lord's elect, —are placed upon his right hand, denoting a situation of honor and acceptance, and the goats upon the left, to denote condemnation. Like as a mother fondly nestles her first-born to her bosom, with parental care and affection so will our Saviour gather every member of his flock to His embrace, to partake of the honor and glory of His presence, while His enemies will be driven from him in condemnation, and the shadow of Mercy's wings will cease to hover over them. Will not the painful scene of Rev. vi. 15, 16, then be realized? "And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of His wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

In perfect harmony with the testimony that we have already adduced, Paul declares "by the word of the Lord" that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout," "and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. iv. 15, 18.

Thus, beloved friends, by the words of Holy Writ we are presented one of the characteristics of "the day of the Lord," which is just before us. Shall we be one of the number who shall be assigned the position of honor and glory at the right hand of our Master, and join in the marriage supper of the Lamb? Let us ever bear in mind that the Lord is at the door.

[To be Continued.]

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May, 1870.

REWARDS IN THE COMING AGE.

"If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." —John xii. 26.

BOTH as an incentive to holiness and as a support under trials, it is manifest that the doctrine of rewards in resurrection is most important. Very brilliant promises have been given to the church by her Head for the purpose of animating her in her sore conflicts with the powers of evil, and bracing her strength in her Master's service. But there can be no doubt that the consciousness of unworthiness and the fear of presumption habitually prevent many Christians from realizing these promises. Of necessity the true church is humble, and it well becomes her so to be, for all her treasures, both in possession and in prospect, are of grace; but she injures herself, and dishonors the royal munificence of her Father in heaven when she is afraid to touch vast stores of wealth which are most certainly hers by deed of gift. These piles of heavenly gold are meant for her, and it is a false humility which tells her that to think of reward hereafter, whilst laboring and suffering for Christ here, would be presumption. Surely we may ask the simple question, Why has the Lord made so many and such great promises of honor, glory, reward, and recompense hereafter, if the very persons to whom they are made may not use them as encouragements amidst the complicated and sometimes terrible difficulties of the way? To deepen consecration, to sustain faithfulness, to nerve courage, we need every legitimate help we can get. And those promises are not made to unconverted men, but to men whom God in his grace has made partakers of life in the divine Redeemer; they are not for his foes, but his friends; not for aliens, but children; and it really seems a waste of time to point out the absurdity of the supposition that any unregenerate man will ever think of running—even if the thing were possible—for one or more of the prizes of the KINGDOM. The utmost that such men think of is salvation from hell and admission to heaven as the reward of their good works; for they know not God's way of salvation. The prizes of the kingdom are the glorious crown and reward of "good works;" for the same book that teaches salvation by grace teaches reward according to works—and in this, instead of contradiction, there is logical harmony; but the men who run in this race, and wrestle for this victory, and have an eye on this royal reward, have already passed through the narrow gate, and felt the joy of reconciliation through the blood of the Lamb, and lovingly breathed the sweet word of adoption—"Father!"

If the entire Christian system be not an elaborate delusion, a cunningly-devised fable having no foundation in fact, we might infer from the revealed character of God and the doctrine of resurrection, that there must be a reward for the righteous. Even if the promises of recompense were fewer in number and far more indefinite in character than they actually are, reason suggests that loving service amidst life-long difficulties will receive adequate recognition in the day of final settlement. Can it be that God's own children—for of such alone we speak—shall be allowed to endure privation, and suffer reproach, and abound in self-denying labor for his name's sake, from the beginning to the end of every year of their Christian pilgrimage, without a large reward of glory and honor from the Father's right-hand in the heavenly kingdom? Men whose religion brings them high worldly honor, large incomes, and princely palaces, will not see the force of this question; but men whose religion leads them away from all these things to be tried and tempted with care and poverty, to be misunderstood, and shunned, and evil spoken of, are in a position to appreciate the loving forethought of the Father in reserving for his suffering sons an inheritance of regal splendor against "that day." The tossings and temptations of the wilderness will find bountiful compensation in the city of the great King. Rough usage for Christ's sake will not be forgotten by him in the day of his coronation. When the King returns he will remember his faithful people who served him out of pure love, amidst many deep afflictions, and counted all things but loss that they might stand before God accepted in the Beloved. Love, gratitude, admiration, loyalty, constrained them to live to him whose life in them was the proof of their salvation and the pledge of their immortality. They did not wish to "reign as kings" before the time; they were content to wait and labor and suffer reproach as the Master did before them, and he will show by-and-by that not a tear, or groan, or sigh escaped his watchful notice. Let the tried followers of the Son of man take courage. The Lord is coming, and his reward is with him; and great, lasting, and glorious will be the recompense of those who were true to him during their earthly pilgrimage.—The Rainbow.

THE THEOLOGICAL HELL.

THE Scriptural theory of the final death of the wicked is advancing steadily and surely both in this country and in America.

The advocates of Augustine's hell are always telling us that we are incapable of judging at all correctly of the justice of God in the question of future punishment. They feel that their view looks so black and unjust in the judgment of mankind that it cannot bear examination. They are therefore always telling us not to examine it, not to discuss it at all as a question of right or wrong, but to leave all such discussion and thought to our future state, when they generally maintain that we will receive such additional light that we will clearly see that it was an act of the purest equity to condemn men to eternal agonies for the sins of time. The ablest writer on their side whom we have met with, Professor Bartlett, of the Theological Seminary in Chicago, goes much farther. He does not think that the redeemed will ever be able to see the justice of God's conduct. "It would require," he tells us, "a knowledge of God's whole being, resources, views, intentions, of his entire plan of government, with all its necessities and peculiarities, more thoroughly exhaustive than one man ever yet possessed concerning a fellow man, his equal," in order to be able to judge of the matter. So that throughout eternity, according to Professor Bartlett, God's treatment of the lost must appear unjust in the eyes of angels and of men, for certainly no creature can ever attain the "knowledge of God" which he requires to be possessed.—Bartlett's "Life and Death Eternal," p. 19.

But the Augustinian advocates are not easy in their minds on this point. They writhe under the notion that they are presenting God's conduct in a light that appears unjust in the judgment of every man that calmly and fairly examines it. Hence they are ever catching at speculations, and theories, and arguments, however far-fetched and ridiculous, which may relieve their view of its ugly look of injustice. In older times they used to tell us that, as every sin was a sin against an infinite God, an endless life in agony was the only suitable punishment that could be inflicted, whether the sin was one of ignorance or of knowledge, committed in or out of covenant. This old argument, repeated until men thought there must be something in it, is now seldom heard. The Augustinians are ashamed of it, as well they may.

Our readers will remember Mr. Birks' attempt, in his "Victory of Divine Goodness," to set this matter of future punishment, as viewed from the Augustinian side, in an endurable light. He so qualifies the aspect of hell as to make it, after all, a very tolerable and good place to dwell in forever. His effort was the spasmodic effort of a good and feeling mind, to get rid of the horrible aspect of injustice and cruelty in which the ordinary view of future punishment, as held by his party, presented itself to him. He sacrificed his noble powers of judgment and reason at the shrine of mercy and justice, and we honor him for his noble sacrifice.

The Rev. R. B. Girdlestone, in his lately-published work, "Dies Iræ," as also in his articles published in "Fairbairn's Imperial Bible Dictionary," furnishes us with another instance how keenly the Augustinian advocates feel the apparent injustice of their view, and seek to get rid of it by the most desperate pleas. He supposes there will be eternal life in hell, but that it will be a life all but devoid of feeling. "The idea of strong nervous sensibility" is excluded from his notion of the future of the lost. The soul will be "faint and exhausted," in a state of "lethargy." The lethargic state of the lost can alone, in Mr. Girdlestone's mind, justify the Augustinian theory He seems to produce this lethargic state by the wonderful power of "habit." He supposes that the wicked will become so accustomed to their agony that at length they almost cease to mind it, and forget that they are in hell or living at all.—Dies Iræ, pp. 113, 123; Fairbairn's Imperial Dictionary, article, "Perdition." We put it to Mr. Girdlestone that he might, without much violence to his theory, go a little—a very little—farther. His doing so would have the recommendation of turning nonsense into sense. Lethargic, we believe, is derived from the Latin "letum," signifying "death:" lethargy is defined by Webster as "a profound sleep, from which a person can scarcely be awaked." Let Mr. Girdlestone convert his lethargic state into a state of death, a state from which there is no awaking. He now nearly agrees with us, he will then agree with us completely; he now talks what sounds like nonsense, he will then speak like a sensible man.

Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," presents us with another effort of an Augustinian theorist to rid his view of its hideous aspect of cruel injustice, which fully equals, if it does not surpass, the desperate efforts of Messrs. Birks and Girdlestone. Our readers know who Mr. Beecher is. The name is of world-wide celebrity. He is brother of Henry Ward Beecher, and has won himself no common reputation as a writer. He is an Augustinian in his views of future punishment. He holds that all who are not redeemed in this world must, by God's ordinance, live an endless life of misery in hell. But still the sense of the injustice of this punishment on the ordinary view of his party comes home to his mind just as strongly as it does to ours. He holds, "that the doctrine of eternal woe, as now held, cannot be vindicated on the principles of justice; and greatly dishonors God." How does he get rid, or rather feebly attempt to get rid, of that terrible sense of injustice which is roused in the human mind by the diabolical theory of Augustine? Hear it, men of the 19th century, Christian men, who think themselves living under the gospel of Christ, and not under the threadbare cloak of a heathen philosopher. Edward Beecher, of New York, justifies his Augustinian theory of punishment by going back to the old Pythagorian dogma of the transmigration of souls! He does not think that hell is for the punishment of the sins of this life at all! He thinks that if it were it would prove the God who inflicts it to be a monster of injustice. To rid God of this stigma he supposes that every man had an existence in some former state of being of which he has lost the remotest recollection: that in this former state of being every man sinned in a degree to which the deepest sin of this life is not to be compared: that God, in sending the soul of a former being into this life, gives it one more opportunity of redemption: that, if this last opportunity is neglected or rejected, God will consign the despiser of this, his last offer, to endless misery, not at all however for any conduct of his here, but for the fearful sins of that old life, the memory of which has wholly faded from his mind! Such is Edward Beecher's gospel! Such is the desperate effort of a man of genius to defend the theory of Augustine! What must be the theory which forces such men as Beecher, and Birks, and Edwards, and a hundred more, to senilities worthy only of the most extreme dotage?

The Augustinian theory has from its beginning, and essentially, connected itself with one old heathen error, the eternity of evil; it is now, in the person of Edward Beecher, connecting itself with another old heathen error, the transmigration of souls. When will men abandon philosophy for the doctrine of Christ, and Paul, and John?—Selected from the Rainbow, England.

DEATH IS DESTRUCTION.

I SHALL prove from Scripture in the plainest way I possibly can that death is destruction in the full and absolute sense; though "death" in any sense is a destruction of some sort. For instance, when a tree dies, it becomes a destroyed thing as far as fruit and leaves are concerned, though the trunk for a long time remains. When a dog or a horse dies it goes at once to corruption, or speedy destruction, though the question of Solomon, "Who knoweth the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth," arrests one for the moment, at least, ere he falls in with his father David, who asserted, "Man being in honor and understanding not, is like to the beasts that perish." Destruction is either partial or absolute. You may break a golden chain and it may be repaired; or you may reduce it to fine dust, and scatter it to the winds and waters, as Aaron did the ashes of the golden calf: the latter is absolute destruction as far as man can destroy any thing, but it is not "annihilation," for the minutest atoms have an existence, though not a conscious one. We are destructionists, then, but not annihilationists.

We are all agreed that in a matter of this sort the appeal must be made to Scripture: that is decisive, all else is guesswork, and guessing at truth is not stating truth. I take then for granted that whatever God has revealed he will do, is essentially and eternally right. If he says he is going to destroy the wicked, then to destroy them is the right thing to do; if he says he will hold them in unending torture, then to do that is the right thing; and if he says he will ultimately save them all, then to do THAT is the right thing.

What, then, saith the Scripture?

First of all, it assumes throughout that the great Creator has formed man capable of living, and capable of dying; otherwise it would be unmeaning to say, as Scripture does, that man was made a living soul, but became through sin a dying one: the "soul that sinneth it shall die:" "dying thou shalt die;" but, on the other hand, "hear, and your soul shall live." The hearing of faith is life to man's soul; but to refuse to hear is to "choose death." The words of God are quickening or life-giving words; no others are like them. We who believe are begotten by the word of truth, born again of incorruptible seed, even the Word of God which liveth and abideth forever. Bound up in the bundle of eternal life with Christ, we can no more perish than he can. He is "our LIFE." "I give to my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish," or be destroyed. "Because I live, ye shall live also."

But, "The wicked shall perish: they shall be as the fat of lambs: into smoke shall they consume away." They shall "see the honor or glory of the righteous, gnash with their teeth, and melt away."—Psa. cxii. 10. In New Testament language, "He will burn up the chaff in unquenchable fire."

Again, the connection between the Psalms and the New Testament is seen in that now famous verse, Matt. x. 28, and Psa. cxlv. 20, "Fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in gehenna." "All the wicked he will (utterly) destroy." I would take my stand on these two verses if there were no others in the Bible, to prove "the destruction of the wicked." But there are scores which prove that there is no escape from perdition on the one hand, and that perdition is not unceasing blasphemy and torture, but absolute destruction.

Take the following (where apoletai from apollumi is used):

"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish," or be destroyed. Now, to me, it is childish to quote the passage, "weak brethren perishing," or "Destroy not thy brother for whom Christ died," as though the words "perish and destroy" were used in the same sense, both with reference to the righteous and the wicked. A man's usefulness and freshness as a Christian may be destroyed by improper treatment, as, alas! is too often the case; but the feeblest believer's "life" is "hid with Christ in God, beyond the reach of harm;" no man, no, not Satan even, can touch that. The strongest word that the Greek language is capable of, is used by the Apostle Paul to describe Christian risen life, namely, akataluton, "the power of an endless (or indissoluble) life."

Paul speaks of vessels of wrath fitted, or made up (by their own sins of course) for destruction; and of certain despisers of the gospel who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord. Moreover in 1 Cor. xv., where he fixes the meaning of the word, "perish," ("if Christ be not risen they that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished"), he goes on to affirm that every enemy shall be put down and destroyed, the last enemy being death; and when destruction has passed upon all that is rebellious and wicked, so that rebellion is crushed out, God shall be "all in all" (not all in some) forever and ever.

Peter speaks of the day of judgment and perdition, or destruction of ungodly men, and uses also the following very strong language, "these as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, shall utterly perish in their own corruption." James says, "There is one Lawgiver who is able to save and to destroy." And John speaks of the second death thus: "Whoever was not found written in the Book of Life was cast into the lake of fire:" fire and brimstone elsewhere, proving that the fire is for destruction, not for purification. "He is able to destroy (not purify), both soul and body in hell." "He preserveth them that love him, but all the wicked he will utterly destroy."

Just as ideas of the fall, the flood, the incarnation, and the resurrection, are preserved in some distorted form in almost every religious system, so this great truth concerning the destruction of the wicked is represented in the Pagan image or idol of Vishnu triumphant, with his heel on the head of the serpent, and in Apollo killing the Typhon. Even the Persians and the Buddhists have some inkling of the complete demolition or destruction of evil, which we, with our clearer light ought to know and hold without a shade of doubt.

I shall conclude these remarks by quoting two texts. The first is the Chaldaic version of Psalm xxii. 29, "God will not keep alive the soul of the wicked." The other is from the preceding Psalm xxi. 4, where it is said, concerning "the King," Christ Jesus who was saved "out of death," "He asked life of thee (Jehovah), and thou gavest it him, even length of days forever and ever." This is the life vouchsafed to us believers, for "Because I live (not because you are naturally indestructible) ye shall live also."—Selected.

DEAN ALFORD ON MATT. XVI. 26.

DEAR SIR:—It is very delightful and matter for deepest thankfulness, to see the progress which the truth is now making. In spite of many opposing influences, the blessed doctrine of Life and Immortality in our Lord Jesus Christ is being gradually received by careful readers of the inspired volume. In a recent number of "Good Words," the Dean of Canterbury thus writes: "The Greeks in their wonderfully accurate language, expressed by the same term (psyche) the soul of man which he has to save, and the life of the reptile which man crushes under his foot. And it would have been immensely to our profit if we had done the same. For then we should have understood what very few now do understand, the true nature, the true place of this our intellectual and emotional being. We should then have read in our Bibles not only, 'Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it;' but also (for the same word is used), 'For what is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own life? or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?' For it is this life of man which carries his practical will, with all those motions of intellect and feeling which set it at work; it is the life which is mysteriously bound up with the body, which is reft from it at death; it is this life, which, if a man spend on God and upon good, he will save to life eternal."

Thus is the light of truth being diffused, and devout students of Scripture are beginning to see that it is not according to the revealed will of God that the life of every man, regenerate or unregenerate, will be saved to life eternal, but that it is only "he that doeth

the will of God that abideth forever." God's "jewels" will be preserved everlastingly, but the "stubble" he will burn up, leaving neither root nor branch; a doctrine which, while it humbles the sinner exalts the Saviour. I am dear sir, Yours respectfully,

A GRATEFUL READER.

—The Rainbow.

SIGNIFICANT ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

"When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isa. xxvi. 9.

GOD will not be without his witnesses. Even amid the greatest corruption and degeneracy, there will still be some, who will not bow the knee to Baal, and who will boldly confess the Lord Jesus Christ and his kingdom. And, no doubt, the nearer we approach the end, the greater the corruption and degeneracy will become, and the more will those who love the Master but have not accepted the doctrine of his speedy, personal coming, be made to see and feel that the time is at hand.

This idea was forcibly suggested a few days ago, at a conference of ministers, as a certain brother, who would not see previously any merit in this momentous subject, and who still hoped that there would be a turn in human affairs, when things would grow brighter and better, made the following acknowledgment: "Although I cannot subscribe to the prophetic views put forth by Dr. Seiss and others, yet I firmly believe there is much more truth in their teachings than many of us have believed. For it cannot be denied that things all around us, in the church and out of it, are growing worse and worse, and darker and darker, every day; and I see no earthly hope that they will get any better. Things are becoming truly awful." To this, another brother who had been still more bitter against these Advent views, replied: "This dreadful state of things is only fulfilling the Saviour's words; 'Broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' And 'as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be;' and thus it will continue up to the time of the end when the Master shall come."

These brethren have thus been forced to confess the truth against their own theories and hopes. God grant that many more ministers of the Gospel may be led to discern the signs of the times, and to give the trumpet a sound which shall not be mistakable! F.

—Prophetic Times.

FROM JAMES HARLAN.

BR. STORRS: After long silence I once more attest my views of eternal or future life only in our precious Christ. I have studied much the different ideas of good men and the blessed record of the word of life. I pored over Moses' teaching, and can find no sentence of future life, but a prolonging of the blood life, to enjoy all heart could wish for; though the Bible teaches that the Israel that simply believed, as Abraham did, will come up out of their graves and be put into the land promised as a pure gift. But my mind is interested about the Gentile nations, who, I am obliged to hear, are to appear again on the earth, to be burned, or to have another trial! Solemn charge to Infinite Wisdom. As a young Bible student, I do want sound doctrine, and think in these days it is most essential. Paul tells me, they [the nations] were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and strangers from the covenant of promise, having no hope, without God in the world. Also, in another chapter he says, they are alienated from the life of God. Such plain, positive talk helps me to liberate myself from the creed of men: ergo, Jesus the redeemer of all Adam's race from the grave, to a responsibility, for what? That's a point I do ask light on, in the name of Him who is LOVE, WISDOM and POWER. Moses said, Ask now the days that are past, since the day God created man upon earth, and was it ever known for man to hear the voice of God as thou hast?—Deut. iv. 23–40. David endorses it, Psa. cxlix. 2; Amos iii. 2, You only have I known, etc.

I ask in solemn earnestness, will LOVE bring them again into living existence to condemn and burn? I don't believe Gen. Grant has such a policy. My heavenly Father inspired men to write that sin was not imputed where there is no law. My native forefathers were idolators when my heavenly Father sent Jesus to die, and spread to all nations the glorious message of life and immortality, resurrection to newness of life. Herein is His marvellous unasked-for, unmerited love. No longer alienated from the blessings, but heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. Oh! for more gratitude for being born in these days of the fulfilment of Abraham's promise, "In thy seed, which is Christ, shall all the nations be blessed." "I am the resurrection and the life." What an announcement to a people once alienated. Whosoever believeth on me, I will raise him up at the last day, and give to him eternal life, and they shall never perish. What precious promises, to simply believe, and rely on "the way, the truth, the life," the blessed hope to a people once without hope. Still only fulfilling the word to Abraham.

The Lord bless the HERALD OF LIFE to the seekers after light, as it has comforted, edified and liberated me. I only wish I could afford to give it away.

It is a noticed fact, that believers in "Life only in our precious Christ," are steadily increasing. Heaven help more to ask, think, and realize the fulness of the word JESUS.

CHICAGO, Ill., May, 1870.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Chas. W. Higginson, Mrs. John McClean, Polly G. Pitts, Eld. J. Lewis.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MAY 25, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE LIFE QUESTION.

WE present our readers with a series of editorial articles this week, which are intended for a tract, as we have none, in a cheap form, of the same character. A few other like articles will be added and issued immediately in a tract of some 24 pages. It will take its place as No. 18 in our "Campaign Documents," and be furnished at two cents per copy, adding two cents for postage on each seven copies. Those who wish them to circulate will give us their orders soon. Donations to enable us to send out to such as cannot pay for them, but who would gladly circulate such a tract, will be a help in the work. A hundred dollars just now, will enable us to send out several thousand with good results. There is more desire to hear on these points than most people are aware of. The truth on this subject is advancing, and the wilful rejectors of these truths are fast pushing themselves back into the endless torment doctrine, or forward into Universalism. They cannot stand where they are.

"NO LIFE OUT OF CHRIST."

BY this expression we mean not only that without union with Christ there is no eternal life, but that there is no life after death to any of Adam's race; once dead they remain eternally under death's dominion, except there be, in this life a union formed with the LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ.

This doctrine is taught in many ways, or forms of expression in the Bible; and may be said to be the unvarying, or general tenor of the testimony of God, both in the Old and New Testaments. In 1 Corth. xv., the apostle Paul clearly sets forth this doctrine, making a future life to depend on union with Christ and his resurrection. "If Christ be not raised . . . ye are yet in your sins: then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Why are believers in Jesus yet in their sins, if Christ be not raised from the dead? Because, if he is not raised there is no resurrection for any one; and believers, as well as others, are yet in their sins; that is, unpardoned and under the curse of sin, which is death; hence, will have no resurrection: "then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished," and have no resurrection because they died "in their sins."

Now, what is all this but saying, if any man dies in his sins, death has its natural course, and holds him under its power, never to be revived into life? "Death is the wages of sin:" sin unpardoned—unremoved by a living union with the living Christ—holds his victim under death and no power can extricate him, even for a "temporary life."

Peter declared, on the day of Pentecost, that it "was not possible that" Christ "should be holden of death," Acts ii. 24. Why was it not possible? Because he "knew no sin"—on him death had no claim. But suppose he had sinned, would not death have held him? Certainly; and man's deliverance would have been impossible. Men have sinned, and but for Christ and his revival into life, our opponents admit, "all ground of hope is gone." Why? Because men are yet in their sins. Very well. If sinners do not come to Christ to have their sins taken away, are they not yet in their sins? and if so, is not "all ground" for their revival into life removed? It really seems to us that it is demonstrated that if men die in their sins there is no ground to expect their revival into life at all.

Thus, to be in our sins, while alive, here, is to be without a revival from death, according to Paul's logic, or theology; and if the living Corinthian believers were in their sins all ground of hope was gone; but not these alone were excluded from hope of future life, but "then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

To be in sins, then, is to be excluded from a revival into life:

But all the wicked dead died in their sins:

Therefore, they will have no revival into life.

Such seems to us to be a logical conclusion from the construction of the text, and the reference of the term "also;" and being "in our sins" is in fact the reason assigned for perishing without a revival into life. This idea is in harmony with Paul's concluding remarks of this chapter. He says, "The sting of death is sin:" i. e., sin is that which gives death its destructive power and its victory; and sin's power to hold its victim under death "is the law;" but to believers "God giveth the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ;" for unbelievers there is no deliverance from death; no, not even a "temporary" one; "the wicked is driven away in his wickedness; but the righteous hath hope in his death." Prov. xiv. 32. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16. Yea, "he shall be holden with the cords of his sins." Prov. v. 22. Christ was raised from death; "God loosed the pains" [or, as some render it, "the cords"] "of death." By virtue of the cords of death being loosed in his case, all his members, viz., all true followers of Christ, shall have victory over death and have its cords loosed from them; but the wicked dying in his sins, "shall be holden with the cords of his sins"—they "remain in the congregation of the dead." "The dead," who are revived into life, "shall be raised incorruptible," and "put on immortality." 1 Corth. xv. 52, 53. Such to our mind is the truth on this deeply interesting subject.

The long and the short of the whole matter seems to be this—Any life after death is a gospel benefit or privilege; and peculiar to those, and to those alone, who do not die in their sins; or, who come to Christ that they "may have life:" John v. 40. All others are "holden with the cords of their sins;" and follow the condition of Adam the first, who was mortal, corruptible, and without any life principle to revive from the dead; that life principle is alone in Adam the second, and communicated to none but his members, or to those in him; and who are delivered from their sins.

Rev. John Howard Hinton, of England, the strongest writer that has ever written against our views, speaking of our Lord's discourse with the Sadducees, Luke xx. 27–38, and endeavoring to establish the idea that the dead are in a conscious state, and that all men, good and bad, "will live forever," or are immortal, attempts to sustain the position that it is not the righteous alone our Lord speaks of as attaining that world, or a future life. He says:

> Let it be supposed that our Lord did refer to the righteous only. In that case his words would seem to imply that there is no future existence for any but the righteous; since his speaking of them peculiarly as living after death may fairly be held to exclude others.

Mr. Hinton of course, rejects the sentiment which he says is a fair conclusion, from the idea that our Lord was speaking of the righteous only, who cannot "die any more."

Now we have no doubt that our Lord was speaking of the "righteous only," in that discourse; hence, according to Mr. Hinton's admission, "it may be fairly held to exclude others," viz., all the wicked from "future existence," or life; even a temporary one; and the Scriptures never speak of the wicked being restored to a "temporary life."

But some tell us, men must be "punished according to their deeds." The Bible uses no such phraseology. Every one shall "receive according to that he hath done." The righteous "receive" life. The wicked "receive" death—"everlasting destruction:" death from which there is no recovery. That is receiving, or being "punished," if the expression is liked better, "according to his deeds." Christianity in its spirit, forbids all "cruel and unusual punishment," and no construction of its letter is admissible which contradicts its spirit. Hence, when a sinner is dead, to make alive again to torment him, without any design to reform him, or benefit any of his race, looks like a pure and unmitigated act of revenge, a feeling which we can never consent to fix on our CREATOR without clear and unequivocal testimony of the CREATOR himself. Such testimony we have never yet seen.

ACTS XXIV. 15, CONSIDERED.

THIS text is supposed to justify the idea that Paul taught the resurrection of both the just and the unjust; and it is asked, What does the term "also" import but that he allowed such a resurrection? This term, in our mind, is unavailing. The original word is kai, and is translated variously in the New Testament: its first sense is that of and; it has the sense of even, moreover, beside, further, etc. Even or moreover is quite as likely to be the apostle's meaning as "also."

Paul was a believer in the resurrection of Christ and of "the dead in Christ." For preaching this doctrine he was accused of the Jews themselves; not because they were unbelievers in a resurrection of some sort; but they disliked the doctrine of Christ raised from the dead, and of life from the dead only through him. This they called "heresy," (v. 14), as some do now. Paul professes that in his course of life and preaching he adheres to, and worships the God of the fathers, "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Now, the "law" never speaks of a future life for the wicked, or of their revival from death, and hence Paul did not "allow" it, but some of his accusers did; and yet these same persons charged Paul with "heresy" for preaching a resurrection less extensive than that which they allowed, or admitted—for so the original may be translated; they admitted a resurrection "both of the just and the unjust," which was more than was ever "written in the law or prophets:" holy men of old, who "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," gave utterance to no such sentiments. Now, saith Paul, "I believe all things written in the law and in the prophets: and have hope toward God:"—hope of what? Of that which was common to all men? Nay, verily, as his language, Phil. iii. 11, clearly shows—"If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Why this implied doubt, if the resurrection of all men was a settled fact, which the apostle "allowed?" Could he fail of that which was certain to all? Paul, then, did not allow the resurrection was universal; but some of his accusers did admit such a resurrection, and yet condemned Paul as guilty of "heresy" for preaching the resurrection of "hope" by Jesus Christ.

Such are the facts in the case; and Paul rebukes his accusers for their hypocrisy in condemning him for preaching the resurrection, "which they themselves moreover allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." With such an admission on their part, why do they condemn him for proclaiming the resurrection of Christ and of all that fall asleep in Christ? That such, and no other, was Paul's proclamation concerning the resurrection of the dead, is clear from Phil. iii. 11; 1 Thess. iv. 13–18; and the entire chapter of 1 Corth. xv. "If Paul allowed that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and unjust," we wish our opposers to find where he taught such doctrine, and not rest it on a doubtful text. Where did he ever say, in all his preaching or epistles, The wicked dead shall live again? or shall be raised from the dead? We say again, "Paul never said any such thing." Such a plain, outspoken speaker as Paul, did something more than speak doubtfully; he stated distinctly the grand fact of the resurrection of "the dead in Christ." If the awful doctrine of the wicked dead made alive, tormented, and killed again were true, we may depend Paul would not have left his hearers, and those to whom he wrote to infer it. The great apostle to the Gentiles, was not such a man. When taking his final leave of the elders of the Church of Ephesus, he saith, "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you, but have showed you, and taught you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Acts xx. 20, 21. To what end was this faith in Christ? To the end that they might have the promise of Christ fulfilled unto them—"I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. Repentance toward God and faith in Christ are essential to being raised up from the dead at the last day;" and, "he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii. 36.

Paul in writing to the Ephesian church, after he had taken his last personal leave of them, calls their attention especially to the resurrection of Christ, and to the fact that the same power that raised him from the dead, would quicken them "together with Christ:" that "through Jesus' blood we have the forgiveness of sins;" and he taught the Corinthians, if our sins are not forgiven when we die, we "are perished." 1 Corth. xv. 17, 18. Here we rest the question of Paul's "allowing" the revival of dead sinners into life. He never preached a penal resurrection: none such did he ever speak of.

OBJECTIONS URGED AND ANSWERED.

God "hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom He hath ordained; whereof He hath given assurance unto all, in that He hath raised him from the dead."—Acts xvii. 31. Now if the wicked dead never come up, who will there be at the day appointed to be judged?

THE term judge is not restricted to the one sense of trying and determining cases. It often in the Bible has the sense of ruling, governing. The "Book of Judges" is an example of this, in which all who ruled Israel were termed Judges. The Psalmist says, "O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for Thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth."—Psa. lxvii. 4.

A striking resemblance is seen between this language and that quoted from Acts xvii. 31. They both appear to refer to the same time and event, and correspond to the language of prophecy, "Behold the days come, saith the LORD, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth."—Jer. xxiii. 5.

We might multiply texts, to any extent, showing that the expression in Acts xvii. 31 refers not to a judicial judgment of individuals, but to ruling or governing "the world" in righteousness. The world hitherto has seen no perfectly righteous government. Iniquity and corruption have found place in the best forms of government that have ever yet been seen in the world; but "God has appointed a day," or period, yet future, "in the which he will judge," or rule, "the world in righteousness," as the prophets have said, "by that man," whom God raised up to David, according to His promise, "whom He hath ordained." He "hath given assurance unto all," of his being the "righteous Branch and King," "in that He hath raised him from the dead."

The "righteous Branch" could not have been King upon earth if he had not been raised from the dead; but God has demonstrated to all men that this man, who was put to death, is His appointed King, to rule the nations upon the earth and to do it in righteousness.

Paul had "preached unto the" people of Athens, "Jesus and the resurrection." He had set before them the folly of worshipping idols; but tells them God overlooked these things, done in their ignorance; but now commandeth all men, everywhere to repent of such superstition and folly; and that, because He had determined to establish a righteous rule, or government in the world; in, or under which rule none could have part who did not repent; that is, "turn from idols to serve the true and living God, and wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come;" i. e., from "death, the wages of sin;" without which deliverance we can have no part in the kingdom of God, or in the government of the saints, which is to be "under the whole heaven," and "shall stand forever," and "shall not be left to other people."—Dan. vii. 14, 27; ii. 44.

Then will Paul's language, Acts xvii. 31, have its perfect accomplishment. But,

I can't see how the wicked are ever made to see the righteousness of God, or the world to see it, if they and the righteous go down alike into the grave.

The wicked and the righteous do not go down alike into the grave. "The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but the righteous hath hope in his death."—Prov. xiv. 32. "Like sheep they [the wicked] are laid in the grave: death shall feed on them . . . the grave being a habitation to every one of them;" [margin]. "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."—Psa. xlix. 14, 15. "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36, and vi. 40. These various texts sufficiently indicate the wide difference between the going down into the grave of the righteous and the wicked.

We see no necessity that the wicked dead should be made to see the righteousness of God. It could be no advantage to them, nor satisfaction to holy beings to have them see it, if it could be of no service to them. What profit was it to the antediluvians to see the righteousness of God? They probably did not even think it was a righteous matter thus to destroy them; but Noah and his family did; and so will all the saved see the righteousness of God in cutting off the incorrigibly wicked living from the earth, and in condemning the wicked dead not to see life, but to "be holden with the cords of their sins," and to "remain in the congregation of the dead."

But will there not be a day that Malachi speaks of, "Then shall ye discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not?"

Undoubtedly there will be. But who will discern it? Surely nothing is said or intimated that it is the wicked dead. The righteous of all ages will discern it when "God makes up his jewels," and the living wicked will discern it "when the Lord Jesus is revealed from heaven in flaming fire," and "punishes with everlasting destruction" the corrupters of the earth, civil and ecclesiastic: they will discern their folly and madness, and perish without hope.

THE JUST DESERT OF SIN.

LET us test the theory of the revival into life of the wicked dead to die again. Thus:

If the wages, or just desert of sin, is death, it follows that any punishment which vastly exceeds this is unjust.

A revival into life, from death, to torment awhile and kill again "vastly exceeds death:"

Therefore, such revival, torment and killing again is unjust.

If the punishment of a temporary life from the dead, to be spent in agonizing torments, and followed by dying a second time, is not more than what sin justly deserves, it follows, unavoidably, that death, which will terminate all consciousness, is not the just desert of sin; it falls short of what justice demands, and the divine testimony that, "The wages of sin is death" is a mistake. "Let God be true" whoever else is mistaken.

The proposition that the "wages of sin is death," plainly imports and teaches that the cessation of the sinner's life, or conscious existence, is a punishment perfectly satisfactory to divine justice, and adequately honors the violated law of God. It follows, therefore, that the horrible dogma of a revival of them, when dead, to life, or into a conscious existence in agonizing torments is a libel on the just God, as it is on the Father of mercies.

We long ago saw that the view we maintain of "No life out of Christ," and "The wages of sin is death," must lead to a plain and open confession, ultimately, that the wicked dead will never live again. Death is their fate: not dying, whether once or twice, nor any torments that may precede that dying; but to be dead, to live no more—death to have unbroken dominion over them. Such dominion it had not over Christ, and it shall not have over any member of his body, the true believers in him; all others are "holden with the cords of their sins" under death's dominion; eternally irrevocable.

IS THE JUDGMENT AFTER RESURRECTION?

THIS is a question of vast importance. Those who take the affirmative may now be divided into several classes. 1. Those who believe the righteous have a priority in the resurrection, or will be raised before the wicked. 2. Those who believe the resurrection is simultaneous, both classes rising at the same time, but the righteous immortal and the wicked mortal. 3. Those who hold all are raised mortal, and so continue till after all have passed through an investigating judgment.

If the righteous will have a priority in time, in the resurrection, whether that time be one hour, one day, one year, or a thousand, how is it to be known who are to have part in this favored class, if all in their graves have not been judged before the resurrection begins? Are the righteous to be raised and then the process of judgment to be instituted to see whether the Searcher of hearts has made a mistake? Or, are they to be tried, undergo an examination after their resurrection, as if suspected characters? Can we adopt either of these positions? If not, must it not be manifest they had been judged before being raised? And why are they raised, and not the wicked, at the same instant, except the wicked also have been judged, and found not worthy to have part in this prior or "first resurrection?"

There is no escape from these questions by those who hold all men are revived at the same time, and yet say the wicked are raised corruptible; for it is clear the righteous come up incorruptible and immortal. Why this distinction in the revival state, if both classes had not been judged prior to the revival? And those who have taken the unscriptural position that both classes are raised in a mortal condition, and yet a thousand years apart, do not help their side of the question; for how does it happen that one class are raised before the others at all, if both had not been judged prior to this separation of the dead ones? Why do the righteous come up before the wicked? Why? No rational answer can be given by the advocates of a mortal resurrection, if they deny that all had previously been judged.

This dilemma has driven some of the advocates of the judgment after the resurrection to abandon not only the thousand years supposed to intervene between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, but also to deny that the righteous "are raised incorruptible," and to maintain that both righteous and wicked are raised mortal. This makes the righteous wait through the entire period of the judgment, whatever its length may be, before they can receive their reward or know certainly what their destiny is to be; which waiting may be 1,500 years, or two billions of years, according to the time occupied in investigating the acts and character of each individual. Such a preposterous idea as this mortal resurrection of all, good and bad, would be unworthy of notice, if some were not found who seem to believe it.

To say nothing of its palpable denial of Paul's affirmation, "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," what a grand state of suspense the whole race are held in for an indefinite period! And we might ask, How are this mortal multitude to be fed during this time? If by cultivating the earth, shall not all take part therein? If by miracle, then God will show mercy, for the time being, to the wicked as well as to the righteous, perhaps for thousands of years. That will be some, yea, a large compensation to the wicked to be fed without work for so long a period. We might ask very many questions about the occupation, places of retirement, sleep, etc., all of which are essential to mortals; but the thought of such an assemblage, for such a period, for the purpose of deciding what to do with each, after a minute examination, is too much for any unbiased mind to entertain: there must be an indefensible theory to serve before any man can resort to such a position. So it seems to us.

We will now look at this position as if it were presented by men of reason who profess to believe the Bible. That book positively declares, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible:" hence they are not raised mortal. But again: Christ is "the first fruits" from the dead; the sample of the harvest. If he was not raised from the dead, mortal, and judged afterward, to see if he should be changed to immortality, neither will they be "that are Christ's at his coming;" they are "the harvest," represented by the first fruits. Two facts show that Christ was judged before, or antecedent to his revival from the dead. First: The fact that he was revived previous to the "general resurrection," as it is called. Why is he revived before others, if he had not been judged worthy of such peculiar resurrection? Clearly, he had been so judged prior to his revival from the dead.

Second: His revival demonstrated that he had been so judged: for, he was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." That was the demonstration that he was judged to be the Son of God, and that this judgment passed on him prior to his resurrection from the dead. He was not raised mortal, then judged, and afterward changed to immortality, but his resurrection was his acquittal from mortality; "knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him."—Rom. vi. 9. So Christ saith of those who are his followers: "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world [kai] even the resurrection from the dead . . . neither can they die any more." Why not? Because they "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

They are "declared to be the sons of God, by the resurrection from the dead;" they are like the first-fruits, Christ the Son of God, and are demonstrated to be such by their revival from the dead, and cannot die any more, and hence are not raised mortal, but "incorruptible," as the Scriptures affirm.

If these things are so, then we are brought to the inevitable conclusion that the judgment in which character and doom are decided, is at some period prior or antecedent to the resurrection, and that the resurrection is, of itself, the executive judgment.

What and Where is the Second Death.

Some say that "it is a return to hades after having been in it once before:" others say that "the wicked come from hades and go into gehenna, or the lake of fire." Who are right? the former or the latter?

To my mind there are great obstacles in the way of accepting either view.

The great, and I think insurmountable objection to the first view is, that after death and hades have delivered up the dead which are in them, it seems impossible to return any of them to hades, for death and hades are cast into the lake of fire, "for their destruction," we are told by our brethren. Then, to return a man to hades after hades has been destroyed, would be as paradoxical as to return a man to his house after it had been burned down.

Concerning the second view, that men "go from hades into gehenna or the lake of fire." I can find no Scripture that declares that wicked men are to go from hades into gehenna; or that gehenna is the lake of fire or a symbol of it, even.

The Scriptures nowhere declare that either hades or gehenna are the second death, neither do they intimate that they are symbols of the second death spoken of in Revelations. The lake of fire itself is the second death, according to that book, and the following parties are to be cast into it: Death who sat on a pale horse; Hell, that followed with him; the Beast that came up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns; the False Prophet, or the Beast that came up out of the earth, having two horns; the Devil or great red Dragon that had seven heads, ten horns, and a tail which drew the third part of the stars of heaven and did cast them to the earth; and all whose names were not found written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

All do not go into the second death at the same time. The Beast and False Prophet are cast in there more than a thousand years before the Dragon. The Dragon is shut up in a bottomless pit for a thousand years, while his two coadjutors are in the fiery lake. After the thousand years are expired the Dragon is let loose for a little season, and then he is put into the lake of fire. Next, Death and Hell deliver the dead which are in them; then Death and Hell are cast into the lake. Finally, after all these parties have been cast into it, and after more than a thousand years from the time Beast and False prophet were cast in, those that whose names are not found in the Book of the Life, are cast in.

No one of the above-named parties are returned to hades, for the Beast, Prophet, Dragon, Death and Hell, did not come from there at any time; hence, if to be returned to hades is the second death, then none of these will suffer the second death, for they are not threatened with hades, but with the lake of fire.

Gehenna never was preached by way of threatening to any other people than the Jews. It was preached in this manner; "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell;" literally, "how can ye escape the judgment of the Valley of Hinnom;" spoken of by Jeremiah the prophet.

The second death of Revelation, can be no other than the lake of fire—not hades, or gehenna. May we see to it that our names are written in the Book of Life, for then if we die we shall live again. It is my desire and purpose through grace, to attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead, that I may not die any more. With naught but Christian love in my heart for all the brethren, I subscribe myself their affectionate brother in Christ.

F. H. Burbank.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 21, 1870.

John v. 28, 29, Considered.

by Stephen Pell.

I have not seen as yet any satisfactory explanation of John v. 28, 29, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." If the word "graves," here is not hades or sepulchre, but hidden places, or "dark places," is the literal meaning in this passage, I think I can solve the meaning, God permitting. It is a self-evident fact that Christ's mission was unto the Jews, (Matt. xv. 24.,) and that he taught them in parables: "All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them."—Matt. xiii. 34. Here is a point worth considering, that Jesus spoke unto the Jews John v. 28, 29, in a parable, and it will be noticed that all the parables of Jesus related unto themselves or heathen; hence, it will be seen in this parable; and that the gospel, or word of life, was to be preached unto the heathen, as I will hereafter show. Now, please bear in mind that the gospel was hid from the heathen from the beginning of the first circumcision (Gen. xvii. 9–14), until the end of the Mosaic dispensation, or "It is finished." By referring to Matt. x. 5, 6, 7, we see that the disciples were not allowed to preach the gospel of the kingdom, unto any but the Jews. But after the end of that dispensation they received a different commission. See Matt. xxviii. 19, and parallel texts. Hence, marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the "graves" (not their graves) but the hidden places (hid from the light of the gospel) shall hear his voice. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark xvi. 15. "For, for this cause, was the gospel preached unto the dead, (not literal dead, but dead in trespasses and sins) that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."—1 Peter iv. 6. It will be noticed that in the preceding passage we have a figurative resurrection. Hence, "and shall come forth" (the 1st class have heard the good news of the everlasting gospel call and have obeyed) "unto the resurrection of life" (have passed from death unto life. 2d class) "and they that have done evil" (have not obeyed the gospel call) "unto the resurrection of damnation," and, "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36. Yours in the hope of the coming kingdom.

Newark, N. J., May, 1870.

From Helen Robertson.

Br. Storrs: To-day I am too happy to keep still. When we feel so, we generally want one who can appreciate our feelings to talk to; and as there is no such one, to my knowledge, in this place, I must converse a little with my dear Herald of Life.

What makes me so happy? It is "good news from a far country." It is that the precious truth that God is love, is beginning to be investigated in England, by men who are noted for their "piety and scholarship."

John Angel James was a great and good man. His portrait long hung in my sister's parlor; and now comes the news that his successor in Birmingham has adopted the truth, in its literal sense, which Jesus himself uttered, "I am the resurrection and the life."

Pilate, who delivered Jesus up to be crucified, said of Him, "I find in him no fault." Judas, His betrayer, said of him, "I have betrayed innocent blood." The chief priests and Pharisees also said of Him, "What do we? for this man doeth many miracles. If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." Thus witnessed his cruel enemies, those who opposed him to the death.

A few in these days follow after and believe that the risen One, when he says, "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are the children of God being the children of the resurrection." They simply believe this and publish, "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Hence, no future life to the wicked, for the Bible reveals no future life except eternal life, and that only through Jesus Christ our Lord. O Blessed One! Thou coming, glorious King! Thou art indeed the resurrection and the life. Thou shalt never give thy glory to another; and we shall never attempt to rob thee of it by saying that there is a resurrection into life independent of thee.

I am glad it is testified of those Life believers as it was of the Master. Their teachings are condemned, but what is their standing? "As thoroughly evangelical in his discourses as ever, still, has embraced these views and has written strongly in their defence." Of another successor to the well known John Angel James. That, itself, speaks a great deal. Still another, "A man of piety and scholarship;" and the doctrine is "now maintained by a large number of Christian scholars, as well as less learned believers in this country and elsewhere." Of others it has been said, "Men of prayer"—"Thinking men"—"The cream of the church," and many such testimonies.

Thank God. Such witnessings are worth something.

"Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be magnified; but He shall appear to your glory, and they shall be ashamed."

Let us live on, and labor on. The battle will soon be over, and truth will triumph at last, God being Judge.

Racine, Wis., May 16, 1870.

From Eld. H. Rockwell.

Br. Storrs: Once more through the tender mercy and long-suffering of our kind heavenly Father, I am permitted to be out in the field among the mountains and valleys of our grand old county of Litchfield, trying in much trembling to stir up the pure and impure minds of those that seem ready to die; of which class, if I might be allowed to judge, I should say, if their own testimony is admissible, that those belonging to the orthodox churches are largely in the majority; for when they hear me preach they appear to be interested in the principles of eternal life; and, as they know that I was once a Methodist, they seem to think that unless they take up that old-fashioned Methodist cross, and speak in the meeting, they would miss of their heaven, which they locate "beyond the bounds of time and space," where nothing is nor never was; and some of these testimonies are quite refreshing, for they appear perfectly honest in their long-traditioned theology; and when I review my former position, and remember how hard it was for me to break away from my former theology, it makes my heart sad to see what a great amount of intelligence is lost in consequence of the old immortal soul and eternal misery theory. But thanks, many thanks be to God, that I, in my great ignorance and obstinate unbelief, have ever had the light of oft-rejected truth to shine in my dark and benighted heart; although I have been searching for truth for many long and dreary years, yet I mourn over lost blessings and misimproved opportunities; but the past is gone forever, and now I rejoice to know that the past is all forgiven, and that it remains for me to work while the day lasts, or I, too, shall be left with the things that were, as though I had not been, to remain under the dominion of death, never to see life; for, "the man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead."

If we inquire of those professing to be Christians, in regard to the coming of Christ and the kingdom of God, the general answer is, "O, I do not trouble myself about these things; I have so much to do that I don't find time to study the Bible; but if I live good, and prepare for death, it will be all right, and when I die I hope to go to heaven." But how do they get this hope? Surely they do not find it in the Bible; and when it is looked at from a Scripture stand-point it looks to me very much like a web spun out of the bowels of false theology; and it somewhat resembles the hope of the hypocrite, which shall perish; and as to the preparation for death, they do not consider that all sinners are preparing for death at every step they take in sin; and all this without any special effort; and if any of them are over anxious to have this work of preparation for death perfected, and made sure, it appears to my mind conclusive that the most certain way to accomplish it would be to kill the first person that should come in their way. But perhaps you start with a shudder, and say, Why, that is really awful! Do you? Well, with its awfulness it is nevertheless true; for no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. O Lord, grant that this death system may go out of the teachings of the Christian ministry.

O my brethren and sisters, what a work lies before us, after almost eighteen hundred years of toil and untiring effort, by different instrumentalities for the spread of gospel truth and light, we are still compelled, when looking for light, to behold obscurity. "O that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." I am sorely grieved to know that among those who profess to be Advent preachers, who are well posted on the principles of the coming of the Lord, that they wilfully neglect to preach it, together with the resurrection of the dead, so that the offence of the cross shall not rest on their delicate shoulders; hence, if the orthodox churches, and those of no profession, do reject the truth, it is not quite so strange, so long as they do not hear it preached by those professing to believe it.

It is quite amusing to listen to their flights from earth to heaven, in the aerial coaches, mounting up in moonshine mid air, drawn by unknown horses, up to an unknown God. But I leave them in the hands of Him who hath done and ever will do all things well, praying the Lord not to lay this sin to their charge.

I have heard two of our young Advent preachers since I arrived in this hill country; one of them claimed that he loved all denominations, and went on to designate them, embracing Mohammedans, Catholics, Shakers, Mormons, Spiritualists, and Free-lovers, and I might add, black-legs. I listened to hear whether his extensive love would not embrace the devil and all his infernal clan, but it did not. O how strange! Surely we have fallen on evil times.

The other preacher was opposed to the Life principles. In his discourse he made all Universalists, by saying that we did not die for Adam's sin, but in consequence of his sin. He then gave us a few beautiful touches on redemption, saying that, As in Adam all died, so all would live again in the resurrection. But enough of such teaching, unless it is better and more truthful.

Yours, in hope of future life.

Roxbury, Conn., May 16, 1870.

The Preaching of the Gospel.

Different theories are advanced in our days concerning the object of the preaching of the gospel. Some of these theories have little or no Scriptural basis. Some say that the preaching of the Gospel will eventually bring all men to Christ; others, that this our land will become Immanuel's land, and that American laws and institutions will bring about the Millennium; still others hold that woman's right to vote and to be voted for, must be acknowledged, before Christ's kingdom, can be established in its full extent. We shall pay but little attention to these views. Our object is to inquire, What does Scripture teach concerning this point?

1. Is it contemplated in the word of God, that the present preaching of the Gospel is to result in the salvation of all men? We answer most emphatically, No.

The Scriptures nowhere teach that all men shall be saved. Paul, in the last chapter of Acts, stating the result of his preaching to the Jews at Rome says: "And some believed the things which were spoken, and some believed not." And this has been the result from the very first sermon ever preached until to-day. Some believed, and some believed not. "Many are called, but few are chosen." "The wheat and the tares will grow together until the great harvest."

But may not the preaching of the Gospel ultimately convert the world? Seeing what it has done in the past, may we not confidently expect that it will do much more in the future? Although we believe that the Gospel will accomplish great results, more even than we possibly can conceive, yet have we no assurance in God's word that all will be brought to Christ. On the contrary, we have many Scripture warrants to believe that until the second coming of Christ wickedness will increase, for Christ asked: "When the Son of man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" "As in the days of Noe so shall the coming of the Son of man be." He shall come as a thief in the night, finding most of the people unprepared, in the midst of pleasure and worldly lusts, and "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Furthermore, we find a most positive prophecy in the third chapter of 2 Tim., that in the "last days perilous times shall come." For men shall be lovers of their own selves, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy; that is to say, wickedness will abound, and righteousness be greatly wanting.

2. If, then, the preaching of the Gospel is not to bring all men to salvation, and not to bring about the conversion of the whole world, what is its object? We answer, it is threefold: (1.) To make known God's plan of salvation. (2.) To bring God's believers unto Christ. (3.) To be a witness against those not believing.

In the Gospel is made known that which by no other agency could be known, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners;" that pardon is provided; and that God is willing to impart that pardon to every penitent and believing soul. These precious truths the wisdom of man could not find out; great philosophers could not discover them. For though natural religion undoubtedly reveals much, yet its revelations cannot save man, nor lift him out of his darkness and sins. By this preaching and making known God's plan of salvation, believers are to be brought to Christ and life everlasting; even those who believe, both from among the Gentiles, and from among the Jews. To these, preaching is "the savor of life unto life." "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." "There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek, for whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved;" but, "How shall they hear without a preacher?"

The Gospel is preached as a witness against those who believe not. Christ said: "This Gospel shall be preached as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." And Paul understood that he was not only serving God by successfully proclaiming the truth as it is in Jesus in the case of those who received his word and came to Christ with repentant hearts, seeking that Friend that sticketh closer than a brother, but also in the case of unbelievers. He says: "We are unto God a sweet savor of Christ; in them that are saved and in them that perish; to the one we are a savor of death unto death, and to the other a savor of life unto life." Those who reject the Gospel salvation, shall be condemned by this very Gospel, which having heard, they did not accept. Therefore we must preach it, whether men will hear or forbear.—Selected.

Science at Fault Again.

A great deal of obloquy is heaped upon those who are found to give themselves serious concern about what God has predicted to come to pass. It has become the custom of modern savans and wiseacres to ridicule and sneer at the students of sacred prophecy, and to set them down as fools, because, here and there, it has been found that some have anticipated events, in given times, which did not come. Because mistakes have been made by some, and the prophesyings of others have failed, therefore, it is assumed, that there is really nothing in the Scriptural predictions of the future, at least nothing that we can know beforehand, and that any attempt to make something out of them is evidence of a crazed brain, and mere fanaticism.

But, what is the reason that people will not reason in the same way against what is lauded and admired as sober science and wisdom? Some years ago, the astronomers and philosophers predicted a grand universal star-shower, and set themselves and the world on tip-toe of expectation with reference to it. Science swept out her dusty observatories, and brushed off the lenses of her instruments, and gathered together her confident professors. Institutions of learning everywhere made ready for the splendid and impressive exhibition. Watchmen and watch-women were stationed with pen and pencil for observations. Presidents of colleges, mayors of cities, and high authorities of all sorts everywhere, gave their commissions and orders touching what was to come to pass on the 14th of November, 1866. And the newspapers were busy for months in advance giving explanations and directions for a right understanding and enjoyment of the sublime celestial performance to come off at the given time. But, after all that was said, and done, and expended, the stellar performers failed to make their appearance, any more than on multitudes of other nights not foretold by the philosophers. The whole thing turned out to be a miscalculation—a mistake—a miserable blunder. The wisdom, the science, the calm and sober learning, to which we are called to pay reverence, had to hang its head; and the world's models of astuteness and sobriety, whose words we are to receive as oracles, and whose enlightened and philosophic judgment we are to accept over against all this stupid speculation about what God has revealed of things to come, had to confess themselves at fault.

Another specimen of this oracular wisdom of sober science has come under our notice. Herr Fall, a notable German astronomer and meteorologist, had been giving out certain prognostications of a very alarming character. He affirmed that a great earthquake was to occur within the past year, by which the whole continent of South America was not only to be terrifically shaken, but crumbled into dust, if not engulfed in the sea. In Peru, his predictions were so firmly believed, that, at the time fixed for the disastrous event, the inhabitants removed from the cities into the plains, and sat in terror awaiting the awful catastrophe. In Europe, also, the man's scientific announcements obtained such credence, that a large number of ships, bound from Bremen and Hamburg for South America, were detained until news should arrive as to how the thing had turned out. But it so happened, that no shaking whatever came to pass, and the Southern continent of America, with its appurtenances of cities, mountains, and plains, continues as usual. The philosopher's science was wholly at fault.

Now, we do not propose to discard science because of such blunders. We do not consider it a disgrace to scientific pursuits, nor a good reason for denouncing them as fanatical and unfit to occupy the time and energies of men with a genius for them. But we do claim, that such failures and mistakes on the part of our wise men, furnish a legitimate basis on which to demand a little more forbearance and respect toward those students of the Divine word who are persuaded that they have solid Scriptural warrant for certain doctrines concerning things that are yet to come to pass. What if mistakes have here and there been made? If our savans in the scientific world, who claim to have a monopoly of sober and solid wisdom, can be so sadly led astray in their interpretations of nature, and still have the respect of the community for themselves and their professions, is it not most uncharitable, illogical, and unjust, to rule the study of sacred prophecy illegitimate and fanatical because some have erred in their interpretations of the Scriptures? We honor science for its efforts to get at the truth, and to make it of account for the welfare of mankind, even though it is often very far from the mark; but have we not a right to claim, on the same ground, similar respect and attention for honest and faithful attempts to search out the meaning of God's predictions, even though there have been instances in which texts and dates have been misapplied? We do not cry down all astronomers as fanatics and fools because some have too confidently misled the world in the matter of the falling stars in 1866, or in the matter of Herr Fall's earthquake which did not come to pass. These very mistakes are important items in the processes of reaching a true comprehension of such things. But neither should students of prophecy be condemned, because some have broached theories of interpretation which have miscarried. In the one case as in the other, the very error thus detected is argument for more diligent and profound investigation, and its explosion the further clearing of the way to the right understanding of the truth.

It is, at any rate, clear and settled, that a large part of Holy Scripture is made up of predictions which yet remain to be fulfilled. They have been divinely given to forewarn of what must come to pass in the course of God's mysterious providence. They are meant to inform and prepare us for what must prove infinitely disastrous to those who fail to perceive what has been written for our learning, and so are overtaken unawares. Is it not therefore our business, our Christian duty, our bounden obligation, to study these things, and to do what we can to have the church and the world awake to the things which must shortly come to pass? Blessed is he that shall be found watching.—Prophetic Times.

Pere Hyacinthe on Prophecy.

Before the Peace League of Paris, on the 10th of July last, this distinguished preacher, whom Rome has made efforts to silence for his faithful testimony to the truth, and who has excited so much interest in the Protestant world, made the following remarks, which we quote with much pleasure. They show how great minds, when unprejudiced, are impressed with the scripturalness of our teachings. The eloquent speaker said:—

In the present age of the world, universal and perpetual peace is only a chimera. In the age to come, it will be a reality. For my part, I have always believed—and now, in this assembly of my brethren, I don't mind telling the secret—I have always believed that in some nearer or remoter future, mankind would come, not to complete perfection, which does not belong to earth, but to that relative perfection which precedes and prepares for heaven. After the fall of Jerusalem and Rome, and at the predicted end of the ancient world, the primitive Christian, heirs of the promises of Jewish prophecy, did not expect immediately the beginning of the heavenly and eternal state, but a temporal reign of Jesus Christ and His saints, a regeneration and triumph of man upon the earth. I also look for this mysterious millennium, about which our errors of detail cannot shake the deep, unalterable truth. I look for it, and in the humble but faithful measure of my labors, my works, my prayers, I strive to prepare the way for it. I believe that nations as well as individuals shall some day taste the fruit of universal redemption by the Son of God made man. I believe that the law and the gospel shall reign over this whole planet. I believe that we—that you and I—shall see descending from heaven a manhood humbler and nobler, meeker and mightier, purer and more loving, in a word, greater than our own. "And this man shall be the peace!" Et erit iste Pax. –Micah v. 5.

Over the cradle of our Lord Jesus Christ the angels sung, in the majestic beauty of that Christmas night, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men." And over the tomb from which he rose, the cradle of his new life, Christ says himself, "I have overcome the world! My peace I give to you!" The future shall receive that promise of the angels, and that gift of Christ—the double hosanna of his cradle and his tomb. The future is the inheritance, not of the violent, but of the gentle. Then shall be brought to pass that other saying, written among the words that shall never pass away, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Prophetic Times.

Appointments.

West Leeds, Me., Sunday, May 29.

J. C. Wheeler,
North Turner, Bridge, Me.

West Meriden, Conn., Sunday, May 29.

Wm. Stuart.

Groton Junction, Mass., eve., May 26.
Nashua, N. H., eve., May 27.
Manchester, N. H., Sunday, May 29.
Roby's Corner, N. H., eve., June 1.
Northwood Narrows, N. H., Sunday, June 5.
Exeter, N. H., eve., June 7.
Lawrence, Mass., eve., June 8.
Charlestown, Mass., eve., June 9.
Lynn, Mass., eve., June 10.
Providence, R. I., Sunday, June 12.

S. W. Bishop.

North Hermon, Me., May 29.
Plymouth, Me., June 5.
Amherst, June 12.
Hamden, June 19.
Kenduskeag, June 26.

L. Wetherbee.

West Abington, Mass., May 29.
Pleasant Valley, Conn., (West Winsted in the evening), June 8.
New York City, Cooper Istitute, (Room 24), June 12.

W. S. Campbell.

Business Department

Cash Receipts.

One dollar each from—Stephen Pell, N. S. Page, R. W. Neale, James H. Jacobs, Dimmes Tanner, Peter Morrison, Edwin Paul, J. F. Whitney.

Two dollars each from—John McClean (paid to end of volume).

Various sums—D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; Samuel F. Clapp, $20 on pledge; Louis Morgan, $3; A. Bugbee, $3.

Receipts to Tract Fund.

Eld. H. Rockwell, 50 cents.

THOUGHTS ON LIFE.

Eternal life, how sweet the sound
To suffering mortal man;
There is a life beyond the grave,
God's love devised the plan.

CHORUS.

"We're almost down to the river's side,
Soon will our wanderings cease;
If Jesus himself will be our guide,
We shall walk thro' the valley in peace."

Come unto me and freely drink
Of life's pure fount, he cries;
For he who drinks shall thirst no more;
I come, my soul replies.

Come rich or poor, come high or low,
No money ye need bring;
Life as a gift will I bestow,
Said Israel's mighty King.

Mortal, there is no other life
For thee, beyond the grave;
Except the life that Christ bestows,
For he alone can save.

Connected with the Living Vine,
Its nature ours must be;
O blessed state, dear Lord, to live
And move and breathe in thee.

But should we, wearied, fall asleep,
Our sleep will not be long;
The trump shall sound, refreshed we'll rise
To sing the conqueror's song.

Eternal life, eternal life,
God's gift through Christ to man,
There is a way from out the grave,
And Love devised the plan.

MARIA M. WEAVER.

FEEDING HILLS, Mass., April, 1870.

ANTICHRIST ONCE MORE.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

[Continued from week before last.]

BUT in order to show the religious aspect of the times, immediately at the apostolic age, and which show the rapid decline of that light in the religious mind, that constitutes Christian vitality, I will give an extract from J. B. Lippincott's Book of Martyrs:

"Persecution was general in all the Roman provinces; racks, scourges, swords, daggers, crosses, poison and famine are made use of in various parts to dispatch the Christians; and invention was exhausted to devise tortures against such as had no crime, but thinking differently from the votaries of superstition. A city of Prygia, consisting entirely of Christians, was burned, and all of the inhabitants perished in the flames."—P. 41. "If famine, pestilence, or earthquakes afflicted any of the provinces, it was laid to the Christians."—P. 20. "Errors were common, and the Christians were at variance with each other. Self-interest divided those whom social love should have united; and the virulence of pride occasioned a variety of factions."—P. 29. "The Arians commenced a persecution against the orthodox bishops and clergy, and their Sees were filled with Arians. In Lybia thirty bishops were martyred. In A. D. 386, George, the Arian bishop of Alexandria, under the authority of the emperor, began a persecution in that city and its environs, and carried it on with the most infernal severity; and assisted by the governor of Egypt, the persecution now raged so that the severities practiced by the Arians were as great as those that had been practiced by the Pagans. If a man accused of heresy made his escape, his whole family were massacred, and his effects confiscated."—P. 51.

But to get a view more clear of those times. I will make one or two quotations from the ancient history of Universalism, by Hosea Ballou:

"Ever since Justin Martyr (A. D. 150–60) it had been a common opinion among the orthodox fathers, that at death all souls, both the righteous and the wicked went to a world either of joy or suffering, according to their deserts."—P. 73. "Origen, as a doctor in the church, as a philosopher among the learned, stood alone, without either rival or competitor, and enjoyed, while living, such a reputation as few in any age have ever acquired."—P. 75. "Origen believed and taught, not only the immortality of the soul, but the preexistence of all souls."—P. 85. "The celebrated Tertullian, a presbyter of Carthage in Africa, a man of extensive learning, is thought to have been the first Christian writer who expressly asserted that the torments of the damned will be of equal duration with the happiness of the blest."—P. 71. His time was A. D. 204.—Origen 185–253. "Next to Turtullian is Minucius Felix, who advocated endless misery."—P. 72, A. D. 210.

We find as early as the second and third centuries various conflicting opinions, jars and dissensions, schism after schism, inflaming themselves into hatred, animosity and persecutions. The Arian persecution against their Christian opponents was as barbarous as any from the Pagans; and when the power of strength took a reaction, and went to the opposite side, the Arians received the same brutal treatment that they had been giving for not accepting what they supposed to be heresy. Now, if the Papally persecuted are saints, I ask if those persecuted, who belonged to these early Christian's factions were not also saints? The power of persecution was equally against them at the time of their oppression.

Or would all of the latter class be such, had their blow of death been from the former power and not of themselves? We find as early as A. D. 185 and 200, that not only the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the pre-existence of all souls, but the doctrine of eternal damnation was taught by the most influential characters and bishops of the church. Now, what can we expect when a constant flowing stream of errors and heathen views of poison, uniting themselves as it were to this general focus of corruption for some three or four centuries, and in the church, but the extermination of vital Christian understanding?

This being the case, I fail to find any saints in the dark ages. He who wishes to read the persecutions of the saints and Christians of the Apostolic age can find it in the ten Pagan persecutions given in the Book of Martyrs. And he may also read Dan. viii. 24, "And shall destroy the holy people."

But I find that I am here met with a passage that is in the mouth of every Catholic, and our Br. not excepted. "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world." Many suppose this promise is responsible for a perpetual or unbroken chain of true and existing Christians from the time given to the end of the age. But I fail to see it in this light; because Christ cannot be with his people when they have no existence. But when they do exist he is in some way with them. And we know they did, and do, or will again exist.

But to extend the clearness of this view, let us if possible get the true symbolic meaning of the dragon, the leopard, and the scarlet colored beasts, their seven heads and ten horns; and in proportion to the variation of these figures, we should expect the change of their meaning only. And as it is generally admitted that the horns of each are the same, I claim with the same propriety that the heads of each are also the same. I understand the great red dragon, symbolizes the Roman empire; and his prophetic acts, having only a partial fulfilment in the Apostolic age. A parallel of this dragon is in Dan. viii. 9–12. "And out of one of them (one of the four divisions of the Grecian empire) came forth a little horn (little in its infancy was Rome) which waxed exceeding great even to the host of heaven. Yea, he magnified himself even to the Prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away," etc. See also, Dau. xi. 31; xii. 11.

Here we have a short and condensed history in few words of the Roman Empire from its commencement to the millenial day, including the dragon, the beast, and even the beast's heads, horns and all, in one descriptive draft. Its ruling and growing power waxes great down the channel of time, even to the host of heaven, where it magnifies itself by "speaking great words against the Most High."—vii. 25. But we are not left with only this fragmentary description of this noted power; but various and rehearsed forms of delineation are given. The dragon—Pagan Rome—gave his seat, power and great authority to the beast. That is a willing transfer of imperial power from the senate of Rome and her prince Augustulus to Zeno the Greek king in Constantinople, in A. D. 469.

The ripening of the imperial apostacy into prophetic notice was in Constantine the Great, who decreed that the head of the Church should be forever at Constantinople. See Divine History, by Frederick Fysh, pp. 268, 272. Then, at near the age of 150, the dragon gave her his seat and power, and soon she, (the beast) put on the first head of imperial persecution under Justinian 533. But what are we to understand by the leopard and scarlet beasts; only that they represent the Christian apostacy under the influence and power of Papal Rome, with all the elements of that corruption? The variation of color is a requisite convenience for two rehearsed descriptions of the same thing.

The next question is, What do the seven heads of this typical beast represent, each having a crown and blasphemy? I understand they are seven imperial and consecutive powers defending, sustaining, and cultivating the Papal corruption and creed, and which exterminate all dissenters, making disbelief a penal offence. The crowns symbolize this power, and the blasphemy this law. The suspension or delays of time between these heads some of which are long, are no violation of the symbolic law. Now there are only seven of these powers or heads, worthy of prophetic notice. But all separated in the distance of the time of their action. Can we find on the historic page this number? Let us see.

The Greek kingdom comes in with the first head under Justinian. "In the creed of Justinian the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish by fire and sword,—the unity of the Christian faith."—Gibbon, vol. 3, p. 265. I will give a short extract of Justinian's letter to the Pope. "It has always been our earnest study to preserve the unity of your Holy See, and to unite to your holiness all the priests of the whole East. Nor do we suffer anything that is agitated to pass without the knowledge of your Holiness, for in all things we are prompt to increase the honor and authority of your See." Surely this is sufficient to prove the first head.

The second is of France. "It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the Popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the Empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. On Christmas the last year of the eighth century, Charlemagne appeared in the church of St. Peter, and Leo placed a precious crown on his head." etc. See Gibbon vol. v. p. 43.

The third head is of Saxony under Otho. "His father, Henry the Fowler, was elected by the suffrage of the nation to save and institute the kingdom of Germany." "Otho his son was crowned (not far from 940) in Aix-la-Chapelle. The sword and belt, the imperial mantle, the armlets, and the staff, together with the sceptre and the crown were given him, saying, Take this sword, destined to repulse all the enemies of Christ. Christianity was propagated by the sword."—Gibbon, vol. v. p. 55. Prof. Rohlraush's history of Germany, pp. 122, 123.

The fourth head is of Franconi, under Conrad the Elder, a nobleman of Franconi, who was elected as a new emperor by the Germatic Dukes assembled for that purpose, and who was subsequently crowned in Rome about 1,014. Conrad was succeeded by his son Henry III. He was crowned at Rome by the Pope in 1046. Hallam's history of the Middle Ages, says on p. 229, "At his death (Henry V), in 1125, the male line of the Franconian emperors was at an end." The fifth head is of the House of Swabia, under Frederic Barbarossa, duke of Swabia, crowned at St. Peter's church in 1155. Roeh. p. 49.

The sixth head is of Spain. Philip II., king of Spain, prepared an expedition which he fondly hoped would conquer England, and thus destroy the stay of Protestantism in Europe. Ships were prepared in all the ports of his dominions—Spain, Portugal, Naples, and all the countries that still recognized his authority. The armament consisted of 150 ships, 2,650 great guns, 20,000 soldiers, 8,000 sailors, and 2,000 volunteers, under the Duke of Sidona. The Pope blessed the expedition and ordered Philip, king of Spain, to take Queen Elizabeth dead or alive. The fleet was called the Invincible Armada, and sailed from Lisbon, May 3, 1588. But from storm, English bravery and skill, received such a defeat, that only a few shattered ships returned. This head brings us to the Protestant Independence.

And since this time, no Imperial Dynastic power has presumed to proclaim to the world, that they who dissent from the Papal creed, should be punished with death. Hence there is another head, for only six are in the past.

"The seven heads are seven" (Imperial) "mountains" of power, on which the Papal See—Woman—sitteth. Or in other words, they are seven kings; five are fallen. Now, "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is," is the scarlet colored beast, Rev. xvii. 3. Now I have shown that seven heads belong to this beast, and that five of them are in the past, and of course dead. And the first he had, which was of the Greek horn, and which he kept some 250 years, he knocked off by repudiation. So he now has no head; and of course, he is not. And yet in another sense he is. Now take him all and in all, is he not of or from the seven, being all combined in one universal apostate body? And yet if we take him alone, and as one, he makes eight. So I understand it. But again. In describing the beast under the figure of a leopard, it is said that the dragon, i. e., pagan Rome gave him his power, and this power went directly into the hands of the Greek horn or kingdom, that gave the apostate church the first head. This head continued faithful until the church at Rome set claims to territory that belonged to the Greek horn or kingdom. The Pope, taking shelter of assistance under Pepin and Charlemagne of France; and they formally erected themselves into a Republic. "Such was the weakness of the Eastern empire that all the efforts of the Emperor, to reduce the Romans to subjection proved unavailing. The Greek viceroy who marched to besiege Rome was killed in battle, and his son." Rohlraush's History, p. 18. Hence the separation; and of course the wounded head is here, the first of the Greek horn. "And I saw one of his heads as it were, wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed."—Rev. xiii. 3. Let the reader observe that this verse, and verses 5, 6, and 7, give a special chain of description of the Greek horn or kingdom that has these heads. Hence, the Revelator here omits entirely, the five that have fallen, for they belong exclusively to the other branch, or, the Papal apostacy. The wounded being the first, and the healed head the last, and in the future, and of the seven, makes it certain that its revival, into action and power is yet to come, and also the events that cause his indignation. The seven heads are seven mountains, or "Seven kings; five are fallen," which are of, 1, France; 2, Saxony; 3, Franconia; 4, Swabia; 5, Spain. These are forever gone. "And one is." Now which is this, if it is not the one which had the wound as it were unto death, Rev. xiii. 3? This wound was from the sword. See verse 14. Is not this the sword that the Pope and Charlemagne used in forcing back to Rome the Imperial power?

The wound not being fatal, supposes that "It yet is;" and its being healed proves the existence of its life in the growing kingdom, until events ripen it into its destined action. "And the other is not yet come." That is, the healed head. "And when he cometh, he must continue a short space." How long is this? Let Daniel decide. "And times and laws were given into his hands, until a time times, and the dividing of time:" vii. 25. But how long is a time? Here again, we appeal to Daniel iv. 25, where he makes seven times seven years. And would he violate or change his own rule, in almost the next breath, without any notice of it? But, says one, We believe Daniel vii. 25, means some 1260 years. Then as this is the shortest time of any of the seven heads, their whole time must be at least 8,820 years.

But to continue the description of this head. "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months. Rev. xiii. 5. The same time as, Daniel vii. 25, xii. 11, the commencement of the abomination xi. 31, and Matt. xxiv. 15.

"And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them," etc. Rev. xii. 7; the same as, Daniel vii. 21. "I beheld, and the same horn (Greek) made war with the saints and prevailed against them; until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High, and the saints possessed the kingdom." Here I wish to make one point. All the time from the commencement of this war with the saints until their victory in the kingdom, is occupied by this imperial law of persecution on them. For it is the time that the "Times and laws" are in their enemies' hand; and although knowledge shall increase, many shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity and by spoil many days; i. e., 1290, the time of the abomination that maketh desolate. Now the question is, Has the kingdom come? No. Is the Imperial law of persecution in process? No. Are the events in the East, against which this persecution comes, matured? No. Then the covenant, or Daniel's seventieth week is in the future.

Now having traversed the Revelator's short description of the two heads of the Greek horn, culminating at the end of the age, we find he goes back where the first had received his wound, and brings up another description that is purely Papal. And beginning at the eleventh verse of the same chapter, "And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." The coming up of this beast was the result of the Greek and Papal separation. The Pope getting back the imperial power, or seat to Rome, and from the assistance of Pepin, king of France, subjugated country that belonged to the Greek king; and the Pope took rank among the kings of the earth. Making the Duchy of Ravenna one horn, and the Duchy of Spoleto the other. This acquired strength caused the Papal power to say "to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live." Ver. 14. "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause, that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." V. 15. This image symbolizes an imperial power or law for Papal defence, coming up as the second head, resembling and granting to the Papal See the same protection it had received from the first Greek head.

But how are we to understand this? Whose deadly wound was healed, ver. 12? Evidently the Revelator simply refers back to the description he had just given of the Greek horn or kingdom, extending or reaching to the end of the world, when, as he there of course had to say, "the head was healed." And in bringing up the Papal description he had to refer to it by saying, "Whose deadly wound was healed." As the point is important I will analyze it thus.

Whose deadly wound, I, the Revelator have just told you was, at the end of the age, healed. Not that it was healed at the time the image was made, or second head came up, by any means. For in that case the beast would have had two heads at once; which would destroy their consecutive order. But I have said that the healed head of the beast is the seventh or last, and of the Greek horn or kingdom, and is the one who is to make war on the saints of Dan. vii. 20–25. And I have proved that the first six heads of the beast gave their exclusive support to the Papal See. Though the first head was of the Greek horn, it was before that power withdrew from the Papal with her wounded head and loss of territory.

[To be Continued.]

REVERSE DEFINITIONS.

IN order to maintain the popular traditions of the churches, our orthodox expositors have been compelled to reverse the ordinary meaning of some of the most prominent and simple words in the Bible. As examples, we have selected the following:

To be dead means to be more conscious than ever before. To die is to live on in misery. To lose life, is to preserve a miserable existence. Life means happiness. To burn up, means to burn forever. To destroy is to preserve whole; as also the terms devour, perish, consume, etc. Not to be, means to be without end.

The author of the tract from which this extract is taken, has shown over two hundred texts in the Bible which require this style of perversion to bring them into apparent consistency with the popular dogmas. We have asked several of our opponents to give us an intelligible idea of death from their standpoint, but we are yet without an answer, and are logically forced to treat that word, as also the other terms above alluded to, in the same manner in the Bible as in other works. We hold that the literal and figurative uses of the terms death and dead, are plainly distinguished. For instance the passage, "Our fathers ate manna in the wilderness and are dead," and the phrase "dead in trespasses and in sins," obviously bear this distinguishing mark.

If the English language in the Bible will not bear its ordinary construction, then we have not a faithful translation, and those unacquainted with the original languages are yet without a Bible. But by allowing the plain language of the Bible its ordinary and obvious import, the harmony becomes so perfect, and the teaching so God-like, that we cannot avoid the conclusion that false theology is the prime cause of much that seems mysterious in the Scriptures, and also of much of the existing skepticism regarding that Book, and the lack of living faith amongst those who profess to believe it.—The Nazarine.

NO trait of character is more valuable than the possession of good temper. Home can never be made happy without it. It is like flowers springing up in our pathway, reviving and cheering us. Kind words and looks, are the outward demonstration; patience and forbearance are the sentinels within.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

LITTLE ONES, LOVE JESUS.

ABOUT ten months ago, I saw many children in this city weeping over their sins, and soon after I saw many of them with happy faces joining in sweet songs of praise to Jesus for having loved them. But some grown people, who only looked on, said: "I don't believe these little children will hold out; they are too young to understand these things." They did not seem to think the Good Shepherd, who says, "Suffer little children to come unto me," is able to take care of every little one in his flock.

While resting here a few days, I have been looking up some of the little ones who then thought their sins were all forgiven for Jesus' sake. It has made me very happy to hear such good reports of the way these dear children have kept "looking unto Jesus." A good many of them were taken into the Church, and the ministers were glad they took the little lambs into the fold. Some of only seven summers were taken by the hand and led to the Lord's table, where they were reminded by the bread and wine of how he poured out his life's blood for us on the cross.

When we reached here, no one knew that we were coming that night. And so we went at once into the regular weekly prayer-meeting. There we found a good number of little children scattered among the older people. One little boy stood up and told of a boy's prayer-meeting they had kept up since last spring, and of how other boys were still being led by God's Spirit to trust and love the Saviour.

If I can find any little boy or girl here who last spring thought they had found Christ as their Saviour, but who have since wandered far away from him, I mean to go and see them, and try and get them to come back to his open arms, for I know he will receive them and forgive them.

There is a beautiful story told of a young robber in the life of the blessed Apostle John. A young man of Ephesus, who had become a Christian, and of whom St. John was very fond, got into trouble while St. John was away and had to flee for his life into the mountains. There he joined a band of robbers, and was so daring and desperate, that they soon chose him as their leader. St. John came back and found the poor lad gone. St. John had stood at the foot of the cross years before, and heard his Lord pardon the penitent thief; and he knew how to deal with such wild souls. And what did he do? Give him up for lost? No; he set off, old as he was, by himself, straight for the mountains in spite of the warnings of his friends, that he would be murdered, and that this young man was the most desperate and blood-thirsty of all the robbers. At last he found the young robber. And what did the robber do, as soon as he saw St. John coming? I will tell you. Before St. John could speak one word to him, he turned and ran away for shame; but the old man followed him, never saying a harsh word to him, but only crying after him: "My son, my son, come back to your father!" And at last he found him where he was hidden, and held him by his clothes, and embraced him, and pleaded with him so that the poor fellow burst into tears, and let St. John lead him away; and so that blessed St. John went down again to Ephesus in joy and triumph, bringing his lost lamb with him.

Did you, my little reader, once think you loved the dear Jesus, and have you yielded to temptation, and are you now far away from him on the dark mountains of sin? One who loves you more than St. John loved that young robber is now following after you. Oh! do not run away from him. His loving words to you are: "Return unto me, and I will return unto you."

Once a flock of sheep were in a beautiful pasture, when the farmer thought they had everything they could wish—plenty of rich green grass and clear sparkling water. One day he went out to view the flock, but he found one of them missing. At last he saw the stray sheep away in a plowed field. He called to it, but it did not come. He sent his shepherd's dog after it, but the dog only barked at, but did not bring it to the owner. At last he went for it himself. And what do you think he found the matter? I will tell you. The poor thing was caught in a trap set there to catch game. If it had kept off the plowed field with the rest of the sheep, it would not have been caught. But the shepherd pitied it, and opened the trap, and let it scamper away with the rest.

Do you feel that you have wandered away from the Good Shepherd, and have been caught in an enemy's trap? Oh! then rejoice that Jesus is following after you. God's word says: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd. He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom."—Isa. xl. 11.—Selected.

A BAD MARK.—"I've got a boy for you sir." "Glad of it; who is he?" asked the master-workman of a large establishment. The man told the boy's name, and where he lived. "He has got a bad mark." "A bad mark, sir; what?" "I meet him every day with a cigar in his mouth, I don't want smokers."

PROCRASTINATION says, "Oh it will be pleasant to do your work by and by; wait awhile." The Bible says, "Do with thy might whatsoever thy hand findeth to do;" and diligence never delays. Which of these do you mind?

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity," as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. — NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1870. — VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 33. WHOLE NUMBER 319.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional; and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TROUBLE IN THE SUN.

WE copy the following from an editorial in the "New York Times" of the 23d ult. We express no opinion of the statements, but give it as a matter of interest, and as showing what some secular papers say and think. If it had been an editorial in an Advent paper, some would have thought it a sensational effort. Nevertheless, there are to be "signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken: and they shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke xxi. 25–28.

THE GREATEST OF ALL FUTURE POSSIBILITIES.

The sun is beginning to be an object of great anxiety to many scientific men. Spots on that orb are not at all uncommon, as may be ascertained by any one who will take the trouble to look at it through a bit of smoked glass. But these phenomena have of late assumed an appearance which astonishes astronomers, and is calculated to alarm that class which fancies it can detect portents of the future in the heavens. There are great gulfs now to be seen in the sun, each much larger than this earth which we think of so much consequence in the universe. They increase at a prodigious rate, and sometimes seem destined to work a convulsion similar to that which has undoubtedly overtaken other solar systems. Suns as vast as that which lights and warms this world have been shattered to pieces, or disappeared, and only the philosopher in his roving glance over the sky has detected the change. The inhabitants of other planets would not notice the disappearance of the planet we inhabit, any more than we can see a speck of sand carried off by the wind on the sea-shore.

It is not a mere theory, but an ascertained fact, that the sun is always in a highly fluid condition—as one recent writer describes it, "a hurricane of flame, the disturbance of which might, perhaps, be best represented to our imaginations by the occasional explosion of a planet or two of nitro-glycerine." It is, moreover, subject to "magnetic storms," produced, as many suppose, by the movements of the planets around it. The great disturbance which is now going on was predicted months ago by scientific men. That we are much more concerned in the event than many people suppose, is quite certain. Self-registering magnetic instruments have revealed the fact that whenever a spot breaks out on the sun, the earth thrills under a mysterious magnetic influence. In one case, a few years ago, it is upon record that telegraphic machinery was set on fire, and the "pen of Bain's telegraph was followed by a flame," at the very instant a sudden burst of light showed itself in the sun. "In the telegraph-stations at Washington and Philadelphia the signal-men received strong electric shocks." In fact, the electric condition of the earth was changed, though by what precise agency none can fully explain. We are at once lost in a region of conjecture, and can only feel that the fate which was foretold of old for the earth may at any moment overtake it. The forces are all in existence by which, in the solemn language of Holy Writ, the "heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."

Once in every eleven years the sun exhibits the stupendous phenomena which are at present engaging the attention of philosophers. In 1859 "chasms and abysses," similar to those which are now reported, were seen by many observers. Their recurrence was predicted for 1870. Great disturbances in the world have usually accompanied these outbreaks, though why it should so happen is another of the unfathomable mysteries of the universe. In 1848 there were magnetic storms, and we had the French revolution. Again in 1859 they occurred, and we saw wars and rumors of wars in Europe. The electrical condition of the atmosphere is thought to exert a greater influence upon the minds of men and nations than many are willing to believe, or than any one is able to explain. The telegraphs denote the changed condition of the earth, but they cannot indicate the extent of the change. In the language of the astronomer whose description of the sun we have just quoted, "the pens of all our telegraphic wires may some day trace in flame a handwriting more ominous of human destiny than was the handwriting which, during Belshazzar's feast, traced a warning on the wall of the fall of the Babylonian dynasty."

THE SHEEP AND THE GOATS.

"PLEASE write an article on the 'Sheep and Goats' of Matt. xxv. I am compelled to think that these are distinct from the 'Elect Church'—and that they are really the nations that are spared to the 'life of the age,' or Aionian life, over whom Christ and the saints reign. I may be mistaken. Please write on the subject."

So a friend requests. Not having the leisure to give full attention to the subject, we reprint the following from an English publication, which is at least suggestive.

What are the facts? There is no mention of resurrection in the context; the people living on the earth when Jesus Christ shall set his feet on Mount Olivet are the sheep and the goats spoken of in this passage. Men in fleshly bodies are referred to, and none else. The entire discourse refers to Christ's return, and the allusions and references are so purely Jewish, that the disciples could not fail to understand him.

I. Who are the persons judged? You will find them described in Joel iii. 2. "I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land." The Septuagint uses the very words of Matthew, panta ta ethne, "all nations," all the heathen. Now look at Isaiah x. 20, 21: "And it shall come to pass in that day, that the remnant of Israel, and such as are escaped of the house of Jacob, shall no more again stay upon him that smote them, but shall stay upon the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, in truth. The remnant shall return, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God." Clearly our Lord is describing the time when the controversy of Sion shall be settled, and if you just look at what he says in the chapter we have read, you will see this. Inasmuch as ye did it, or did it not, to one of these my brethren, who are described as sick, imprisoned, as hungered, as athirst, as naked, and as deeply afflicted, ye have done it, or not done it, unto me. He is speaking of his Jewish brethren, the remnant of Israel that have turned to the Lord, and that have dared to refuse to worship the Antichrist. The enemies of God on the one hand, and the persecuted Jews on the other, are obviously referred to in the seventy-ninth and one hundred and second Psalms. "Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the revenging of the blood of thy servants which is shed. Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of thy power preserve thou those that are appointed to die."—Psa. lxxix. 10, 11. "For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth; to hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death; to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem; when the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the Lord."—Psa. cii. 19–22.

Now then we have the triumph of Antichrist, and the picture of the small, faithful, remnant who refuse to worship him and receive his mark on their foreheads; we see many in dungeons, "appointed to die." The mandate has gone forth from the cruel king, that no one shall relieve them under penalty of death; but Christ says to the righteous, "You have relieved those who were in prison, your suffering, tortured brethren, and now I have heard the sighing of the prisoner, and have come to deliver him." This is the time described in Rev. vi. 16, 17, when the panic-stricken foes of the Lord shall call to the mountains and rocks, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"

Christ has come to open the prison-houses of Judea, and other parts of the world over which the blaspheming Antichrist has had power, and he deals with nations, the representatives of the world who shall be present at that time; he calls them before him, and he deals with them as the Shepherd King of Israel, who has come to his throne. He sets the sheep on his right hand, and the goats on his left.

II. Now we come to the sentence. The language is distinctly Jewish, and refers to matters which the Lord's hearers would easily understand. Christ does not speak about the church to these Jews, because at that time it did not exist, and they would not have understood him. Look at Isaiah lxvi. 15, 16: "For behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Passing over the next few verses, read the twenty-fourth: "And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Go a little further, down to Malachi, and we see the effect of fire upon these impious men: "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts."—Mal. iv. 1, 3. There is no mention of "resurrection." It is manifestly the judgment of the living.

III. The place of execution. "When the Lord comes and sits upon his glorious throne, he will gather all nations before him." If you take the great men and the chief captains who shall be there by order of the Antichrist, you have the representatives of the heathens. The time for that judgment may be very brief, but if you like to prolong the thought, you may well imagine that the nations are shortening the period that will elapse, that telegraphs and railroads are hastening the time when the true king of humanity shall be on his throne, and put down all evil. You will not understand this subject unless you believe in Jesus Christ as king sitting upon his throne of glory. From the Mount of Olives, where he is to appear, on his left (to the south of Jerusalem) stretches a long valley, the valley of the Son of Hinnom. The god of the Ammonites (named Molech) was worshipped in that valley of the Son of Hinnom. Now, God had strictly forbidden the Israelites to pass their children through the fire to Molech, but they did it frequently, notwithstanding. Solomon had built a temple to Molech, to please his heathen wives. In a part of the valley of the Son of Hinnom, the prophet locates Tophet, which comes from Toph, meaning a drum, a drum being beaten to prevent the screams of the children from being heard, whilst they were being branded. Amon, Manassah's son, was equally wicked, but his grandson, Josiah, worshipped God. Search the book of Kings, and you will find all this, for I go by my brief. Josiah defiled the valley of Tophet, to prevent the horrid rites of Molech.

When the Lord comes, his adversaries will be consumed, and, as if to put the everlasting brand of infamy on the wickedness of men who sacrificed to the horrible god Molech, the spot on which they did so is selected as the place of execution, where the enemies of the great King, who are found in open rebellion against him at his coming, will be destroyed by fire. The scene of condemnation is close by the future capital of the whole world. The place of execution is this valley of the Son of Hinnom. I give you this rapid sketch to show that this scene relates to the living wicked at the time of the Lord's visible revelation, and not to men raised from the dead.—Prophetic Times.

IS GOD TO BE BLAMED.

[The following article is from the "New York Herald" of May 3.]

ATTRIBUTING HORRIBLE DEEDS TO PROVIDENCE.

CONSPICUOUS amidst the ten columns of church reports published in the "Herald" of yesterday, were the sermons devoted to a consideration of the recent calamity in Richmond. It is a weakness of clergymen to attribute to providential agency, as either directly or indirectly manifested, the most horrible of deeds. In this particular case we find the Rev. Mr. Hepworth gravely asserting that "there was a God in it; it was no blind accident." Rev. Mr. Smythe, discoursing on the same subject, held that homes were made desolate and hearts cruelly wrung because of political injustice, which was true enough; but he followed up these ideas by indirectly expressing the conviction that the accident was due to a special visitation of Providence. In Washington the Rev. Mr. Barry, after declaring that "God moved in a mysterious way," applied this quotation from the hymn to the disaster, by saying that "the Richmond catastrophy and similar calamities only illustrate the fact of God's providence. Such things are not the work of chance." We could quote from several other sermons to show that all the preachers were of one mind; but these will suffice for our purpose.

Now, with all due respect to the clergymen, we must differ with them in their conclusions. The Richmond accident was due to purely natural causes, or, rather, to the disobedience of laws laid down by nature. We cannot see wherein the Lord had anything to do with the giving way of the floor. Ignorant architects, and not Providence, are responsible for the killing and maiming of nearly two hundred persons. There was not, and is not, the slightest evidence of the supernatural having been concerned in the disaster. Certain pillars, which had supported the floor had been injudiciously removed, thereby weakening the power of the beam to support a heavy weight. For the first time probably since the alterations were made, the court room was densely crowded. As a natural consequence, the laws of gravitation asserted themselves; the girder gave way, and the mass of human beings was precipitated to the floor beneath to meet death or wounds. Here we have a clear simple statement of the affair. Nowhere in it can we see the hand of Providence. Nothing occurred which can not be accounted for on purely natural grounds.

If we are to agree with the preachers that the Almighty deliberately cut off from earth some sixty persons, mangled the bodies of more than one hundred others, brought misery and penury to many domestic circles and plunged an entire community in mourning, why should we not hold Him responsible for the commission of every frightful act? Shall we hold that when one man murders another the hand of Providence is apparent in the deed? Are all the horrible and nameless crimes almost daily committed, the work of God? If they are, then nothing is left for Satan to do. Certainly when we reflect that the victims of the Richmond disaster were not more sinful than the majority of men, it seems very much as if the King of evil had more to do with it, than the God of mercy and righteousness. One's faith in the divine truths of Christianity, would be much shaken if the belief could find lodgment in the mind that to the direct agency of Providence is due all, or a great part, of human woe and misery. No; mysterious as are God's ways, they do not manifest themselves in such horrors as that which occurred at Richmond last week. The Infinite mind seeks not thus to impress its power upon sinful humanity, and we must, therefore, dissent from the views of those clergymen who argue that it does. And more; in leaving this subject we must give expression to the profound conviction that one of the great reasons for the widespread skepticism of the age is to be found in clergymen preaching from the pulpit, the doctrine of providential agency in the most repulsive occurrences. By this teaching, Christianity is divested of its most beautiful features, and God himself is represented as the very incarnation of cruelty and revenge.

CHRISTIANITY VS. RELIGION.

THE common fusion of the terms Christianity and religion leads to many erroneous impressions, and the many attempts in these days to palm off barren religion for Christianity have caused much reproach to be heaped upon the cause of Christ. Christianity is one thing and religion is another. The Pagans have a religion, the Mohammedans have a religion, the Jews have a religion; yet any one can see the absurdity of calling any one of these Christianity. True, we have what is called the Christian religion; but it not unfrequently occurs that those of its professors who are the most religious seem to realize and manifest the least Christianity. The disposition of multitudes to reject Jesus and his free gift of eternal life, on account of the glaring inconsistencies in the legion of modern religions, has induced us to endeavor to point out a few of the contrasting characteristics of Christianity and religion.

Religion rejected, persecuted and crucified the Saviour of the world; Christianity "forsook all and followed him." Religion boasts of divers leaders, faiths, and baptisms; Christianity says "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Religion impelled Saul of Tarsus to persecute the church of God "beyond measure, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against them;" but Christianity led the same Saul (Paul) to glory in being accounted worthy to undergo the same persecutions. Religion often sits down in despair and looking backward for relief, sighs—

"Where is the blessedness I knew,
When first I saw the Lord."

Christianity "grows in grace daily and in the knowledge of the Lord"—"forgetting the things that are behind," it "pushes on toward the mark for the prize." Religion is always complaining of being tempted by the devil to sin. Christianity says, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you; one is tempted when by his own lusts he is drawn away and enticed." As to the follies and vanities and allurements of the world, religion is generally lenient, and sometimes exceedingly accommodating—allowing some of the "branches" whose creeds are easy, to indulge in the theatre and ball-room, while others a little more religious are provided with substitutes for these luxuries, whereby the same propensities are gratified. To all these things Christianity says, "They that are Christ's have crucified the world, with the flesh and the lusts." Religion is particularly fond of forms and ceremonies, and is ever tenacious about the "traditions of the elders;" Christianity replies, "Why do ye make void the word of God for the sake of your traditions"—"The law of ordinances was nailed to the cross." Religion says to the man of the world, Come, patronize my festivities, try your luck at my innocent games, give me thy money, that I may build a finer church, to enable this or that denomination to successfully compete with the others. Christianity says to the same man, "Son give me thy heart—take of the water of life freely, without money and without price."

The contrast might be truthfully carried to a much greater length, but we feel confident that enough has been said to convince any thinking mind that the appalling worldliness of modern religion is not chargeable to Christianity.—The Nazarene.

PREPARATION FOR THE LAST DAYS.

THE man who has to cross a wide heath when the blast of winter blows in his face, will not have his garments hanging loose as though he were in July fields; he will button his coat around him and grasp his staff firmly. There is no lounging among sailors when the sea and sky are mingled in a blinding storm, and the lamps overhead lost in thick darkness. By the voice of authority, by the sense of duty, by the fear of danger, all are quickened into almost superhuman activity; and the provident skill of man gives battle to the fury of the elements. Now, though the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light, yet surely the latter will begin to make some preparation for the dreadful days which are coming. It connot be denied that it is the period of disintegration. The millions are drifting away from old mooring into unknown seas. Old races and institutions, old thrones, altars, and creeds are caught like chaff in a whirlwind, or blown about like autumn leaves. What a din there is with Secularism, and Spiritualism, Mormonism, and Positivism, Ritualism, and Rationalism; and how earnestly any man with reverence in his soul desires to escape from the turbulence of all the isms into some quiet wilderness where he may hear the whisper of God. The bishops of a worn-out superstition have gathered together in the "eternal city" to decree the infallibility of a poor old man, and the Assumption of the Virgin; while apostles of an insurgent science are seeking in council for an ape ancestry and a universe without a God. It is hard to say which party has drunk most fully the mingled wine of confusion and astonishment. But there are myriads who care no more for Comte and Huxley than for Manning and Antonelli; and with them it is the roar of animalism in all the gates. Race-courses, taverns, hells, gambling-houses, theatres, concerts, all present their coarse attractions; and the masses swarm on, seeking to drink from broken cisterns or from wells of poison and death.

Is there any thing certain? Is the whole country barren from Dan to Beersheba? Have we ourselves received a cunningly-devised fable? Are the ancient fountains of inspiration all dry?

Can we stand anywhere without the ground shaking under our feet? It is high time to inquire. The writer of this article can assure the reader that he is disposed by constitution to Rationalism a long way north, and if found in the House of Faith it is purely through the force of evidence.

As it appears to me, there is immense power in the message which professes to come from God in the Christian documents, truth authentic in the testimony, independently of any external seals. "No man hath seen God at any time, the only-begotten Son from the bosom of the Father he hath revealed him." "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die." "The word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." "Declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." "Herein is love, not that we loved God but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." "Then shall be brought to pass the saying which is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be unto God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

What words of power we have here, and what a story of wonder is indicated! God descending for human recovery; Christ the sinless one dying for the guilty: Christ the dead one shaking the house of death, and bringing immortality to light! "God commendeth his love to us;" it is infinite love; the deep sea of life has neither bottom no shore—in power it is awful, in wisdom profound and fathomless. As to the mystery of it, which frightens some poor icebergs in human shape, how can we escape if we wished from that element? We swim in it like the fish in water; and if we ever make our escape from the sweet and solemn mysteries of faith it is only by getting into the deeps of Satan. The fact is that men must keep hold of the supernatural world, and if they lose their hold on the divine side they seize with eagerness the infernal. It is not the actual transformation of God into humanity, for that would be impossible; nor does it involve the transformation of man into divinity, which is equally impossible; but it is the Word incarnate. The divine nature takes the human into incorporate alliance, so that the Man Christ Jesus has dwelling in him all the pleroma, all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; revealing in and through the human vehicle all the perfections of the divine nature. The Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, the new and better leader and commander of the people, rays forth the glory of God in the form and fashion of a man. In his transcendent exhibition of the sinless and Godlike life there is matchless quickening force, which has been amply proved in the records of Christian life during eighteen hundred years. The Almightiness of power runs in fountains of love; the fathomless wisdom comes out in sweetest simplicity; the unsullied holiness and purity is never austere, but as richly human as any thing could be descended from above. The final scenes of his death and resurrection have a grandeur all their own. The one who sweated in the garden till the drops fell like blood, and cried through the darkness that veiled his agonies as though he were forsaken, was more than a martyr, was doing a work of solemn significance, which the character of God and the need of humanity equally demanded. He made his soul an offering for sin, by himself he purged our sins and then sat down on the right hand of God. He could have no companionship in that mysterious expiation. The solitary sufferer, though his bones were not broken, had his heart broken by reproach; but there never was love like his love in earnestness and self-sacrifice. No chronicles contain any thing like unto it in measure or glory, in fulness of infinity. One died for all when all were dead, and he who might have poured upon us the red rain of penal fire washed our sins away in his sacrificial blood. The one who was lifted up on the cross lifts the world along with him. Though covered by the waves of horror, and sunk in deep mire where there was no standing, he emerges again with rescued humanity, and is our glorious High Priest in the present and in the future.

The power of his resurrection is great, not merely as a proof of his accepted sacrifice, but as the revelation of the eternal for man, as the demonstration of another and a better life. Now, the resurrection of Christ from the dead is a historical verity, a fact as well established as any fact can be which we have not witnessed with our own eyes. It has under it, and around it, great massive columns of evidence; and is surely the field where the war with unbelief must be prosecuted, so long as we confine ourselves to ground purely historical.

But what I wanted to remark when I began to glance at foundation-facts was simply this: man never could have invented such a story. God revealed in human form for the redemption of a fallen race, Christ slain in sacrifice for human transgression, Christ raised from the dead as the revelation of a certain future, Christ exalted at God's right hand as Prince and Saviour, Christ coming back in power to wind up all the mysteries of existence, and found through resurrection the everlasting Kingdom of Righteousness and Glory. This is nothing like stories of human manufacture. Such men as Homer and Shakespeare can tell us fine things, but they work with the material of humanities in history. They simply put the life of genius into old records. Such men as Dante and Milton can tell us still deeper stories in other domains, but they have divine traditions to operate upon, and that which they originate themselves is frequently outrageous and revolting; but this great history is unique. In its supernaturalism, and in its humanism, in its transcendence, in its coherence, in its grandeur and in its simplicity, in its power and in its love, it stands alone. In fact, we speak soberly when we declare that it is from God and of his eternity, and that his essential light burns in it from root to blossom, shines in the temple from cope to basement. We may speak then of Christianity as we do of nature, only with more perfect assurance. The great visible house which we inhabit in the flesh may sometimes be shaken by storm, temporarily deformed and darkened by tempest and eclipse; but after all it is a rock-bound world, finely lighted by lamps ethereal, and full of sculpture and painting of no finite workmanship. In the view of the whole reality from the roof of fire to the granite foundations—while sea and forest, field and river, and mountain, shine out before us in beauty and profusion, we may fairly say that the devil never planned or lighted the building; that it came not from any infernal god, but from the same God who gave unto man his being and his work, his nature and his service. We argue from the correspondence between man and his house, a common and glorious origin from one Lord God Almighty. The house is adapted to man in his material-

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier, in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

ism, and in his idealism; soil, rivers, and atmosphere, solid rocks, and hoary forests, and living fields supplying all that he needs for sustenance and enjoyment while he remains under the conditions of time and flesh. Nor is the place mere house of residence, granary and workshop, but it partakes of the temple: a mystical charm is through all, and over all its departments, and nature speaks in motherly tenderness to all who live worshipfully and seek for close communion.

We reason in like manner concerning Christianity. The correspondence between man as a spirit—that is, man in his mortal nature—and Christianity, though not more real is certainly more glorious. That which promises him the forgiveness of all past sin, the regeneration of his nature, the peace of God in the seal and witness of the Holy Spirit, deliverance from the dominion of death, immortal youth and blessedness in a kingdom of surpassing glory—so profoundly corresponds with his actual wants and capabilities, that his soul responds to the truth and divinity of the message. No hostile power could, or would have sent such tidings; and they are above all that man could have dreamed in his alien condition.

But in view of the gathering darkness and confusion of the last days, when faith will be sorely tried by the prevalence of false miracles, debauching pomps, atheistic philosophies, and general ungodliness—and when there may be expected many shipwrecks upon desolate and Godless shores—there is one matter which I desire to emphasize. The kind of evidence which I have before me was indicated by our Lord when he said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Coleridge, though he poured too much contempt on the miracles and on all external evidence, was in substance right when he said, "Christianity is a life and a living system, try it." We might say to the poor creature who has tried many fields and springs where life was said to reign—and is bankrupt and miserable—try this! You have been in barren fields and at broken cisterns—or in pastures of poison and by rivers of death; try this; if it fail, it will only be another failure. But there never was a man who found it fail—or his experience would be indeed awful.

We cannot all be ripe scholars, not many of us have philosophic power, or logical sharpness; few of us are skilled in balancing historical probabilities. But here is a region in which the mechanic and the peasant, without recondite knowledge or rich culture, may have the most conclusive and indestructible evidence. Faith is grand and powerful, but knowledge is deeper in assurance. "He shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." The three thousand at Pentecost who heard the tongues and beheld the flame-like radiance, firmly believed. The Ethiopian nobleman, who heard the gospel in his chariot, received it with confident faith. The Samaritans, when they heard of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus, and beheld the healing power and the casting out of demons, received the truth in cordial reliance. Cornelius and his friends were convinced that the tidings were from God. But none of these parties, in that stage, knew that the system was from God. Knowledge is the ripe fruit which grows after we have been planted in the celestial soil, the gradual growth of rich experience gleaned from trial. As we do his will, and advance in the knowledge of his ways, we discover in the depths of consciousness that the promises and consolations of God are all realities, and that, in comparison, all other things are shadows. The assurance of divinity in the Christian religion becomes regnant and living, throned in the head, beating in the heart—heaving in all the tides, and throbbing in all the pulses of our nature.

It is then of prime importance that we should cultivate that loving obedience, which is the condition of insight and the spring of divine knowledge. We all need deeper fellowship, closer, more abiding communion with the living God, and as we seek it in paths of obedience and self-sacrifice, the sunshine of his countenance will be continually with us, and we shall hear in spirit those overshadowing wings of the Eternal One, which are our only security. We shall have in more fulness—the manifestation of the Son—the power of the Spirit—the presence and glory of the Father. And so we shall be preserved unto that kingdom which is reserved for the resurrection of the just, where all our loftiest desires and hopes shall be more than realized. We may see approaching the transfigured earth, where Paradise blooms again—the metropolitan city with its golden streets and river of life. But the promised glories are all for a prepared people—beautiful in holiness, strong in spiritual might, profound in devotion, tremulous with love—such are the sons of light who are lifted with desire, looking for and hasting unto the day of his appearing, and so in readiness for translation.—The Rainbow.

Bones and Meat.

Rev. John Newton once made a visit to a very distinguished preacher in London. The man had a great reputation as a dialectic teacher, and Newton heard him in the multitude of his distinctions so logically and analytically laid down. When the discourse was finished the preacher came to him, shook him cordially by the hand, and said,—

"Well Mr. Newton, how did you like the distinctions that I made?"

"Why, sir, I liked them very well; but I perceive that you forgot one main one that lies at the bottom of them all."

"Pray, sir, what was that?"

"Why, sir, the distinction between bones and meat!"

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 1, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Wicked Dead."

The tract on this subject, numbered 18 in our "Campaign Documents," we expect will be ready next week. Price 2 cents per copy; postage to be added, which will be two cents on seven copies.

John v. 28, 29.

This text is the stronghold of believers in a universal resurrection. We have always admitted the difficulty of harmonizing it with the non-living of the wicked dead, and therefore sympathize with honest inquirers after truth who find a difficulty with our views on account of this text. One text however, cannot rule against the general tenor of the Scriptures. If a construction can be given the text that harmonizes with the known perfections of God and the general scope of the subject in hand we are bound to accept it notwithstanding it conflicts with "the traditions" of men.

Any one must be struck with the fact that our Lord's language, John v. 28, 29, seems to have been based on Ezek. xxxvii., as his language Mark ix. 44, is based on Isa. lxvi. 24. In John v., our Lord had been speaking of himself as God's appointed Messenger to give life and to execute judgment; and affirmed that he had power to quicken whom he would; and he tells his hearers, "The hour now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; for the Father hath given to the Son to have life in himself; hence, He can make alive whom He will: and the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." The works Christ wrought in quickening many dead in sins, and raising to life literally dead persons, during his personal ministry, would be evidence that his claim of having power to quicken whom He would, and of executing judgment on all, was a true claim. As He was addressing the Jews, who were seeking to kill him (verse 18), He goes on to tell them, it was himself the Father had given power to do what is plainly declared in Ezk. xxxvii., God would do, viz., "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and I will put My Spirit in you, and ye shall live," etc.

Whatever this resurrection is—whether national, spiritual, or literal—it is perfectly clear, it is the very same Jesus speaks of, John v. 28, 29. If one is national, so is the other; if one is spiritual, so is the other; if one is literal, so is the other. If any choose to say it is literal, then none but God's "people" are made alive; none others are embraced in Ezekiel's prophecy; and none others received life in our Lord's enunciation in John v. We repeat, the two scenes are evidently identical. The Jews certainly understood the fulfilment of Ezekiel's prophecy to be future when Jesus spoke in their hearing. John v. 28, 29. To us, it is evident, it was Exekiel's vision he referred to, and claimed that He would fulfil it. He tells them not to marvel at his statements that God had given him life in himself, authority to execute judgment, and to quicken whom he will, etc., for the hour was coming in which that still more wonderful prophecy of Ezekiel should be fulfilled, and He would open the graves of God's "people" and bring them "to the resurrection of life;" while at the same time the doers of evil (like themselves, who sought to kill him) at this resurrection should be noticed only to condemn them. Condemn them to what? Not to see life. John iii. 36. Thus our Lord and Ezekiel harmonize; one throws light on the other, and neither, says a word of any life to the wicked, but both make the life bestowed as the portion of God's people only. The text John v. 28, 29, when compared with other Scripture, and explained in harmony with it, gives no support to the idea of any life from the dead, except to such as God emphatically calls, "O my people." If we would live again, after death, we must have that characteristic; then—and not without—shall we be children of the resurrection, and thereby be constituted permanently and eternally the children of God, and be as the angels of God in heaven.

Hasten, O sinner, to Christ the Life-giver; and rest not till the Spirit of him who raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, and you are under its sanctifying power evermore; so shall you come to the resurrection of life or be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, and mortality be swallowed up of life. Let none of us rest in a mere doctrinal acceptance of the truth, but earnestly seek for the experience and power of the truth on our hearts and lives.

Dying Twice: Is it a Bible Doctrine?

All men are equally subject to the first, or Adamic death, regardless of what they have done or can do; hence to receive the wages of personal sins there must be a temporary life from the dead for the wicked, in order that they may suffer the wages of sin by dying a second time.

Such is the strong argument of the advocates of future misery for the wicked. They seem to overlook the clear distinction of death as a penalty, and death as a disciplinary administration. They also combine the idea of suffering with death, as if that, and not death itself, were the penalty; or, at least, they think suffering is an essential part of it. Both of these positions we regard as erroneous.

1. No man dies the death to which Adam was subjected, except for his own personal sins. Adam's death was a penal infliction: that is, it was the penalty of the law under which he was placed; which law made no provision for deliverance from death's power. None of his posterity were ever under the penalty of such a law, unless they became so by their own personal act. They were "made subject to vanity"—or, to a life brief in duration, ending in death—"not willingly"—or, not for personal sins, but as a part of a system of discipline to which God subjected Adam's posterity, making their trial one of more severity than Adam's, and their deliverance from death possible. Hence the "subjection was made in hope." In this subjection to suffering and death all Adam's descendants participate: but only those of them "which have the first fruits of the Spirit" ever will have the hope realized, or receive "the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." That is the hope of the gospel: it is deliverance from death, or from "vanity." Whoever is delivered from this, is "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." All others remain under the bondage of corruption for their own personal sins in not improving their day of discipline: their sins were not remitted, and they reap eternal bondage to corruption, or death.

2. The idea that suffering must be combined with death to make the penalty complete, we regard as a pure assumption, entirely without foundation in the Bible, and as the offspring of the eternal misery theory. No reason can be assigned for the temporary revival to life of the wicked dead, to torment and kill again, which is not just as good for eternal torment. Both are without any manifest object to Adam's race. Each system demands torment—so far as any reason appears—without any design of benefitting the saved or lost. Beside this, suffering is no expressed part of the penalty for sin. "The wages of sin is death."

That the law given Israel, under the Mosaic dispensation, threatened sufferings and tribulations of various kinds and degrees, is admitted: but not a word in that law extended those sufferings beyond this life. There is not a word therein of a life after death to a wicked man, or suffering in a life beyond the present.

3. Let it be distinctly marked, then, that dying a second time is no expressed penalty of any law God has ever placed man under, either Adam or his posterity. There was one trial for Adam, and but one, so far as revelation is our guide. His posterity have but one trial; but theirs is far more severe than his; yet this is in mercy to them; for though subjected to death as a part of their disciplinary state—thus keeping them constantly in mind of what sin deserves—yet they were bid hope in a Deliverer, who should bring them up from death's dominion, if they would believe in him, or rely on him for such deliverance. Their reception or rejection of this promised Deliverer was that which should determine their final state, whether to be delivered from death or to have it confirmed on them as the penalty of incorrigible unbelief and sin. "This is the will of him that sent me," saith Jesus, "that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him!" Such is the utterance of eternal truth; and none will escape death's eternal dominion, who once come under it, if they have refused to accept Christ as their Life-giver: their one death is confirmed as penal, "at the last day," by the reliving of the righteous dead, while the wicked dead remain under the "condemnation" of death eternal, and do "not see life;" or, if alive at the last day, are "punished with everlasting destruction," and live no more.—See 2 Thess. i. 9. They do not die twice; but their death is irrevocable, and may therefore be called the second death, because subjected to death's eternal dominion for their personal sins, which were unremitted.

4. The phrase "second death," found only in the book of Revelation—a book of allegories—certainly does not prove that it is twice dying, for, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death." Death and hell were subjects of this death, but they did not die twice, nor die at all, except allegorically; that is, they were utterly abolished, or ceased to exist. Hence the "second death" is a phrase which signifies to cease to exist—to have no revival—and clearly does not mean twice dying. Beside, it was a phrase employed by the Israelites, as shown by several writers, where no such idea as twice dying can possibly be assigned to it; as for example: some of the Jewish writers speak of Adam, and say, "Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, and died the second death." And of the ten spies sent out by Joshua to spy out the land of Canaan, who brought back an evil report, it is said by a Jewish writer, "They died the second death before the Lord." Such a form of expression, therefore, is no proof of twice dying; but they did express by it that such persons "shall not enter into the world to come;" that is, their death was to be made "perpetual;" no recovery from it. Such we believe to be the true import of the phrase: they die through Adam; but that death is made perpetual by their own sin, and hence, by a figure, is called the second death: death is confirmed on them, and they live no more.

5. The text from Peter shows that "the Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished;" because he did it in the case of the antediluvians and in the case of Sodom; so that wicked men need not suppose they can escape the punishment God has proclaimed; but there is nothing in the language that indicates any dead ones are to be made alive for punishment, any more than that the dead antediluvians and Sodomites were to be made alive to share in the punishment for which Peter brings their case to show that the "mockers in the last times" cannot escape; for God has proved that he "knoweth how to reserve," or hold such sinners to the infliction of the punishment of the day of judgment with which this age is to wind up. "With all who are dead, the day of [the investigating] judgment [or, time of trial] is past;" but the executive, or declarative judgment is yet future, and will take place in the "twinkling of an eye at the last trump."

The Symbols of Rev. xx.

We may suggest that one thing is tolerably clear: Rev. xx. is a symbolical representation of the final triumph of the church of God, at some stage of its history, and of the complete overthrow of all its enemies, especially of all those earth-born governments which have been the chief instruments in persecuting the true church. Above all these dragonic powers the church is to rise, or have a resurrection; but whether this is all to be accomplished at one time, or at several, making two or more distinct periods of the triumph, we presume not to determine with certainty, nor is it essential that we should, so long as the symbols make the triumph certain, and finally complete, putting "down all rule, all authority and power" that opposes the supreme rule of Christ. See 1 Corth. xv. 24, 25. We think the whole structure of the symbols employed in Rev., from chap. xii. to the end, shows a mighty conflict of the church with wicked civil and ecclesiastical organizations, which tread her down, so that she is symbolically represented as dead. but finally, either in several divisions, or all at one time, she rises victorious over all these wicked organized bodies of her oppressors, and they are utterly and eternally destroyed.

The "Rich Tract."

As we stated, two weeks since, this tract is divided into two, for the present. One is headed "The Life Views. Questions by a Methodist preacher," etc. The other is entitled, "A Ministerial Attack: The Life Views the Mark."

Each one is 12 pages; and are sent singly or together, as may be desired. Fourteen of either, or seven of each, will be sent for 20 cts. which includes the postage. 70 of either, or 35 of each, for one dollar. About 1,000 of each have already gone on their mission, and another 1,000 of each are ready.

It may be well that they have been published separately, though costing something more, as they can thus be used with each denomination with more probability of being read. Please scatter them where they will do good, and as many and early as possible.

The Eternally Tormented only a Few.

The following charitable article we copy from "The Advance" of May 19. It will be recollected that we published an article from that paper in our issue of May 11, wherein it was more than intimated that the lost were few compared to the saved. We asked our Br. of "The Advance," if he admitted the lost to be a "small remnant?" and quoted our Lord's words, Matt. vii. 13, 14, of "many" lost and "few" saved. We do not know that "The Advance" intended its article as a reply to what we said, but it answers our inquiry, and we thank it for the information; it shows advance from the old theology, which gives promise and hope for the future of Congregationalism, in which we were educated, and with which we were connected till about 28 years old. We append Notes to the article from "The Advance."

THE NUMBER OF THE SAVED.

A correspondent calls in question our statement that the finally lost will be but a small remnant of the human race, and thinks that exactly the opposite idea is the one taught in Scripture, and generally accepted by Christians. As to the latter point, it is of small consequence compared to the former, and in past ages probably it has been the popular conception, and for various reasons has been encouraged by ecclesiastics, Romish and Protestant. But the Scripture no where asserts such a view of the results of human history. The idea has arisen from several mistaken sources. Some have held that all mankind, infants and adults, are born under a sentence of eternal damnation because of the sin of Adam, and that only those finally escape who embrace the gospel, if they are adults, or receive baptism if they are infants. As but a small part of mankind can be included in these two alternatives, it is inferred that the vast majority will be lost. But as we deny the abhorrent premises of that argument, we are not bound by the conclusion. (1.) Many mistakenly apply to the whole human race, the words used by Isaiah, and quoted by Paul concerning the Israelites at a particular time in their history, when God's judgments should come upon them: it was said that then "a remnant (only) shall be saved." But the most rely on the words of Christ, when a certain man, full of idle curiosity, inquired, "Are there few that be saved?" and, instead of having his curiosity gratified in the answer was pointed to the spiritual condition of men as Christ daily noticed them, in order that he might be led to anxiety for his own salvation: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many I say unto you will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." And this explains the similar language of Christ: "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction; and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be which find it." It is without warrant that any one applies these words, spoken of adults and of the disposition of those among whom Christ was laboring, to the whole human race from the birth of Adam to the judgment day.

There is thus no Scriptural proof of the theory that the mass of mankind will be finally lost. There is proof to the contrary. It begins with the earliest promise of a Saviour, when, at the time of the fall, it was said to the serpent in the garden, "It (the seed of the woman, the Messiah) shall bruise thy head." Christ is to conquer Satan. From the long and bitter conflict, He, who was "born of woman," is to come out victor. This necessarily implies, that, in the end, salvation shall far exceed ruin; that those saved through Christ shall immensely out number those destroyed by Satan. Else, on the reverse supposition, the victory would be with the tempter, and not with the Redeemer. (2.) It would have been a singular triumph of our government over the Confederacy, if, at the end of the struggle, Jefferson Davis had retained in rebellion the vast majority of the population of the Union! Christ will have no mere nominal victory over Satan. (3.) The same idea pervades the numerous Old Testament prophecies which, in varied forms, express the idea that the Messiah shall gloriously triumph over all his foes, putting them to rout and shame, and that He shall "see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." It is involved yet more plainly in the New Testament declarations that "where sin abounded, grace shall yet more abound," and that Christ shall prevail conspicuously before all worlds, over the devil and the kingdom of darkness. (4.)

Nor is it difficult to discern the facts which will substantiate this view. Our readers will not doubt the salvation of those who die in infancy and early childhood. But in granting this, the salvation of the majority of the human race is conceded; for more than half of all who are born die thus prematurely—a fact which lightens greatly the darkness of the past, and especially of the heathen world, where infant life so commonly goes to waste. (5.) Then even as to adults, the case as regards the world's history thus far is brighter than many picture it; because, by reason of the atonement made for all men, none are judged by a law of works, simply, but by a law of grace, which considers every soul according to its circumstances, and saves whatever has the smallest element of true penitence according to its measure of light as to holiness and sin. (6.) But the aspect changes rapidly and gloriously, when, under the guidance of prophecy, we look into the ultimate future of the earth, which in its holiness is to witness a reversal of present scenes. When the nations shall have been converted unto Christ, and the reclaimed earth shall teem with ten times its present population, and long ages shall roll on in purity, another face will be put on the moral history of man, and the destined results of redemption. What right has any one to judge from the mere beginnings of the divine system; from the era of preparation and of conflict? It is as though one should have judged of the results of American liberty in the midst of the late civil war, instead of thinking what they would be, one century or five centuries after its termination. (7.) The Bible takes no gloomy view of the human race as such. As a race it will be saved! The lost will be the exception and not the rule. Dr. Schaff well remarks in his additions to Lange on Romans, that, "from the great stress which Paul lays on the superabundance of grace, which greatly exceeds the evils of the fall, we have a right to infer that by far the greater part of the race will ultimately be saved." And Dr. Hodge, the personification of Puritan theology, than whom no one will be considered more orthodox, in his commentary on the same epistle uses this emphatic language: "We have reason to believe that the lost shall bear to the saved no greater proportion than the inmates of a prison do to the mass of the community." Such is our own faith, and we cannot consent to belie Scripture, to dim the glory of the Redeemer, or to play into the hands of adversaries who delight to malign orthodoxy, by teaching that the great mass of mankind for whom Christ died, will forever perish. The prison-convicts shall not outnumber the holy, nor the census of hell, exceed that of heaven. (8.)

Notes by Editor of Herald of Life.

1. We are glad to find our brother "denies the abhorrent premises;" and it gives us hope that, at some future day, he will equally abhor the doctrine of the eternal torture of any creature the Lord God hath made.

2. We are quite willing to let our Br. have his own way thus far, and will be glad to find he is correct. It certainly is a great advance from the old theology. We rather think, however, if "Christ is to conquer Satan," He will not leave that "enemy" alive, nor any who are "destroyed" by him. "The last enemy" to be "destroyed is death." Is the destruction of death, eternal torment? If not, how is it proved that the victims "destroyed by Satan" are thus disposed of? "The last enemy shall be destroyed," saith Paul, and that enemy is "death," he testifies, 1 Corth. xv. 26. If "the last enemy" is destroyed, viz., "death," surely no enemy is left, and "Him who had the power of death, that is, the devil," Paul saith, Christ will "destroy;" Heb. ii. 14; and "the last enemy" shares the same fate at the same time, or, rather, subsequently, because it is "the last enemy." That looks like a clean sweep, and leaves no subjects for eternal torture.

3. But, will not Christ have a "mere nominal victory," if His grand enemy survives with his multitude of victims, and there is to be an eternal vigilance to keep him and them in prison? If that enemy still lives, who knows but that, like "Jefferson Davis," he may one day be a good loyal subject? for, certainly the time will come, when "Every creature which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are therein" shall be "heard saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."—Rev. v. 13.

This looks as if "Satan" and "those destroyed by" him, if alive, were converted and reconciled to their "Conqueror," and were as peaceable and happy as "Jefferson Davis" now is, if not more so.

4. Very true. But if the language of Paul is to be taken in the absolute sense, then all sin must be abolished—because, "where sin abounded, grace shall yet more abound," so that "Christ shall prevail," to "destroy" sin: for, "He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning: for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii. 8. If the devil is to live eternally, and a large company of the human family with him are to keep sin alive where is the boasted "victory over Satan?" and is there not a failure in the mission of Christ to "destroy the works of the devil?"

Our Br has misquoted Paul's language in Rom. v. 20. He quotes it, "Where sin abounded grace shall yet more abound," making the event future; whereas, Paul puts it in the past, thus, "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." The text therefore does not prove more are to be saved than lost in the future, and does not apply to the case in hand, unless it proves universal salvation.

5. "The Advance" touches a tender point here. We have no objection to our Br. proving this position, if he can. He can only do

ism, and in his idealism; soil, rivers, and atmosphere, solid rocks, and hoary forests, and living fields supplying all that he needs for sustenance and enjoyment while he remains under the conditions of time and flesh. Nor is the place mere house of residence, granary and workshop, but it partakes of the temple: a mystical charm is through all, and over all its departments, and nature speaks in motherly tenderness to all who live worshipfully and seek for close communion.

We reason in like manner concerning Christianity. The correspondence between man as a spirit—that is, man in his mortal nature—and Christianity, though not more real is certainly more glorious. That which promises him the forgiveness of all past sin, the regeneration of his nature, the peace of God in the seal and witness of the Holy Spirit, deliverance from the dominion of death, immortal youth and blessedness in a kingdom of surpassing glory—so profoundly corresponds with his actual wants and capabilities, that his soul responds to the truth and divinity of the message. No hostile power could, or would have sent such tidings; and they are above all that man could have dreamed in his alien condition.

But in view of the gathering darkness and confusion of the last days, when faith will be sorely tried by the prevalence of false miracles, debauching pomps, atheistic philosophies, and general ungodliness—and when there may be expected many shipwrecks upon desolate and Godless shores—there is one matter which I desire to emphasize. The kind of evidence which I have before me was indicated by our Lord when he said, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." Coleridge, though he poured too much contempt on the miracles and on all external evidence, was in substance right when he said, "Christianity is a life and a living system, try it." We might say to the poor creature who has tried many fields and springs where life was said to reign—and is bankrupt and miserable—try this! You have been in barren fields and at broken cisterns—or in pastures of poison and by rivers of death; try this; if it fail, it will only be another failure. But there never was a man who found it fail—or his experience would be indeed awful.

We cannot all be ripe scholars, not many of us have philosophic power, or logical sharpness; few of us are skilled in balancing historical probabilities. But here is a region in which the mechanic and the peasant, without recondite knowledge or rich culture, may have the most conclusive and indestructible evidence. Faith is grand and powerful, but knowledge is deeper in assurance. "He shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." The three thousand at Pentecost who heard the tongues and beheld the flame-like radiance, firmly believed. The Ethiopian nobleman, who heard the gospel in his chariot, received it with confident faith. The Samaritans, when they heard of the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus, and beheld the healing power and the casting out of demons, received the truth in cordial reliance. Cornelius and his friends were convinced that the tidings were from God. But none of these parties, in that stage, knew that the system was from God. Knowledge is the ripe fruit which grows after we have been planted in the celestial soil, the gradual growth of rich experience gleaned from trial. As we do his will, and advance in the knowledge of his ways, we discover in the depths of consciousness that the promises and consolations of God are all realities, and that, in comparison, all other things are shadows. The assurance of divinity in the Christian religion becomes regnant and living, throned in the head, beating in the heart—heaving in all the tides, and throbbing in all the pulses of our nature.

It is then of prime importance that we should cultivate that loving obedience, which is the condition of insight and the spring of divine knowledge. We all need deeper fellowship, closer, more abiding communion with the living God, and as we seek it in paths of obedience and self-sacrifice, the sunshine of his countenance will be continually with us, and we shall hear in spirit those overshadowing wings of the Eternal One, which are our only security. We shall have in more fulness—the manifestation of the Son—the power of the Spirit—the presence and glory of the Father. And so we shall be preserved unto that kingdom which is reserved for the resurrection of the just, where all our loftiest desires and hopes shall be more than realized. We may see approaching the transfigured earth, where Paradise blooms again—the metropolitan city with its golden streets and river of life. But the promised glories are all for a prepared people—beautiful in holiness, strong in spiritual might, profound in devotion, tremulous with love—such are the sons of light who are lifted with desire, looking for and hasting unto the day of his appearing, and so in readiness for translation.—The Rainbow.

Bones and Meat.

Rev. John Newton once made a visit to a very distinguished preacher in London. The man had a great reputation as a dialectic teacher, and Newton heard him in the multitude of his distinctions so logically and analytically laid down. When the discourse was finished the preacher came to him, shook him cordially by the hand, and said,—

"Well Mr. Newton, how did you like the distinctions that I made?"

"Why, sir, I liked them very well; but I perceive that you forgot one main one that lies at the bottom of them all."

"Pray, sir, what was that?"

"Why, sir, the distinction between bones and meat!"

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 1, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Wicked Dead."

The tract on this subject, numbered 18 in our "Campaign Documents," we expect will be ready next week. Price 2 cents per copy; postage to be added, which will be two cents on seven copies.

John v. 28, 29.

This text is the stronghold of believers in a universal resurrection. We have always admitted the difficulty of harmonizing it with the non-living of the wicked dead, and therefore sympathize with honest inquirers after truth who find a difficulty with our views on account of this text. One text however, cannot rule against the general tenor of the Scriptures. If a construction can be given the text that harmonizes with the known perfections of God and the general scope of the subject in hand we are bound to accept it notwithstanding it conflicts with "the traditions" of men.

Any one must be struck with the fact that our Lord's language, John v. 28, 29, seems to have been based on Ezek. xxxvii., as his language Mark ix. 44, is based on Isa. lxvi. 24. In John v., our Lord had been speaking of himself as God's appointed Messenger to give life and to execute judgment; and affirmed that he had power to quicken whom he would; and he tells his hearers, "The hour now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; for the Father hath given to the Son to have life in himself; hence, He can make alive whom He will: and the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." The works Christ wrought in quickening many dead in sins, and raising to life literally dead persons, during his personal ministry, would be evidence that his claim of having power to quicken whom He would, and of executing judgment on all, was a true claim. As He was addressing the Jews, who were seeking to kill him (verse 18), He goes on to tell them, it was himself the Father had given power to do what is plainly declared in Ezk. xxxvii., God would do, viz., "Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and I will put My Spirit in you, and ye shall live," etc.

Whatever this resurrection is—whether national, spiritual, or literal—it is perfectly clear, it is the very same Jesus speaks of, John v. 28, 29. If one is national, so is the other; if one is spiritual, so is the other; if one is literal, so is the other. If any choose to say it is literal, then none but God's "people" are made alive; none others are embraced in Ezekiel's prophecy; and none others received life in our Lord's enunciation in John v. We repeat, the two scenes are evidently identical. The Jews certainly understood the fulfilment of Ezekiel's prophecy to be future when Jesus spoke in their hearing, John v. 28, 29. To us, it is evident, it was Exekiel's vision he referred to, and claimed that He would fulfil it. He tells them not to marvel at his statements that God had given him life in himself, authority to execute judgment, and to quicken whom he will, etc., for the hour was coming in which that still more wonderful prophecy of Ezekiel should be fulfilled, and He would open the graves of God's "people" and bring them "to the resurrection of life;" while at the same time the doers of evil (like themselves, who sought to kill him) at this resurrection should be noticed only to condemn them. Condemn them to what? Not to see life. John iii. 36. Thus our Lord and Ezekiel harmonize; one throws light on the other, and neither, says a word of any life to the wicked, but both make the life bestowed as the portion of God's people only. The text John v. 28, 29, when compared with other Scripture, and explained in harmony with it, gives no support to the idea of any life from the dead, except to such as God emphatically calls, "O my people." If we would live again, after death, we must have that characteristic; then—and not without—shall we be children of the resurrection, and thereby be constituted permanently and eternally the children of God, and be as the angels of God in heaven.

Hasten, O sinner, to Christ the Life-giver; and rest not till the Spirit of him who raised up Christ from the dead dwell in you, and you are under its sanctifying power evermore; so shall you come to the resurrection of life or be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, and mortality be swallowed up of life. Let none of us rest in a mere doctrinal acceptance of the truth, but earnestly seek for the experience and power of the truth on our hearts and lives.

Dying Twice: Is it a Bible Doctrine?

All men are equally subject to the first, or Adamic death, regardless of what they have done or can do; hence to receive the wages of personal sins there must be a temporary life from the dead for the wicked, in order that they may suffer the wages of sin by dying a second time.

Such is the strong argument of the advocates of future misery for the wicked. They seem to overlook the clear distinction of death as a penalty, and death as a disciplinary administration. They also combine the idea of suffering with death, as if that, and not death itself, were the penalty; or, at least, they think suffering is an essential part of it. Both of these positions we regard as erroneous.

1. No man dies the death to which Adam was subjected, except for his own personal sins. Adam's death was a penal infliction: that is, it was the penalty of the law under which he was placed; which law made no provision for deliverance from death's power. None of his posterity were ever under the penalty of such a law, unless they became so by their own personal act. They were "made subject to vanity"—or, to a life brief in duration, ending in death—"not willingly"—or, not for personal sins, but as a part of a system of discipline to which God subjected Adam's posterity, making their trial one of more severity than Adam's, and their deliverance from death possible. Hence the "subjection was made in hope." In this subjection to suffering and death all Adam's descendants participate: but only those of them "which have the first fruits of the Spirit" ever will have the hope realized, or receive "the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." That is the hope of the gospel: it is deliverance from death, or from "vanity." Whoever is delivered from this, is "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." All others remain under the bondage of corruption for their own personal sins in not improving their day of discipline: their sins were not remitted, and they reap eternal bondage to corruption, or death.

2. The idea that suffering must be combined with death to make the penalty complete, we regard as a pure assumption, entirely without foundation in the Bible, and as the offspring of the eternal misery theory. No reason can be assigned for the temporary revival to life of the wicked dead, to torment and kill again, which is not just as good for eternal torment. Both are without any manifest object to Adam's race. Each system demands torment—so far as any reason appears—without any design of benefitting the saved or lost. Beside this, suffering is no expressed part of the penalty for sin. "The wages of sin is death."

That the law given Israel, under the Mosaic dispensation, threatened sufferings and tribulations of various kinds and degrees, is admitted: but not a word in that law extended those sufferings beyond this life. There is not a word therein of a life after death to a wicked man, or suffering in a life beyond the present.

3. Let it be distinctly marked, then, that dying a second time is no expressed penalty of any law God has ever placed man under, either Adam or his posterity. There was one trial for Adam, and but one, so far as revelation is our guide. His posterity have but one trial; but theirs is far more severe than his; yet this is in mercy to them; for though subjected to death as a part of their disciplinary state—thus keeping them constantly in mind of what sin deserves—yet they were bid hope in a Deliverer, who should bring them up from death's dominion, if they would believe in him, or rely on him for such deliverance. Their reception or rejection of this promised Deliverer was that which should determine their final state, whether to be delivered from death or to have it confirmed on them as the penalty of incorrigible unbelief and sin. "This is the will of him that sent me," saith Jesus, "that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him!" Such is the utterance of eternal truth; and none will escape death's eternal dominion, who once come under it, if they have refused to accept Christ as their Life-giver: their one death is confirmed as penal, "at the last day," by the reliving of the righteous dead, while the wicked dead remain under the "condemnation" of death eternal, and do "not see life;" or, if alive at the last day, are "punished with everlasting destruction," and live no more.—See 2 Thess. i. 9. They do not die twice; but their death is irrevocable, and may therefore be called the second death, because subjected to death's eternal dominion for their personal sins, which were unremitted.

4. The phrase "second death," found only in the book of Revelation—a book of allegories—certainly does not prove that it is twice dying, for, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death." Death and hell were subjects of this death, but they did not die twice, nor die at all, except allegorically; that is, they were utterly abolished, or ceased to exist. Hence the "second death" is a phrase which signifies to cease to exist—to have no revival—and clearly does not mean twice dying. Beside, it was a phrase employed by the Israelites, as shown by several writers, where no such idea as twice dying can possibly be assigned to it; as for example: some of the Jewish writers speak of Adam, and say, "Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, and died the second death." And of the ten spies sent out by Joshua to spy out the land of Canaan, who brought back an evil report, it is said by a Jewish writer, "They died the second death before the Lord." Such a form of expression, therefore, is no proof of twice dying; but they did express by it that such persons "shall not enter into the world to come;" that is, their death was to be made "perpetual;" no recovery from it. Such we believe to be the true import of the phrase: they die through Adam; but that death is made perpetual by their own sin, and hence, by a figure, is called the second death: death is confirmed on them, and they live no more.

5. The text from Peter shows that "the Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished;" because he did it in the case of the antediluvians and in the case of Sodom; so that wicked men need not suppose they can escape the punishment God has proclaimed; but there is nothing in the language that indicates any dead ones are to be made alive for punishment, any more than that the dead antediluvians and Sodomites were to be made alive to share in the punishment for which Peter brings their case to show that the "mockers in the last times" cannot escape; for God has proved that he "knoweth how to reserve," or hold such sinners to the infliction of the punishment of the day of judgment with which this age is to wind up. "With all who are dead, the day of [the investigating] judgment [or, time of trial] is past;" but the executive, or declarative judgment is yet future, and will take place in the "twinkling of an eye at the last trump."

The Symbols of Rev. xx.

We may suggest that one thing is tolerably clear: Rev. xx. is a symbolical representation of the final triumph of the church of God, at some stage of its history, and of the complete overthrow of all its enemies, especially of all those earth-born governments which have been the chief instruments in persecuting the true church. Above all these dragonic powers the church is to rise, or have a resurrection; but whether this is all to be accomplished at one time, or at several, making two or more distinct periods of the triumph, we presume not to determine with certainty, nor is it essential that we should, so long as the symbols make the triumph certain, and finally complete, putting "down all rule, all authority and power" that opposes the supreme rule of Christ. See 1 Corth. xv. 24, 25. We think the whole structure of the symbols employed in Rev., from chap. xii. to the end, shows a mighty conflict of the church with wicked civil and ecclesiastical organizations, which tread her down, so that she is symbolically represented as dead: but finally, either in several divisions, or all at one time, she rises victorious over all these wicked organized bodies of her oppressors, and they are utterly and eternally destroyed.

The "Rich Tract."

As we stated, two weeks since, this tract is divided into two, for the present. One is headed "The Life Views. Questions by a Methodist preacher," etc. The other is entitled, "A Ministerial Attack: The Life Views the Mark."

Each one is 12 pages; and are sent singly or together, as may be desired. Fourteen of either, or seven of each, will be sent for 20 cts. which includes the postage. 70 of either, or 35 of each, for one dollar. About 1,000 of each have already gone on their mission, and another 1,000 of each are ready.

It may be well that they have been published separately, though costing something more, as they can thus be used with each denomination with more probability of being read. Please scatter them where they will do good, and as many and early as possible.

The Eternally Tormented only a Few.

The following charitable article we copy from "The Advance" of May 19. It will be recollected that we published an article from that paper in our issue of May 11, wherein it was more than intimated that the lost were few compared to the saved. We asked our Br. of "The Advance," if he admitted the lost to be a "small remnant?" and quoted our Lord's words, Matt. vii. 13, 14, of "many" lost and "few" saved. We do not know that "The Advance" intended its article as a reply to what we said, but it answers our inquiry, and we thank it for the information; it shows advance from the old theology, which gives promise and hope for the future of Congregationalism, in which we were educated, and with which we were connected till about 28 years old. We append Notes to the article from "The Advance."

THE NUMBER OF THE SAVED.

A correspondent calls in question our statement that the finally lost will be but a small remnant of the human race, and thinks that exactly the opposite idea is the one taught in Scripture, and generally accepted by Christians. As to the latter point, it is of small consequence compared to the former, and in past ages probably it has been the popular conception, and for various reasons has been encouraged by ecclesiastics, Romish and Protestant. But the Scripture no where asserts such a view of the results of human history. The idea has arisen from several mistaken sources. Some have held that all mankind, infants and adults, are born under a sentence of eternal damnation because of the sin of Adam, and that only those finally escape who embrace the gospel, if they are adults, or receive baptism if they are infants. As but a small part of mankind can be included in these two alternatives, it is inferred that the vast majority will be lost. But as we deny the abhorrent premises of that argument, we are not bound by the conclusion. (1.) Many mistakenly apply to the whole human race, the words used by Isaiah, and quoted by Paul concerning the Israelites at a particular time in their history, when God's judgments should come upon them: it was said that then "a remnant (only) shall be saved." But the most rely on the words of Christ, when a certain man, full of idle curiosity, inquired, "Are there few that be saved?" and, instead of having his curiosity gratified in the answer was pointed to the spiritual condition of men as Christ daily noticed them, in order that he might be led to anxiety for his own salvation: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many I say unto you will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." And this explains the similar language of Christ: "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction; and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be which find it." It is without warrant that any one applies these words, spoken of adults and of the disposition of those among whom Christ was laboring, to the whole human race from the birth of Adam to the judgment day.

There is thus no Scriptural proof of the theory that the mass of mankind will be finally lost. There is proof to the contrary. It begins with the earliest promise of a Saviour, when, at the time of the fall, it was said to the serpent in the garden, "It (the seed of the woman, the Messiah) shall bruise thy head." Christ is to conquer Satan. From the long and bitter conflict, He, who was "born of woman," is to come out victor. This necessarily implies, that, in the end, salvation shall far exceed ruin; that those saved through Christ shall immensely out number those destroyed by Satan. Else, on the reverse supposition, the victory would be with the tempter, and not with the Redeemer. (2.) It would have been a singular triumph of our government over the Confederacy, if, at the end of the struggle, Jefferson Davis had retained in rebellion the vast majority of the population of the Union! Christ will have no mere nominal victory over Satan. (3.) The same idea pervades the numerous Old Testament prophecies which, in varied forms, express the idea that the Messiah shall gloriously triumph over all his foes, putting them to rout and shame, and that He shall "see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied." It is involved yet more plainly in the New Testament declarations that "where sin abounded, grace shall yet more abound," and that Christ shall prevail conspicuously before all worlds, over the devil and the kingdom of darkness. (4.)

Nor is it difficult to discern the facts which will substantiate this view. Our readers will not doubt the salvation of those who die in infancy and early childhood. But in granting this, the salvation of the majority of the human race is conceded; for more than half of all who are born die thus prematurely—a fact which lightens greatly the darkness of the past, and especially of the heathen world, where infant life so commonly goes to waste. (5.) Then even as to adults, the case as regards the world's history thus far is brighter than many picture it; because, by reason of the atonement made for all men, none are judged by a law of works, simply, but by a law of grace, which considers every soul according to its circumstances, and saves whatever has the smallest element of true penitence according to its measure of light as to holiness and sin. (6.) But the aspect changes rapidly and gloriously, when, under the guidance of prophecy, we look into the ultimate future of the earth, which in its holiness is to witness a reversal of present scenes. When the nations shall have been converted unto Christ, and the reclaimed earth shall teem with ten times its present population, and long ages shall roll on in purity, another face will be put on the moral history of man, and the destined results of redemption. What right has any one to judge from the mere beginnings of the divine system; from the era of preparation and of conflict? It is as though one should have judged of the results of American liberty in the midst of the late civil war, instead of thinking what they would be, one century or five centuries after its termination. (7.) The Bible takes no gloomy view of the human race as such. As a race it will be saved! The lost will be the exception and not the rule. Dr. Schaff well remarks in his additions to Lange on Romans, that, "from the great stress which Paul lays on the superabundance of grace, which greatly exceeds the evils of the fall, we have a right to infer that by far the greater part of the race will ultimately be saved." And Dr. Hodge, the personificatian of Puritan theology, than whom no one will be considered more orthodox, in his commentary on the same epistle uses this emphatic language: "We have reason to believe that the lost shall bear to the saved no greater proportion than the inmates of a prison do to the mass of the community." Such is our own faith, and we cannot consent to belie Scripture, to dim the glory of the Redeemer, or to play into the hands of adversaries who delight to malign orthodoxy, by teaching that the great mass of mankind for whom Christ died, will forever perish. The prison-convicts shall not outnumber the holy, nor the census of hell, exceed that of heaven. (8.)

Notes by Editor of Herald of Life.

1. We are glad to find our brother "denies the abhorrent premises;" and it gives us hope that, at some future day, he will equally abhor the doctrine of the eternal torture of any creature the Lord God hath made.

2. We are quite willing to let our Br. have his own way thus far, and will be glad to find he is correct. It certainly is a great advance from the old theology. We rather think, however, if "Christ is to conquer Satan," He will not leave that "enemy" alive, nor any who are "destroyed" by him. "The last enemy" to be "destroyed is death." Is the destruction of death, eternal torment? If not, how is it proved that the victims "destroyed by Satan" are thus disposed of? "The last enemy shall be destroyed," saith Paul, and that enemy is "death," he testifies, 1 Corth. xv. 26. If "the last enemy" is destroyed, viz., "death," surely no enemy is left, and "Him who had the power of death, that is, the devil," Paul saith, Christ will "destroy;" Heb. ii. 14; and "the last enemy" shares the same fate at the same time, or, rather, subsequently, because it is "the last enemy." That looks like a clean sweep, and leaves no subjects for eternal torture.

3. But, will not Christ have a "mere nominal victory," if His grand enemy survives with his multitude of victims, and there is to be an eternal vigilance to keep him and them in prison? If that enemy still lives, who knows but that, like "Jefferson Davis," he may one day be a good loyal subject? for, certainly the time will come, when "Every creature which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are therein" shall be "heard saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."—Rev. v. 13.

This looks as if "Satan" and "those destroyed by" him, if alive, were converted and reconciled to their "Conqueror," and were as peaceable and happy as "Jefferson Davis" now is, if not more so.

4. Very true. But if the language of Paul is to be taken in the absolute sense, then all sin must be abolished—because, "where sin abounded, grace shall yet more abound," so that "Christ shall prevail," to "destroy" sin: for, "He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning: for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii. 8. If the devil is to live eternally, and a large company of the human family with him are to keep sin alive where is the boasted "victory over Satan?" and is there not a failure in the mission of Christ to "destroy the works of the devil?"

Our Br has misquoted Paul's language in Rom. v. 20. He quotes it, "Where sin abounded grace shall yet more abound," making the event future; whereas, Paul puts it in the past, thus, "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." The text therefore does not prove more are to be saved than lost in the future, and does not apply to the case in hand, unless it proves universal salvation.

5. "The Advance" touches a tender point here. We have no objection to our Br. proving this position, if he can. He can only do so on the ground that all who die in infancy are righteous before they die. But the Lord told Abraham He would spare Sodom, if He found "ten righteous there."—Gen. xviii. 32. There can be no doubt there were hundreds if not thousands of children there; yet Sodom is "set forth for an ensample, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."—Jude 7. The city was not "spared," and the conclusion seems inevitable, the children were not righteous and did not escape the "eternal fire;" and if that fire is the theological hell a multitude of children are in it, and many of them "not a span long," as the old theology maintained.

But again; if our brother's view is correct, the destruction of Sodom and the cities of the plain, and the destruction of the old world by a flood were most stupendous acts of the love of God; for it secured the salvation of millions, who, if they had lived to grow to adults, would most likely have been the subjects of endless torments: and then, it is a mighty act of God's love that the gospel—as it is called—has never been sent to "the heathen world," where infant life so commonly goes to waste;" for now most of "the heathen world" are saved, whereas, if the gospel, such as is preached in these days, had been sent there, a great many less would, most likely, have been saved than now. And further, what a mercy that so many children die in Christian lands: their salvation is sure, as our brother tells us; and milk-poisoners and other baby murderers are peopling heaven faster than all the professed ministers of the gospel in Christendom. Talk about "child murderers:" why, they are child-savers, making sure work for these little ones, saving them the storms, trials and sorrows of this life, and the hazard of eternal torments hereafter! They must be set down as the benefactors of their race, making sure the salvation of the largest portion thereof!

We are certainly rejoiced that our Br. of "The Advance" is fully rid of the old orthodox notion of "infants in hell not a span long;" at least, the "non-elect infants," whom "Michael Wigglesworth, A.M., Teacher of the Church in Malden," Mass., in 1662, describes as thus addressed by the Judge in the Day of Judgment, after a plea for mercy by them had been made:

> "You sinners are, and such a share
> as sinners, may expect;
> Such you shall have, for I do save
> none but mine own Elect.
> Yet to compare your sin with their > who liv'd a longer time,
> I do confess yours is much less,
> though every sin's a crime.
> A crime it is, therefore in bliss
> you cannot hope to dwell;
> But unto you I shall allow > the easiest room in Hell."

Such palmy days of "orthodoxy" have passed away, and our good Br. of "The Advance" brings all infants to glory: another half century will abolish the theological hell, as the last half century has abolished Mr. Wigglesworth's baby notions of "the easiest room in hell" for "non-elect" infants. Hence, we take courage and labor on in the good cause of wiping out the superstitions of the past centuries.

6. We are happy to agree perfectly with our respected Br. of "The Advance" in the sentiments here expressed; and yet they need to be guarded lest men infer from them that they need not trouble themselves to search for truth, and so turn away from it, when it is presented to them, and assume they have enough of it already.

7. We shall not probably differ widely from our brother in this view of the subject as to the future, unless he anticipates this glorious result before our Lord's return from heaven in his glory; and we have no right to assume that he wishes so to be understood from any thing said in his article.

8. So we come at last to an amazing modification of original orthodoxy about hell. Adam's posterity, "As a race will be saved," says our Br., and Dr. Schaff with Dr. Hodge are presented as witnesses to the same faith; and now that they have got their theological hell prison so near tenantless, at least, the number so very small compared with the holy and happy, might they not as well try the experiment of converting these few, by burning down their prison and exerting the mighty love-power with which this vastly superior number of holy and happy ones are now permanently armed? If the great mass of mankind are made holy and happy notwithstanding the disadvantages of this life, what a glorious result might be looked for in their united efforts to reconcile the few lost ones to God; and so the sight of "every creature" praising "Him that sitteth on the throne and the Lamb" be realized in all its prophetic glory! This must ultimately be fulfilled; and hence all "for whom Christ died" will become reconciled to God, or will have been blotted out of life forever, and be no more. "Such is our faith, and we cannot consent to belie Scripture, to dim the glory of the Redeemer, or to play into the hands of adversaries" . . . "by teaching that" any part of those "for whom Christ died, will forever" be kept in a living state of unutterable woe! There will be no "census" in a theological "hell," because none will ever be found there to be numbered.

An Inquirer.

Dear Brother: I have been a reader of your publications, sent me by Br. E. A. Poole, and have become interested in your view of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. If it is the truth, it would be very comforting to me to be established in it. It looks very reasonable that our heavenly Father would be satisfied with the death of the offenders, without calling them into life to die again. I was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church about thirty years. For the last fifteen years I have been a believer in the Second Advent doctrine, as taught in the "Advent Review and Sabbath Herald," and have been trying to keep the seventh day Sabbath, though alone in my neighborhood. I would like to know your views on the Sabbath, and whether you think all the little ones that have died before they were old enough to believe on Christ have perished. Your sister in Christ, seeking for immortality, eternal life, through Jesus the Life-giver.

Mary A. Beasley.

Chenango Co., N. Y.

Response by the Editor.

Our sister sees, what every enlightened and unprejudiced lover of Jesus must see, that the doctrine of "No future life out of Christ" is "reasonable;" and, compared with temporary or endless life hereafter in torment, is "very comforting" to a heart in sympathy with the heart of Jesus, which always was affected with human woe. We add no more on this item now, as our views are fully expressed elsewhere.

As to the Sabbath question; we have stood for twenty-five years on the ground we understand Paul to have stood, as expressed in Rom. xiv. 5, "One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind." We respect those Christians who act according to their own convictions in relation to the Sabbath. Our conviction is, that under the Gospel dispensation all days are alike to the true Christian; and that for any class of Christians to make it a text of our devotion to Christ and his cause, that we should regard "one day above another," whether it be the Seventh day or the First day, is a usurpation of the prerogative of God, which endangers their own salvation; and is a clear violation of the rule given by Paul, Col. ii. 16: "Let no man therefore judge you . . . in respect of a holy day. . . . or of the Sabbath." And he adds, in the verse following, "which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."

The term Sabbath means rest: and the Apostle tells us, Heb. iv., "We which have believed do enter into rest." . . . "For he that is entered into his rest, he also, hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his;" i. e., at ending creation. When we believe in Christ, we find rest; here our true Sabbath begins its dawn; but, "There remaineth . . . a rest to the people of God," when the full blaze of the eternal rest, or Sabbath shall open upon us in the kingdom and glory of our Lord and Life-giver, Jesus Christ; eternally shall his people rest in His love and presence; not in inactivity, but in unwearied employment.

Now, if any one chooses to keep "a shadow," in this life, we have no fault to find with them, provided they keep it in charity, and do not make it a test for others. We honor them for acting up to their convictions; but let them not judge others, who stand or fall to their "own Master;"—Rom. xiv. 4. Such is our position on this question.

As to little children, our opinion is, that the children of those who come to God believing "that He is, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him," under whatever dispensation they have lived, will share in the reward of their parents. But we leave them and all other children in the hands of our covenant God; fully satisfied that He will dispose of them according to His wisdom and love. Here we find rest—a perfect Sabbath. Others may puzzle themselves on the question, and violate rest, and manifest a lack of confidence in God's wisdom and love if they will; we do not share in their unrest at all; our mind is at perfect rest, and in perfect peace on the subject, knowing that God will do all things well.

Let us all seek to cultivate a childlike trust in our heavenly Father, knowing that He careth for us; and let us learn to leave all unrevealed matters with Him, not doubting that the time will come when we shall admire the wisdom and goodness of God in all his administration in the government of the affairs of this world.

Sorrow comes soon enough without despondency; it does a man no good to carry around a lightning-rod to attract trouble.

The Judgment Message.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

[Continued from last issue.]

We have shown that one of the characteristics of "the day of the Lord"—or, as spoken of in our text as the "hour of His judgment"—will be a day of separation, manifested by the divinely-sent angels in gathering His elect "from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other."—Matt. xxiv. 29–31. But as another characteristic of this "day of the Lord," the Scriptures present it as

A DAY OF DESTRUCTION TO EVIL DOERS.

Paul testifies that "when they shall say peace and safety then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape."—1 Thess. v. 3. They shall not escape destruction; for he declares that they shall "be punished with everlasting destruction," "when the Lord shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire taking vengeance on them."—2 Thess. i. 7–10.

Again: We have Christ's affirmative testimony, in positive terms, on this point; in presenting the flood as a type of the end of this dispensation. He says: "As it was in the days of Noe, . . . so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. xxiv. 38, 39. Also he says, "Likewise as it was in the days of Lot, . . . the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them ALL. Even thus shall it be when the Son of man is revealed."—Luke xvii. 28, 30. Though this testimony is unimpeachable, that the day of the Lord will be a day of destruction to evil doers, yet we may refer to the language of the revelator, when referring to the same time, in Rev. xi. 15–18, he speaks of the end when "the seventh angel sounded" and "great voices in heaven" declared that "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy (margin—'corrupt') the earth."

THE JUDGMENT CANNOT BE DEFERRED.

But why need we quote more? What language could more fully show the characteristics of this "hour of His judgment" which will soon overtake the world in its heedless career? Destruction—aye, "sudden destruction"—will soon overtake all who continue in their course of rebellion against our gracious High Priest, who now is seated at the right hand of the Father, and mercifully pleads with men to turn from their sinful ways and seek pardon and peace here, and eternal life hereafter. But that fearful "hour of His judgment" is coming—certainly coming! Men may speculate, may philosophize, may rest seeming secure upon the vain assumptions of science, and may reap, plant, sow, build houses and marry and give in marriage, all in utter disregard of the promise of Christ's coming; but they cannot delay that hour. They cannot defer the execution of Jehovah's decree—"The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." How wise for man, therefore, to heed the voice of mercy—the pleadings of love—to accept Christ as the ark which alone can bear them safely through the mighty deluge which shall sweep the curse of sin from the world. Then the deep and earnest groaning for redemption will be satisfied, as the heavenly halo of eternal glory shall transform our world into its paradistic state. Then, indeed, we shall have "Paradise Restored."

[To be Continued.]

Rochester, N. Y., May, 1870.

A Theological Nut: Who will Crack it?

The Rev. John Dick, D.D., says, "God never made anything in sin. He is too holy, pure and undefiled, for anything tainted with sin to come from his hand." Now, if "God never made anything in sin," in the past, and he is immutable, he cannot change and become the author of sin in the future; for, "He is too holy, pure and undefiled, for anything tainted with sin to come from his hand."

But it is said, The wicked dead are all raised in sin; and if they are raised immortal then they will sin to all eternity, or, if they are raised mortal for an hour, a day, or a year, it is all the same; they are raised in sin, and sin while they live. Now, the question arises, By what power are the wicked dead raised? God cannot do it; for, "He never made anything in sin;" and a dead man cannot raise himself to life again; and I never heard any one affirm that the devil could raise the wicked dead.

Now if God cannot do it, without being the author of all the sin in the future state, even in hell, (if there is such a place), and as the dead sinner cannot restore himself to life, and the devil cannot do it, and God cannot do it without being the author of all the sin committed in hell or any other place—By what power are the wicked dead raised? Who will attempt to prove that God will raise them, and not be the author of all the sins of the resurrected?

Jas. W. Smith.

Upland, Pa., May 23, 1870.

Letters and Extracts.

From Polly G. Pitts.

Br. Storrs: I have lately thought much of the great battle that is going on at this present time, between truth and error; and if Daniel was astonished one hour, and his thoughts troubled him when he saw what was coming on the king of Babylon for his pride, rebellion, and self-exaltation, I have been astonished many hours, and my thoughts have troubled me when thinking of, and looking at the things that have come, and are coming on many of the leaders of the people, who are looking for the coming of the Saviour. It has been painful to me to hear of the fall of two prominent men in Iowa. I say "fall." I consider it so: they have gone over to Universalism; so I am informed. Now, why is it so? Well, I can say for one, it is plain to me. They have rejected the truth of, "No Life out of Christ;" they have contended that, "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive;" both righteous and wicked. Those who take this position, to be consistent, must believe in universal salvation, or life. Paul, speaking by inspiration, says, in the same chapter, 1 Corth. xv., "Some will say, how are the dead raised up and with what body do they come?" Ans. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Here we see, all life beyond the grave, is glorious, incorruptible, powerful, spiritual.

Now, I have no doubt but that many see the dilemma they are in, but they have committed themselves before the public, and stuck their stakes so deep, that it is too humiliating to say, "I was mistaken; I was in the wrong." So they wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction, and the stumbling of others, and go over to Universalism, and Spiritualism. Some are so determined to keep the doctrine of God's eternal truth—"No Life out of Christ," from the people, that they organize; virtually saying, "If you go with us, you must believe as we do." So the body of Christ is divided and sub-divided, and divided again. O how vain to fight against God, or his truth, and to kick against the pricks. Would to God that they were like David the king of Israel. When he found he was wrong, what an humble confession he made before God. He says, "My feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped, for I was envious at the foolish, or wicked, when I saw their prosperity. They have no bands in their death. They are not plagued as other men; their eyes stand out with fatness. They prosper in the world, they increase in riches. They say, how doth God know? is there knowledge in the Most High? Behold these are the ungodly who prosper in the world." Here David seems to feel that God's ways were not equal, for he says again, "Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning. When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me; until I went into the sanctuary of God; then understood I their end." What David! their end! the end of the ungodly? must they perish? Ans. "Surely thou didst set them in slippery places, thou castedst them down into destruction. How are they brought into desolation as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terror. As a dream when one awaketh, so, O Lord, when thou awakest, thou shalt despise their image." Here comes the confession. "Thus my heart was grieved, and I was pricked in my reins. So foolish was I, and ignorant. I was as a beast before thee."

Bless the Lord for this confession; it was written for our admonition, upon whom the end of the world is come. It is written, "he that confesseth and forsaketh shall find mercy." May God grant repentance to many, whose feet I fear are almost gone, and that their steps are well nigh slipping.

I feel that God will hold up the Herald and make it his messenger flying through the land, preaching the everlasting gospel. May God make it His "battering ram," filled with His word, to batter down the wall that is daubed with untempered mortar. Fight on, brethren. May God teach our hands to war, and our fingers to fight. Our opposers are receding. Truth is getting the upper hand. The dear Herald is growing better and better every week. I can say too, "Praise the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, praise His holy name." May the great Shepherd of the sheep, keep us all, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, till He comes and crowns us with eternal life. Your sister in the Lord.

Fredericksburg, Iowa, May, 1870.

From W. H. Whitman.

Br. Storrs: Last Sunday we heard a discourse on the destiny of the wicked. The text was, 2 Thess. i. 7–9. The clergyman first stated the position of Restorationists and condemned them. He then tried to give the theory of the Adventists; but failed to a great extent. He then claimed, "That eternal suffering was the destiny of the wicked," but gave no text to prove it. He also claimed that "temporal punishment was a necessity in God's government;" then drew the conclusion that "eternal punishment may exist forever for the same reason." So the conclusion may also be drawn, that as God has allowed the righteous to suffer "temporarily," so he may let them suffer to some extent, eternally!

He said, "The wicked will have an endless existence." This he failed to prove. He then claimed, "that God did not punish vindictively," and quoted Ezek. xviii. 32, to prove it. This looked more sensible. He then said that "Some claimed that the government of God would look better if the wicked were just turned back to their former elements." This was cast at us; and we thought it was the truth; for God has revealed himself to us in that light. He then turned to his text, and after making some remarks upon it said, "It carried the idea of destruction." He quoted Matt. xxv. 46, to prove his position, but failed; for Paul's comment in 2 Thess. i.. on our Saviour's language in Matt. xxv., was too plain for him. He asked the question, "How do you express the idea of the future happiness of the righteous?" and said, "Eternal life is a figure to express the enjoyment of the righteous, as fire is a figure to express the punishment of the wicked." Finally he acknowledged that "just how, and where, God would punish the wicked, he could not tell." He ignored the promise of the land—made to Abraham and his seed—by God.

We have given some of the prominent points he touched on, which we consider a mixed up mess, not fit to enlighten any one in divine things. Now such preaching is paid for by the mass of the people; and how do you think, dear readers of the Herald, such people can be enlightened on the true teachings of the Bible? They have certainly turned to fables. Our heart's desire is that they may by some means, yet see the truth and be saved.

We enclose one dollar and fifty cents to pay for those tracts you sent us. They are out on their mission. What they will accomplish, the Lord only knows.

May God's blessings rest on all his dear children, and the time speedily come for them all to be gathered home into his kingdom.

Galesburg, Ill., May 15, 1870.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

Br. Storrs: I have long thought I would ask our mortal resurrectionists, if they will be so kind as to inform me, how the candle ot the wicked can be relighted when it is once put out, seeing they have no life in Christ the Life-giver? It is a well established truth, that the candle in almost every instance where it is spoken of in the Bible means life; and the wise man, Solomon, tells us to fret not, nor to keep company with the wicked; and assigns his reason why: For, says he, there shall be no reward to the evil man: and still further as a reason, the candle, lamp (life) shall be put out.—See Prov. xxiv. 19, 20. Now, we ask some of the believers in a mortal resurrection, to tell us how the wicked will ever get their candle lighted when once out—once dead? The contrast is very great: the saints of the most High God are all to stand before the throne of God in order to receive their reward. But seeing there is no reward to the wicked after his life is extinct, that is, put out, what will the Judge of all the earth do with them, seeing they are not to stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous?—Psa. i. 4, 5. Will our opponents tell us how we can gather the chaff together when once driven away with the wind? If they are wise enough to answer the above, then they can inform us how the man whose candle is put out shall find the path of life.—Psa. xvi. 11. Surely then, they will be in the same path that our blessed Saviour trod, which leads to God. How is this, my friends, when the word of inspiration says, without holiness no man shall see the Lord? Seeing then that there is no reward, and that they (the wicked) cannot stand in the great day of reward, and as the wages of sin is death (not twice) and that they shall melt away like a snail (evaporate), or like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun, and that they sleep a perpetual sleep (unending), and that they perish like the beasts, and shall be no more, for they consume away like smoke, or like snow water, or the cloud that is consumed and vanisheth away, so is the wicked no more. Such texts we might multiply to any extent, but we have given enough. Let us all look well to our ways, so as to be sure we please the Lord; for he who keepeth the commandments keepeth his own soul (life); but he that despiseth His ways shall die: not die twice.

Grafton, Ill., May, 1870.

Geo. W. Allshouse, Rochester, N. Y., writes: I cannot forbear writing a few lines to you, to thank you for your kindness to me in continuing my paper. I do thank God and you for the favor, although I am not yet able to pay for it, but will certainly do so as soon as I can. I have had now several years of deep affliction and adversity, with ill health and at times entire nervous prostration, which, indeed, at times almost deranged me; but great is the goodness of God, whom I would thank with all my heart, who has many times delivered me from great anguish and the very verge of despair; thanks be to his holy Name. May the Lord spare you many years yet, and give light and wisdom from above, with perfect peace; and may his visitations preserve your spirit, and provide for you all that you need in this life, and grant you that great boon, even eternal Life through our Lord and Life-giver, Jesus Christ. May the Lord grant his blessing to the Herald of Life, and upon all those who write for it, and to those who read it, and to all his poor and afflicted children scattered abroad throughout the world. Remember me at a throne of grace. Yours in hope of eternal life through Christ our Lord. I enclose a copy of a hymn, which I have carried a number of years in my pocket, until the paper is about worn out. Please put it in the Herald, as it may be a help and consolation to others who are in the "furnace" and under the "hammer."

From James H. Jacobs.

Br. Storrs: With a thankful heart, this morning, for the goodness of God to the children of men in this life, and the promise of a better one on the condition of believing that God so loved the world, i. e., the family of man, but no sect in particular, for sects did not exist then as I know of, when God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. This shows there are conditions to be complied with or we perish. This looks to me as though man can and will perish without a resurrection. Then, if man can perish without a resurrection, i. e., suffer the penalty, why should he be made alive by or through Christ to suffer the penalty, or receive the wages of sin? All who believe man is mortal, admit that if a man dies and does not have a resurrection, he has or will perish. Now, is it consistent or Bible to say, there must be a resurrection of man before he can perish or receive the wages of sin? I am truly thankful to God for what I see of his goodness. I want to live so that he will not be ashamed to be called my God. I ask Life believers, yea all that love God, to remember me in their prayers.

I am telling the goodness of life from the dead to the best of my ability, and discussing with my fellow-beings. The doctrine of life in a future world, without suffering or dying again, is gaining ground. Thank God.

Freetown, N. Y., May 19, 1870.

From Eld. S. Bragg.

Br. Storrs: I have received the tracts, and am glad to get them; glad of the truth they contain. I thank the Lord for the light that is shining in these last days. I am glad I live to see it; yet it is very unpopular. But I am willing to suffer for the truth's sake, and wish to do what I can to let others see it.

We are travelling all the time; have some good meetings; some love the truth. I should be glad if more would see it. But some will not. Well, brother, the good Lord bless and sustain you in your labors. We shall soon get through all the trials of this life. Praise the good Lord. We shall be glad to exchange this world of sorrow and trial, for a world of glory and joy. I believe the blessed land is nearing. Everything to my mind, looks that way. Well, all the poor pilgrims will be glad to see Jesus. He has a few friends left on the earth, and they will welcome him back again. Peace be with you dear Br. Yours in love.

Lewiston, Me., May 23, 1870.

OBITUARY.

Died of consumption in Bradley, Maine, May 21, Sister Nancy, wife of Br. Samuel Smith. Many who have visited Bradley will remember her hospitality, as her house has been a pilgrim's home for many years. She leaves a husband and three children, besides numerous friends to mourn her loss. We preached on the occasion from Isaiah xxv. 8, to comfort them with the blessed hope.

Geo. W. Brown.

APPOINTMENTS.

Roby's Corner, N. H., eve., June 1.
Northwood Narrows, N. H., Sunday, June 5.
Exeter, N. H., eve., June 7.
Lawrence, Mass., eve., June 8.
Charlestown, Mass., eve., June 9.
Lynn, Mass., eve., June 10.
Providence, R. I., Sunday, June 12.

S. W. Bishop.

Plymouth, Me., June 5.
Amherst, June 12.
Hamden, June 19.
Kenduskeag, June 26.

L. Wetherbee.

Pleasant Valley, Conn., (West Winsted in the evening), June 8.
New York City, Cooper Institute, (Room 24), June 12.

W. S. Campbell.

Holden, Me., at the chapel, Sunday, June 5.
Bradley, Me., Sunday, June 12.

Geo. W. Brown.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Mrs. Mary Pratt, John Cochran, John Comstock, Charles Andrews, Miss R. J. Turner, C. H. Hathaway, Philo Clark, Hudson Andrews.

Two dollars each from—W. T. Clarke, John T. Cate. (We find, as you suggest, the credit in our "memorandum." Thank you.)

Various sums—Thomas Denton, $3; John Kemp, $50 on pledge; W. H. Whitman, $1 50; L. A. Merril, 50 cents.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

C. A. Hempsted, $2.

FOR THE NEW TRACT: "THE WICKED DEAD."

Thos. McClary, Wilmington, Del. $10.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

A. Boynton, Eld. R. V. Lyon (book), Prof. J. F. Huber, Eld. S. Bragg, G. H. Bundy, Jas. W. Smith (two parcels), D. B. Salter, Lucretia B. Lamb, Erastus Clark, Mrs. E. G. Farmer, Abel Larkin, Anna Neill, Joel S. Richards, Bertine S. Erwin, Thomas Apthorpe, Clamor Franke, Mrs. Z. C. Crane and Demas Harrison each a package. (Shall we send you more?) Alfred Annable, R. E. Ladd. (Will you have more sent?)

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. Boynton.—The letter of May 1st has not been received.

JESUS.

There is no friend like Jesus,
So gentle kind and true,
With mercies ever ready
And blessings ever new.
There is no friend so mighty—
So able to defend,
So willing to protect us
And keep us to the end.

There is no friend like Jesus,
In sickness or in health;
Our poverty but moves him
To proffer us his wealth.
He hears our secret pleadings,
In every time of need;
O Jesus, blessed Jesus,
Thou art a friend indeed!

There is no friend like Jesus,
When death to us appears,
He meets the greedy monster
And smiles away our fears;
For he has been victorious
O'er death and o'er the grave,
And by his resurrection
Has proved his power to save.

There is no friend like Jesus,
He is the living vine;
We lose a life that's mortal,
He gives us one divine;
A life that is eternal,
Beyond the reach of pain,
Where we shall meet our loved ones
And never part again.

Hail! hail thou blessed Jesus,
We pray thee, come and reign!
Our King and our Redeemer,
Come, come to earth again.
Sit on thy throne of glory,
Let us before thee fall,
And with loud hallelujahs
Proclaim thee LORD OF ALL!

MARIA M. WEAVER.

WESTFIELD, Mass., 1870.

ANTICHRIST ONCE MORE.

BY ABEL LARKIN.

[Continued from last week.]

Now for another point. Daniel pointedly says that the saints' persecution is from the horn that plucked up three of the kingdoms. Then of course the five kingdoms or heads of the beast that are fallen, are not guilty, for they in no shape whatever belonged to the horn that did it. This proves again my position that the Papally persecuted were not saints, or, if some of them were, they cannot be those referred to.

But again. 1. The deadly head was of the Greek horn. 2. This head has not been healed. 3. The Greek kingdom is the only one that plucked up three of the ten divisions into which Rome was divided. 4. It is the only one that has a mouth speaking great words against the saints of the Most High. 5. It is the one that made war on the saints. And, 6. The last head of this horn or kingdom is the only one into whose hands "times and laws" go for "a time, times, and the dividing of time," 3 1-2 years, or 1290 days. Hence "He must continue a short space."—Rev. xvii. 10.

Will the reader examine some of these points, for much depends on them. But because I make the days of John and Daniel literal, our brother says of me, "Consistency is a jewel." If Daniel had said his 1290, 1335 days were years, or even intimated it, I should not dispute it; but he has not done so. If our brother had a note of mine for $100 due in 60 days, and then called for pay, and I should tell him the days were sixty years, would he then say of me, "Consistency is a jewel?" I suppose he would; for he is too honest to repudiate the coin of his construction; the court and jury to the contrary, notwithstanding. The brother says, "The 1290 and 1335 in the original, is yomeem. Although it is the word for days, it is the word for years." Is not this admission more favorable for a literal than a spiritual construction, and even independent of the numerous testimonies with which they are connected and in favor of the literal view? If they are years, why does he fail to point out their exact date? Is it because all others have failed in the rotten theory? Let us recollect that Daniel had more than one vision. Visions, in the plural are mentioned no less than eight or nine times. And "the vision," singular, twelve times; referring to a certain one. "And Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams:" i. 19. "Daniel had visions upon his bed." Dan. vii. 1.

Now the question comes up, Are Daniel's visions that are connected with his seventy weeks, all fulfilled? If not, may we not suppose that his 2,300 days belong to the unfulfilled week, and of course to the 1290 and 1335 days? That Daniel's weeks are years, see Gen. xxix. 27.

"Seventy weeks are determined" (cut off or shortened as the Donay Bible has it), "upon thy people and upon thy holy city to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up (i. e., ratify by fulfilment) the vision and prophecy."

Now have all these weeks been fulfilled? If they have, how happens it, that sin and transgression are not abolished? And why has not the above mentioned reconciliation been effected for iniquity, and everlasting righteousness established? The admission that these weeks are all in the past, gives the infidel a power that is overwhelming; for he says, "You admit that your Bible teaches that sin and transgression were abolished some 1800 years ago; and do you think I am a fool sufficient to believe it?" Let us get out of Babylon, and when out, keep out, and learn the prophetic events connected with salvation. But the unfulfilled week explains why these things are not accomplished in which the prophetic dates and prophecies appear mostly to culminate.

A time requiring special description. "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three-score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Ver. 25. Here we find sixty-nine of the weeks; and no more in the past. "And after threescore and two weeks (not necessarily immediately after, for the "After," may include nearly all of the sixty-third week) shall Messiah be cut off; and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." Ver. 26. This city, no doubt was Jerusalem in A. D. 70. And terminated the sixty-ninth week. Then we must look for the last week, and for those events that are to bring it forth. "And he shall confirm a covenant with many for one week." Ver. 29. Now as this covenant has not been made, the week is yet future. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation"—1290 days. See Dan. xi. 31; xii. 11; vii. 25; Matt. xxiv. 15. But who is this personage if it is not the Man of Sin? the last head of the beast whose time is short, three and a half years from the time he sets up his abomination? "And thou shalt come from thy place out of the North parts against my people Israel, to take a prey and a spoil, it shall be in the latter days." "Art thou he of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, that I would bring thee against them?"—Ezek. xxxviii. 17.

Now if these prophecies are fulfilled, then we are down the channel of time below the latter days. But when did we pass those days? But, again. "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." viii. 13.

I will here say, that the Jewish and Douay Bibles have it, "Unto 2,300 evenings and mornings;" and the 26th verse of our translation confirms this view, by calling it "the vision of the evening and the morning;" i. e., one day; as much as to say, that the 2,300 days were so many evenings and mornings. It would seem that Daniel put these 2,300 days into so many evenings and mornings, on purpose that they should not be spiritualized into years. The 2,300 days measure not only the time of the daily sacrifice, but also the time that the sanctuary and host are trodden under foot. The sanctuary is not destroyed as in Dan. ix. 26, but trodden under foot; or as Daniel says, xi. 31, "shall pollute." Consequently the temple and sanctuary are again to be rebuilt that they may receive the measurement of these days; lacking 255 of the full week number. "Seal" or, "shut thou up the vision; for it shall be for many days" in the future, Dan. viii. 26. "For at the time of the END," (i. e., dispensation), "shall be the vision." Ver. 17. Here we find the location of this vision is at the END of the age; and of course describes events that are only there to be. And it is impossible to remove their future location.

But once more. All admit that Daniel's 70 weeks are 490 years. "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week." Dan. ix. 29. Now there are in one week of years 2,555 days. And the date of the violated covenant is at the commencement of these days or weeks. "How long shall be The vision, concerning the daily sacrifice and the transgression of desolation, to give both the host and sanctuary to be trodden under foot?" viii. 13. "And he said unto me, Unto 2,300 days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Ver. 14; and of course, the temple.

Let me here say that we should not confound too much this vision with the one describing the four universal empires, and which is styled, "A vision." ii. 19. "A dream," iv. 5; for it is entirely detached from it, and which describes events that are at the dawn of the millennial day only. Now the days measure, first, "the Sacrifice," (whatever it may be); it of course does not take all of them to do it, but it takes the remainder of them to measure the balance of the week, commencing at the time the covenant was broken by the transgression of desolation; for it says, "And from the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination of desolation set up," (as I, Daniel, have just told you in chap. ix. 27, and also, xi. 31); "there shall be 1290 days;" chap. xii. 11. Hence, "In the midst of the week (by his abomination) he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease." Only lacking thirteen and a half days of being the exact centre of the days of the week; 2,555. See iv. 34. The confirmation of this covenant for seven years, I understand is a national power for certain stipulations agrees to grant and protect an Israelitish class belonging to no apostacy, and headed by a certain character to build the Temple of God at Jerusalem, and worship in it as they please. This being settled, they complete the requisite arrangements for the dedication of the house, which takes 255 days. Then the sacrifice or worship begins, at this time of the week; 255 days having passed, the 2,300 days begin, and measure the balance of the week, including the temple worship of 1,010 days; leaving 1290 for the abomination, i. e., time, times and the dividing of time. Now take 2,300 from 2,555, and we have 255. Now add up.

Date of the covenant from the commencement of the .	2,555 days.
Preparation for the sacrifice or worship in erecting the Temple, occupying	255 "
From the time the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, shall be . . .	1,290 "
These two last numbers taken from 2,555, leave the daily time to be . .	1,010 "
Total	2,555 "

Now how this remarkable, and accurate description can have a spiritual construction, I know not. And surely there is no mistake in the illustration. "Blessed is he that cometh to the 1,335 days." Why? Because 45 days after the 1290, put him in the next dispensation; the 45 days being the great and terrible day of the Lord in which men, as in the flood, become nearly extinct. "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and few men are left."—Isa. xxiv. 6. All nationalities dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel.—Psa. ii. 9.

MT. STERLING, Ill.

THE ANGEL-TRUMPETERS.

"And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets."—Rev. viii. 2.

NOT all angels are of the same dignity and office. Paul enumerates "dominions, principalities, and powers," among the celestial orders. Isaiah speaks of Seraphim—nobles—principal ones, who have their stations by the high and uplifted throne of the Divine majesty. The sons of God in general only come before Him at appointed times (Job i. 6), but the Saviour himself speaks of some angels who "do always behold the face of the Father which is in heaven."—Matt. xviii. 10. And the sublime agents which John beheld after the opening of the seventh seal, are described as "the seven angels who stand in the presence of God."

The Jews were familiar with seven angels of this particular class. Gabriel is one of them; as he himself said to Zacharias: "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God."—Luke i. 19. Michael is another, as he is ranked with Gabriel in the book of Daniel, and there pronounced one of the princes, even "the great prince" of the prophet's people. In the Apocryphal book of Tobit, Raphael is named as still another, where he announces himself and says: "I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels, which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the holy One." Whether we take this book as inspired, as the Romanists do, or as not inspired, as the Protestants generally regard it, there is no matter with regard to this point. The passage referred to (Tob. xii. 15) shows what the ancient people of God held for truth, and the representation harmonizes with the text, and with the accepted books of holy Scripture. The ancients believed in seven presence-angels, and the Apocalypse ratifies that belief.

These presence-angels are the highest and mightiest of created beings. It is their privilege to "stand in the presence of God." They stand; this is the posture of service; but standing in the presence of God, is to be above all other servants. The seven Persian princes who "saw the King's face," were the highest officers of the realm, and next to the monarch in rank and power.—Esth. i. 14. And what those princes were to the Persian kings, the presence-angels are to God.

And these sublimest ministers of God appear here as the prime executors of the oncoming administrations. The Saviour himself said: "In the end of this world, the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire."—Matt. xiii. 40–42. And here John beholds those angels—the glorious septemvirate of celestial archregents, the mightiest and the highest creatures in the universe, presenting themselves for the momentous work.

"And to them were given seven trumpets." Trumpets are expressive instruments. The voice of the trumpet is the most significant voice known to the holy Scriptures. God himself gave his ancient people very special directions with regard to the use of the trumpet. It is itself described as a cry—a loud and mighty cry—which related only to important occasions. The time for the blowing of trumpets, was always a time of moment—a time of solemnity—a time for men to bestir themselves greatly in one way or another.

Trumpets connect with war. The command was: "If ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets."—Num. x. 9.

Trumpets were for the convocation of the people, and the moving of the camps of Israel. This is minutely prescribed in Num. viii.

Trumpets proclaimed the great festivals. "Ye shall blow with the trumpets over burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifice of your peace-offerings." "Ye shall have a Sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation." "Thou shalt cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout the land." And so, "when the burnt-offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets."—Num. x. 10; Lev. xxiii. 24; xxv. 9; 2 Chron. xxix. 27.

Trumpets also related to the announcements of royalty. Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, were directed to anoint Solomon king over Israel, and blow with the trumpet, and say, God save King Solomon. It is also written: "They hasted greatly, . . . and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king."—1 Kings i. 34, 39; 2 Kings ix. 13.

Trumpets are also associated with the manifestation of the terrible majesty and power of God. When the Almighty appeared on Mount Sinai, there was "the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud; so that all the people that was in the camp trembled."

Trumpets connect with the overthrow of the ungodly. It was at the blowing of the trumpets that the walls of Jericho fell down, and the city was given into the hands of Joshua. Josh. vi. 13–16.

Trumpets also proclaimed the laying of the foundations of God's temple.—Esdras iii. 10.

With these facts before us, we are already in a degree prepared to anticipate what these seven trumpets are to bring forth. Their number is the complete number; and we may expect from them everything to which trumpets stand related in the Scriptures. Are they related to war? Then war is coming; yea, even "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Are they for the calling of convocations and signals for motion? Then we may look for great gatherings and mighty changes. Do they herald great solemnities and blessed feasts and sacrifices? Then may we anticipate the sublimest festivals, and victories, and jubilee, and burning up of the victims of sin, that the world has ever yet seen. Do they declare investiture with dominion and the commencement of a new reign? Then we may look for the setting up of a new administration, and the opening of the reign of the true David, and the greater than Solomon. Do they declare the presence of God in His awful majesty? Then may we expect a revelation of Divine power and Godhead which shall fill heaven and earth with trembling. Do they bring the fall of the cities of the wicked, and the destruction of their inhabitants? Then we may look for the end of great Babylon, and the sweeping of the dominion of Antichrist and all his confederates from the earth. Do they tell of the founding and building of the permanent temple of the Lord? Then may we look for the incoming of that true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man, and of that firmly-founded city whose maker and builder is God. And all this accords entirely with what John subsequently describes as resultant from the sounding of these seven trumpets.

Writers on the Apocalypse generally treat it as if it depended for its imagery and materials upon the ancient Jewish regulations. They thus put the copy for the original, and deal with the original as if it were the copy. All the ancient regulations were nothing but copies and types. They were commanded to be made after some heavenly model, of which they were to be the remembrancers and prophecies. They were not the true—the real—but only earthly imitations of it. The true ideal is what John beholds in this book. These seven presence-angels, with their seven trumpets, are the true heavenly realities, with reference to which all the ancient laws relating to trumpets were ordained. What we here have is not the work of John, elaborating a dramatic poem out of the elements of the ancient ritual, but an Apocalypse of the great realities themselves, with reference to which those old appointments were constructed, as earthly pictures and mimic predictions. We go back to the ancient laws, and we there see reflected in earthly forms what John beholds in heavenly reality; and we reverse the whole order, and involve ourselves in inextricable confusion, when we take the images in his visions as mere earthly and Jewish drapery, and not rather as the very things from which these Jewish ceremonies took their existence and peculiarities. The Apocalypse is not a poem in Jewish dress; but the Jewish ceremonies were an earthly poem of the Apocalypse. Let this be understood, and much of the darkness hanging over the meaning of this book will at once disappear.—Prophetic Times.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

BE NOT DISCOURAGED.

MARIA HILTON is one of my Sabbath-school scholars. While on a visit to her aunt, she became interested in religion, and came home as she thought, a Christian; and as I knew that, in her circumstances, she would have many temptations which she would never encounter in her aunt's Christian home, I thought she needed special encouragement, and so invited her to come often to my house and acquaint me with her progress in this new mode of life.

This afternoon she came in looking sad and disheartened. I knew that something had gone wrong, and waited for her to tell me; by-and-by it came out.

"O, Mrs. Williams, I am so discouraged;" she exclaimed suddenly, the tears coming to her eyes.

"Why, Maria, what has happened?"

"Well, I will tell you all about it. O, I've been so impatient and cross! This morning before I got up, I remembered that it was Saturday, and stormy too; so the children would be at home and in the house all day. Saturday is a very hard trying day always; but I was determined I would be pleasant and kind and not get out of patience at all, and I didn't make the resolve in my own strength either," she added, coloring a little. "I prayed very earnestly that I might be kept patient and gentle all day, and I was full of confidence when I went down stairs; but, dear me, it was all of no use; the first thing I saw as I went through the sitting-room was the Atlantic on the table, and though I knew mother needed me, I sat down and began a story. Mary wanted me to hook her dress, but I sent her to Abbie; and when mother called me to set the table, I didn't go right away, but waited until I had finished my story, and then when mother said something, I answered up quick, that she might have got Abbie to do it. I was very much ashamed afterward, Mrs. Williams, and I felt so bad that I began my day so poorly. While we were eating breakfast Mary spoke up—

"'Maria's just as cross as she can be to-day.' That made me angry, and I answered crossly; and then I was very impatient when Russell asked me about his Latin—so that is the way it has been all day, Mrs. Williams. I never was so impatient and so ugly in all my life, and I asked so earnestly that I might be helped, and I'm sure I asked in faith, just as the Bible says I ought to, and I—"

"You blame God that he didn't help you, Maria?" said I gravely, for her last words had been spoken in an injured, defiant way that troubled me.

"Why, no, of course not that," she answered, blushing.

"What then, Maria?"

"I wasn't going to say any such thing, Mrs. Williams; only I can't see why I didn't succeed, when I was so confident."

"Perhaps that was the trouble, Maria; perhaps you were too confident, not on account of the help Christ was to give, but in your own strength. The Tempter has many artful ways of deceiving us poor weak creatures, and perhaps his method with you today was to make you believe that your strong hopeful feeling was dependence upon Christ, instead of confidence in yourself, as perhaps it really was.

"Humility, you know, Maria, must be very marked in all our intercourse with the great LORD of lords; and perhaps, my dear, it was lacking in your prayer this morning. You know best about that though."

I paused for her to speak, but as she did not, I continued—

"I think that may be one explanation of your failure. There is another. Your prayer you say, was especially that you might be kept gentle and patient. Supposing you offered that prayer in faith and humility, and went down to the work of the day, fortified against those particular temptations; according to your account the temptation did not assail you here; it met you first when you least expected temptation.

"Against love of ease and pleasure you were not so strongly fortified, and to gratify them was your first temptation; that succeeding here, it was easy work to undo what the preparation of the morning had accomplished.

"Here are two explanations, Maria; there may be others—but O, you must remember to put on the whole armor of God. 'For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places;' and how weak we are—how very weak without the whole armor, and with it how strong and confident we may be; but never, never think to blame God for ill-success, for if we do not know just the particular reason, we may know with certainty that some part of our armor has been cast away or forgotten, leaving us at the mercy of our enemy."

Maria was silent for some time after I had ceased speaking, then she said, humbly—

"I guess both of your reasons put together make the right one. I didn't begin the day as I ought, and it is so hard to turn about after one has begun wrong,"—and then after a pause, "I will try to wear the whole armor. How much we do need it! But I must be going, Mrs. Williams, and I'm very much obliged to you for what you've said."

"Now don't go home with a long face, but be cheerful and happy; that's part of the armor, dear."

She smiled pleasantly. While she was putting on her hat, she said thoughtfully—

"It's a great warfare, isn't it, Mrs. Williams? Dont you think we expect to conquer too soon?"

"No doubt we do; we must have patience."

Then bidding me good-bye, she left me alone; and I thought perhaps I might help some other discouraged ones if I just reminded them that the contest we wage against sin is a terrible one, and we all need to have on the whole armor of God, and even then we are such clumsy warriors that we may not expect to come off conquerors at once.—Selected.

BOYS, BEWARE OF TOBACCO.

If a man should tell us that a healthy child could put his system under the influence of a powerful narcotic every day, without permanent injury, we should tell him that he didn't know much—about that. We never saw so many boys smoking along the streets, as now. The practice will reduce the final stature of the boy who begins at fourteen, at least half an inch. It will diminish his physical force in that proportion, and his mental force still more. The boy that smokes can bear trouble better. He can lose his place in a store with less grief. It worries him less to get to the foot of his class. Tobacco is a leather jacket that shields his hide from the lash of adversity. We doubt if there is a business man in Boston so green that he would take a boy that smokes, when he could as well have as good a boy who does not. Tobacco is a source of daily expense, a motive for theft till the boy comes to man's pay. It wastes his blood, for though the parotid glands save the kidneys some work, yet he that makes an urethra of his mouth, must lose from his mouth much that is needed to aid digestion, whereas the kidneys do their own work better, and, in health rob the blood of nothing useful. Man is the most precious crop the Yankee raises, and just now it is scant in quantity. Let it not be inferior in staple also.—Boston News.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this; Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC., . . .	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE, . . .	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT, . . .	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL, . . .	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE, . . .	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY, . . .	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE, . .	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY, . . .	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,) . .	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS, . . .	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST, . . .	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY, . . .	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN, . . .	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM, . . .	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition) . .	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1870. VOLUME VII.--NUMBER 34. WHOLE NUMBER 320.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE POWER OF LOVE.

THE following article we copy from the "New York Herald" of Sunday, May 29, of which JAMES GORDON BENNETT is the proprietor. We do not indorse every expression in the article; but there is more gospel truth in it than can be found in most religious papers of this generation. Coming from the source it does, it ought to shame those papers and ministers who think to win men to the love and service of God by torments in a future life. The fact is there is no element like love to break a hard heart. Men may make themselves and others miserable by an opposite spirit and theory; but if love fails to win men to the ways of righteousness and the service of God, their case is hopeless. Teach them that "We love God, because He first loved us."—1 John iv. 19. An opposite course may sometimes arouse the mind, but it seldom results in any permanent good to the individual. We thank Mr. Bennett for his timely article, and hope other secular papers may follow his example, if the religious ones do not:

FEAR AS AN ELEMENT IN RELIGION.

There is a class of religious teachers, happily not so large now as formerly, who believe that men and women must be either forced or frightened into the pursuit of a religious life. Acting upon this conviction they make the most of such disasters as recently befell the people of Richmond and the Missouri railroad slaughter, upon which they ring sanctified changes oft and again. These terrible disasters are pointed out as so many dispensations of the Almighty to turn us from the error of our ways and to lead us to Himself, and God is pictured more like a fiend, who delights in slaying mankind, than as a Father, who rejoices and seeks to save His children. It is not surprising, therefore, that this style of theology should awaken and bring forth a more liberal and Christian school of thought, wherein the mercy and love of God are made more conspicuous attributes of His character than His insatiate desire for justice and revenge, and wherein He may appear just while He justifies the believer in Jesus Christ His Son.

As an element of religious power fear is the very weakest and most ignoble that can be invoked. Most men are naturally brave, and can face a danger, however great, of whose presence they are made aware. They are every day called to meet danger and death in a thousand forms, each much more real and terrible than any hell that Milton or Dante has pictured, which are real only to human faith and imagination. The history of Judaism is a history of religion begun, continued and ended through the influence of fear; and what facts does it represent? A nation numbering three or four millions of people, born in Egypt, yet owing no allegiance to the land of their birth; held in bondage for several generations by the Egyptians, and then "with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm" Jehovah brought them forth and planted them in their own land. Great signs and wonders had been wrought before them. The choicest and best of Egypt's treasures of wealth and persons had been destroyed, and the departure of the Israelites had been made as awe-inspiring as it could be. At the Red Sea they witnessed the destruction of Pharaoh's grand army, and with its instruments of war they equipped themselves. A journey of about four months brought them to the foot of Mount Sinai, on the summit of which the law was given to Moses, amid circumstances of the greatest reverence and fear. The sacred historian tells us that "the Lord descended upon Mount Sinai in a fire, and the mount was altogether in a smoke, which ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly. And there were thunders and lightnings and a thick cloud upon the mount, so that all the people that were in the camp trembled, and so terrible was the sight that Moses said he exceedingly feared and quaked." But this impression did not last long enough to keep the people from idolatry; for while Moses remained on the mountain top in communion with Jehovah the people made a golden calf and worshipped it, and proclaimed it as the god that had brought them out of Egypt. And Aaron, their high priest, was their leader in this idolatry. For centuries afterward the history of the Jews is but the record of a series of persecutions and deliverances, of sinning and repenting, without any appreciable good results flowing therefrom, until finally God dispersed them to the four winds of heaven; and to-day their enemies, in every country except this, are following the same tack, and striving, by persecutions and repressive outrages, to convert them to Christianity. But the most favorable reports of success show that all efforts in this direction are failures. Fear, as an element in religion, has utterly failed to produce in their minds or in their lives the principles of purity, virtue, goodness, love. And it has equally failed with others also. The converts to Judaism, all together from Moses' time to our own, will not equal in numbers the converts made to Christianity in a single year. The reason is obvious.

We live under a new dispensation. A new covenant—the covenant of love—has been made with us. And "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." While it is true that few men can be influenced to lead a moral or religious life through fear most men can be so influenced by love. It is the great power that guides and controls mankind to-day, and notwithstanding the many national and local broils and tumults that prevail in all the earth there is more of fraternal feeling, of pure sympathetic affection among men to-day than there ever was. The gospel of love has, during eighteen centuries, nearly turned the world up side down and literally changed the face of nature, so that the crooked places have been made straight and the rough places smooth; and by and by, when He whose right it is to reign shall come, the nations of the earth will gladly accept His sway. There is not in the earthly life of Christ a single incident that can properly be construed as indicating any other than the deepest affection for the race and the most earnest solicitude for our salvation. Love was the prominent and controlling attribute of His life and character, and it is by love that His followers must succeed in converting the world. Fear has utterly failed. Men shrink from the idea of being coerced into paths of rectitude by appeals to the basilar part of their nature. The most depraved can be successfully reached by love. The remembrance of a mother's tears and prayers, of a father's kiss of peace and blessing, or the parting adieus of loving brothers, sisters and friends, has saved many a wayward youth from terrible destruction. Even the murderer Reynolds, who was recently executed in this city, was reported to have wept at the mention of his mother's name, and the probable disgrace that his career would bring upon her, while to every other consideration, even the certainty of his own ignoble death, he appeared callous and indifferent. Love is the divinest attribute of earth or heaven; it is the noblest, purest and most enduring: it will outlast every other attribute of our fallen nature, and will outshine them all at last. Love is the fulfilling of the law.

THE JUDGMENT MESSAGE.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

[Continued from last issue.]

OUR text plainly informs us that immediately preceding the great day of God's wrath, a judgment message should be sent forth into all parts of the world, announcing that the hour of His judgment is at hand, and, therefore, the church should not be in darkness that that day should overtake it as a thief.—1 Thess. v. 4.

LIGHT IMPLIED—ITS NATURE.

In consideration of the fact that the church of Christ should not be in darkness regarding the coming of that great day of judgment —a day of salvation to the righteous, of separation from the wicked, and a day of destruction to all evil-doers, we naturally inquire, What is the nature of the light here implied?

In the pages of holy writ we find darkness used metaphorically with various phases of meaning. We have the darkness of sin; the darkness of sorrow; and the darkness of ignorance. The Scriptures manifestly mean, that the church should not be in the darkness of ignorance concerning the approach of the day of the Lord. Though His people should not know the day and the hour of our Lord's advent, yet when they behold the fig tree putting forth its leaves they may know the summer is nigh, even at the door; likewise when we see the signs of Christ's coming distinctively on every side, as we behold them to-day, we know that the blessed morn of everlasting glory is soon to break forth upon the gross darkness of this world's infamous career. Christ condemned the generation of his day because they could predict wet and fine weather from the appearance of the sky at morn and at evening, and yet were entirely ignorant of the signs of the times which so signally marked that age. The pages of inspiration are very explicit in giving the world signs and tokens by which they might know that the great crisis in this world's history is near at hand.

OUR ONLY SOURCE OF LIGHT.

In regard to this subject, the Bible is our only source of light; and the Psalmist even in his day comprehended this when he said: "Thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." —Psa. cxix. 105, 130.

THE USE OF LIGHT.

Light enables one to discover and escape danger, of whatever nature it may be. In the depth of midnight darkness a lamp illuminates our pathway but a little distance before us, but still it affords us sufficient light to tread our way in safety. Thus with revelation: its light is sufficient for our safety, and to enable us to escape the dangers which are immediately before us. We have the grand and increasing light of science of the present age, which measures the sun, contemplates the planets as they revolve in grandeur upon their orbits, and unfolds the wonders of our own globe. But this light does not reveal the destiny of man; it does not unfold the wise purpose of God in creating a world for man's habitation; nor can it manifest the great attributes of his character as we contemplate them in His revealed word, and as manifested in his dealings with man in his fallen state.

THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY.

At the present age, as well as in the ages of the past, there are many false lights, held forth by the enemies of righteousness to deceive and mislead the unwary. But Peter says we have "a sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well to take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day star arise in your hearts." "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Pet. i. 19, 21.

Thousands of years ago God's symbols were chosen for conveying the history of the future to man, and they speak with such clearness that their fulfilment transform the significant hieroglyphics into the literal language of the historic page. And as a writer has truly said, "David's prophetic lyrics, and Christ's lovely parables, Isaiah's celestial anthems, and Ezekiel's glorious symbols, Solomon's terse proverbs, will be recited and admired, should time continue, ages after the foggy abstractions of mystified metaphysicians have vanished from the earth." In the prophetic page are described the rise and fall of kingdoms then unborn, embracing many minute particulars —nations that should arise and ignorantly execute the wise designs of Jehovah. Such predictions are wholly outside of the range of human sagacity. Well may the infidel quail under such a fact as this, and be speechless for an argument wherewith to assail the Bible and its author. The doom of nations is recorded so definitely in the Bible as to dispel all doubt regarding their divine origin, that all men might truly know that the mouth of the Lord hath spoken these things.

Let us for a moment behold Egypt. It was bounded on the south by mountains that defied the march of armies; on the east by the Red Sea; on the west by a burning, trackless desert; and was able to defend herself against the armies of the world. She had maintained her independence and extended her conquests for many centuries, and had given learning, arts and sciences, as well as her idolatry to over half the world. God foretold the downfall of this power at least twenty-five years before she had reached the extent of her mighty fame and influence. Thus spake God: "I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked; and I will make the land waste, and all that is therein by the hand of strangers. I the Lord hath spoken it. Thus saith the Lord God, I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause the images to cease out of Noph, and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt."—Ezek. xxx.

Volney, in his travels, says: "Such is the state of Egypt. Deprived twenty-three centuries ago of her fertile fields, successively a prey to the Persians, the Macedonians, the Romans, the Greeks, the Arabs, the Georgians, and at length the race of Tartars distinguished by the name of the Ottoman Turks. The Mamelukes, purchased as slaves and introduced as soldiers, soon usurped the power and selected a leader. If their first establishment was a singular event, their continuance is not less extraordinary; they are replaced by slaves brought from their original country." The celebrated historian Gibbon also says: "A more unjust and absurd constitution cannot be devised than that which condemns the natives of the country to perpetual servitude under the arbitrary dominion of strangers and slaves. Yet such has been the state of Egypt above five hundred years. The most illustrious sultans of the Baharite and Beyite dynasties were themselves promoted from the Tartar and Caucasian bands; and the four-and-twenty beys, or military chiefs, have ever been succeeded, not by their sons, but by their servants."

It would doubtless be interesting to glance at other predictions of the Bible which are now matters of history, but this is sufficient to show the divine origin of Bible predictions, and the exactness of their fulfilm nt; and therefore inspire our hearts with a deep interest in those mighty events of the future, which now appear upon the divine page as unfulfilled prophecy.

But let it be deeply impressed upon all minds that the foretelling of future events is not the only sign of prophecy; it is the revealing of a part of God's plan to show that Jehovah and not man is the sovereign of this world. Every prophecy thus becomes evidence of His supernatural government. Oh, how God everywhere manifests himself in his precious word!

"Remember this, and show yourselves men,
Bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors,
For I am God and there is none else,
I am God, and there is none like me,
Declaring the end from the beginning,
And from ancient times the things that are not yet done,
Saying, 'My council shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.'"

[To be Continued.]

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May, 1870.

THE CHARGE AGAINST LIFE BELIEVERS.

BY O. F. YALE.

BR. STORRS: How goes on the work? The dear HERALD comes to me weekly, laden with reports from the different parts of the field; some very encouraging, none discouraging. Of this part of the field I have not much report to make. Some seed has been sown and is, I trust, growing. What shall be the fruit, cannot be determined until the winds of opposition shall have shaken it somewhat. God's truth grows best under adverse storms. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." While I see much to encourage us to continued effort, I am not one of those who look for large accessions of numbers to the ranks of Life Believers.

Truth never was popular, and pentecostal conversions are rare in the churches. Nevertheless, I am sure the truth will go onward, until the number of God's elect is made up; and I do want my loved ones to be of that number. I sometimes have occasion to be astonished at the ignorance concerning the teaching of the Bible among those who suppose their hope to be founded on it; and some things are charged against us, which we would suppose some of our opposers might see were false, and which we might return against them with tenfold force. There is one grave charge laid against us, which, if true, ought to cause us shudderingly to relinquish our teaching, recant our error, and humbly to fall down before our Father in heaven, and seek pardon for our great sin.

The Rev. Wm. D. Bridge, under the head of question 4, in the HERALD of March 16, states it thus:

"I am led to doubt the power of the doctrine in question, [the doctrine of a future life only through Christ, and absolute and utter destruction to all not his] to convert souls."

The sum of the charge is this, "You, by failing to place before sinners proper and sufficient motives to repentance, become in some degree responsible for the loss of souls which might have been saved by a faithful and truthful preaching on your part." It is a fearful charge, and must lie with tremendous import against us, if true: if not true, against our opposers. Our standard of appeal is—the Book "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day," saith Jesus.

The law and the penalty. "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17. Did God speak to Adam? Did he speak according to the laws of human language? Is it to be interpreted according to the laws of human speech? Has the record been faithfully preserved? Where, then, is the possibility that Adam could have understood the penalty to be aught else than "extinction of being?" Where is the room for "conscious suffering for sin," in the expressed penalty, "Thou shalt surely die;" with God's own definition of death, "unto dust shalt thou return?" Dare our opposers say to the LORD God, Because you failed to express the penalty according to the imaginings of a Benson, an Edwards, a Spurgeon, or some human terrorist of lesser note, you are responsible for the results of Adam's sin, because he might have been deterred, instead of rushing on madly and recklessly? And yet they do this, by implication, when they charge us with error in preaching "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

The preaching of Jesus. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Why? Because, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." —John iii. 14–16. "No power in this doctrine to convert souls!" say they. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day," saith Jesus.— John vi. 40. Not a sufficient inducement, say they. And Paul, in Rom. i., gives a catalogue of the direst and blackest sins, and says, "They who commit such things are worthy of death:" and again in 2 Thess., he speaks of some, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction;" but, it won't answer, say our opposers; nothing short of the eternal torture in hell fire, where "God will exert all his almighty power to make the sinner's sufferings the greatest he possibly can; and ever increasing throughout the endless ages of eternity," will present a sufficient motive for the conversion of souls.

For myself, I dare not suppose I can improve on God's plan. When the Holy Spirit has given as a motive for "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world," the "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ:" and when the exhortation to "be diligent, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless," is founded on our "looking for" his coming, the dissolution of this existing sphere, and the "looking for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness," according to his promise, and not on conscious suffering after death, I think I may be forgiven for believing, and speaking, and loving the word of God, rather than the traditions of men.

A word about the articles of Br. Joel A. Simons, from the one entitled "The scope of God's purpose, as revealed in the Gospel of the Kingdom," in the HERALD of June 30, 1869 and onward, showing "The nature of the Kingdom," etc. Can we not have them published in similar form to Dr. Finley's articles? I have been hoping some one else would suggest it, who would be able to give "material aid," as I am not privileged to do much, "financially," to aid the spread of truth.

I think they would do good service with the campaign documents, in showing truths that are but little understood by the mass of professing Christians, who mostly, as near as I can ascertain, suppose the earth to be merely a hot-bed to generate souls, that are to be transplanted (at death) to heaven or hell. I know of nothing so concise, having so much in so small compass as these articles, and should like very much to be able to spread them with the others.

A word more to the brethren in our cities and flourishing towns, who by reason of numbers and means are able to pay our preaching brethren, as from Sunday to Sunday they speak of the plans and purposes which proceed from the matchless love of God. You love these truths: it is well. But you are rooted and grounded in them, and there are highways and hedges, where the invitation to the feast has not been sounded. Are you not cultivating a somewhat epicurean delight in the mental part of these truths? Would you not be likely to have as much or more of the Spirit, if you sent out your preacher, to "sound out the word of the Lord," in the dark places, while you come together, and "exhort one another, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching?"

May the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ. Yours, in that blessed hope.

TERRYVILLE, Conn., May, 1870.

THE CONQUEROR'S REWARD.

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Rev. iii. 21.

SURPASSING honor! amazing dignity! incredible exaltation! And yet it is strictly true. It is neither to be "spiritualized" nor explained away as meaning something not literally represented by the words. "The Truth" says it, and he will do it. It is the Great Conqueror's promise to those who conquer by and for him; the Chief Victor's reward to the victors that follow in his steps, and exhibit his spirit, and fight his battles, and remain steadfast to his truth amidst the whirlwind of opposition which loyalty to the coming King occasions in an unholy world, the language of whose heart is, "We will not have this man to reign over us." And what a reward it is! No king of earth ever bestowed such honor upon his favorite. No poetic flight of imagination ever placed classic hero upon such a lofty seat of empire.

Look at it, as steadily as its dazzling grandeur will permit, ye who daily groan being burdened with the infirmities of the mortal state; ye who are sometimes half-tempted to give up all in despair because of the difficulties of the conflict, and the severity of the discipline; ye who experience the pain of being suspected, shunned, and evil spoken of by fellow Christians, because the tradition of the elders and the theology of the schools are nothing to you if the Holy Scriptures have taught you something higher, nobler, more glorious and God-like; ye who are oppressed with a sense of your utter unworthiness to bear the name of the glorious occupant of Jehovah's throne; and ye who are bewildered by the miserable heartlessness in Christ's service of thousands who call him Lord, and the utter failure of all religious organizations, not only to establish righteousness in the earth, but also to prevent the voice of truth from being silenced, in many places where she has a nominal home, by the din of militant theologians, the champions of rival creeds, and the defiant shouts of the Goliahs of unbelief. Yes! look at it until the magnificent reality fill the field of vision, and the surpassing love of the Royal Promiser compel you to fall at his feet in wonder and worship, and to determine, then and there, that you will conquer for his dear sake—throne or no throne the issue, just as he pleases! Let the text interpret itself. It needs no illumination from men. Surely it is bright enough to satisfy the loftiest aspiration without any word-painting of ours. The Lord means just what he says; and we do not think he feels at all indebted to us for making him in a thousand instances —in our great wisdom—mean what he does not say.

The very thought of being enthroned with CHRIST, "the King of kings," when he ascends his own glorious throne in the coming kingdom, is enough, and more than enough, to stir a Christian man's heart to its very depth, and to nerve him with holy heroism amidst the severest trials and sorrows of this preliminary life. The shadowy, flimsy, intangible heaven of common theology is surely a self-condemned absurdity; but the inspired representation of the resurrection life of the Christian "conqueror" gives us something real, substantial, grand, with which the sanctified mind can fully sympathize—work, space, position of which we can form a distinct idea, while all has the unutterably precious commendation of being holy and permanent, and of being flooded with the glory of the Chief Conqueror's presence. He who ascended to the Father in his perfect humanity, will so come as he went—the blessed, beloved, glorious JESUS; and when he sets in order the affairs of his great kingdom, the overcomers for his sake shall have dominion with and under him, and "reign on the earth." Be glad, then, ye patient sufferers for Christ and conscience; hold on; be faithful; fear not. Your reward is great. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

That GOD should elect the kings and princes of the "world to come" from among some of the sons of men whom, by grace, he has already made sons of GOD and co-heirs with CHRIST, is very wonderful, and calls for special adoration and praise; but it is, after all, only in harmony with his revealed character, and his eternal purpose to glorify the Redeemer with a peculiar and transcendent glory. Every available tribute to his unequalled worth and work is not only right and proper in itself, but is also a public recognition of the services he has rendered to the moral universe. Of his followers, then, some are being qualified by peculiar discipline for the principalities and royalties of the pre-determined kingdom and dominion. During all for Christ, they shall reign with Christ. Faithful in a few things, they shall be made rulers over many things. Bold to confess the Rejected One in the face of all opposition, by him shall they be confessed before his Father and the holy angels, when he ascends the throne of the empire that awaits him. The high qualities of holiness, fidelity, self-denial, zeal, wisdom, and moral courage in which they are trained by the Spirit of Christ, will find ample field for exercise in the grand future; and the immortality they derive from their risen Lord will sustain them without weariness in the discharge of their princely functions. They are now at school, and if they knew what God intends by the trying tasks he sets them, they would neither murmur nor grow impatient. Every privation has its meaning, every trial, its import; every bereavement, its lesson; every disappointment, its significance; every storm, its interpretation; and every cross, its result in the world to come. The Father has no pleasure in any one of these things for its own sake. To put his little ones in pain, is no joy to him. If it was possible to make them fit for what he means them to be, and do, and enjoy, without the rough but most salutary school of personal experience, into that school he would not send them; but to take a beggar from the dunghill and set him with the princes of God is not the work of a moment. Such rapid transitions are not according to the mode of working which the Allwise has adopted. A man called from sin, pollution, ignorance, shame, and degradation, with the purpose on God's part to make him a king—not in name, but in truth and in glorious reality—must have much done in him and for him before he can possibly be fit to enter on such a high office. He must be pardoned, justified, adopted, cleansed, educated. Men are trained for the trades and professions of the present life, and the training in each case has, of course, strict respect to the trade or profession which the individual intends to follow. This is simply the dictate of common sense. The necessity of adaptation is its essence; and the recognition of this necessity is intuitive. Men do not reason on such a subject: the true common sense, logical sequence of the premiss is reached in a moment. But shall that universally recognized necessity in the affairs of threescore years and ten be ignored as unnecessary in the immeasurably higher affairs of a millennium? "Not a novice," is one of the laws in relation to the Christian ministry; shall its principle be dispensed with in relation to the co-assessors of the Son of man during the years of righteous judgment? O that Christian men would think, in the light of revelation!

Another word, not by way of exposition, for that we have already disclaimed in this paper, but of suggestion. "To him that overcometh will I grant to set with me in my throne." Who speaks? He who, though he is Lord of all, had not where to lay his head; he who, though he is the Father's Beloved, was despised and rejected of men; he who, though he is the Dispenser of the water of life to all who shall live forever, asked a draught of water from the woman of Samaria; and he who, though he is worshipped by the angels of God, had a couple of wretched thieves as his companions in a shameful death. This is he who distributes thrones, and assigns to the conquerors their different ranks in the royalty of heaven. Now mark the lesson; it will richly repay the thought it demands. Follow Christ, in the life of faith, through humility, and patience, and reproach, and rejection, and death; and when he comes he will give you honor and glory, and immortality. Follow Christ in the spirit of earnest, thorough consecration, and the day of his revelation will be the day of your recognition. Follow Christ, with the settled conviction that the trials of the present are, in reality, tests of the qualifications that will be necessary for high post-resurrection office; and when he chooses the high officers of his kingdom he will say, "Sit with me in my throne."

THE EDITOR.

—The Rainbow.

FROM S. S. CALL.

BR. STORRS: There is a good deal of agitation here on the teaching of the Scriptures. Some claim the teaching to be universal salvation, others claim the teaching to be the destruction of the ungodly at the great judgment day; that all will be raised, the righteous judged and made immortal, then the wicked will be destroyed by the second death. Yet there are others that teach, the Bible declares, the soul that sinneth it shall die. Ezekiel declares in chapter xviii., "For the iniquity which he hath done, he shall die." Paul says, 1 Corth. xv. 3, that he delivered unto them (the Corinthians) first of all, that which also he received, How that Christ died for our sins (not Adam's) according to the Scriptures. Again, he says, Gal. vi. 8, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap"—What? a mortal resurrection? No: he "shall reap corruption." Paul says in other places, he fed them with milk; and that new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word. Now what is the milk of the word? The first thing he feeds the child is milk; and the first of all to the Corinthians, was "Christ died for our sins." This then is the milk they got; and bear in mind, "Christ died once for all."

The controversy between the Universalists and Adventists, two years ago, has resulted as I predicted; it is either universal salvation, or the righteous only will live again. The life views are steadily gaining ground. We have some here that mix water with the milk; the consequence is, the children look starved. Yours in hope.

HESPER, Iowa, May 22, 1870.

GOD did not take up the three Hebrews out of the furnace of fire, but he came down and walked with them in it. He did not remove Daniel from the den of lions; he sent his angel to close the mouths of the beasts. He did not, in answer to the prayer of Paul, remove the thorn in the flesh; but he gave him sufficiency of grace to sustain him.

AMIDST all disorders, God is ordering all wisely and justly, and to them that love him, graciously; therefore we ought not to be dismayed.

W. S. CAMPBELL SICK.

MERIDEN, Conn., June 6, 1870.

BR. STORRS: My father, W. S. Campbell, is here sick with a terrible felon and fever, but now it is hoped he is out of danger. This is the reason of his not filling his appointment at Pleasant Valley. He requests the prayers of God's children in his behalf.

Yours, truly,

MRS. N. H. IVES.

ELD. B. MATTHIAS, writes from "Lanesfield, Kansas:" I wish to visit the East. If brethren or friends, on either route to New York, would like my humble services, on my way, let them address me as above, (Johnson Co.). Not being anxious to make a hurried trip, I could, where desired, stop for days and preach the word. If they write me, I will answer accordingly.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 8, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE DEVIL'S TESTIMONY RECEIVED.

WE thank the "Advent Herald," an "orthodox" Adventist, for informing its readers that the HERALD OF LIFE has "Ruled out" the "Testimony of demons," or devils. We find in its issue of last week the following:

TESTIMONY RULED OUT.

The Herald of Life recently copied an article on "Annihilation" from the Chicago Advance, in which the writer, speaking of the words "destroy," "perish," and the like, says:

"The Bible uses them constantly to denote ruin as to all purposes of use, where annihilation is out of the question: as in the bursted bottles which are said to 'perish,' the 'lost' sheep, and the 'lost' prodigal; none of which ceased to be. So also the declaration of Christ that he 'came to save that which was lost.' In the original Greek the word is the same as is applied to the perishing and destruction of the wicked. So the demons who used it at the time when they said to Christ, 'Art thou come to destroy us?' explained their meaning when they said on a similar occasion: 'Art thou come hither to torment us before the time?'"

The manner in which the editor of the Herald of Life—who has no faith in the existence of "a spirit-devil" or of super-human evil intelligences—disposes of this argument from the question of demons, is more amusing than otherwise. Hear him:

"So far as the testimony of 'demons' is concerned, Christ commanded them to 'hold their peace:' that is, he forbade their speaking, and he would not accept their testimony, whether it was true or false; and we, following his example, exclude all such testimony; it is both worthless and pernicious; so we say to all such, 'Hold thy peace;' you are no witness in the case."

It is obvious that the demons understand the destruction awaiting them to be synonymous with "torment," whether men do or not, and hence their dread of it; and as they uttered the truth when they said of Jesus, "I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God," it is altogether likely they are not mistaken with regard to their own destiny.

So the "Advent Herald" accepts the "spirit-devil's" testimony for truth. Let us talk a little with that paper, admitting for the sake of argument that their "spirit-devil" really exists.

In the first place, the "Advent Herald" has no positive evidence of the undying nature of man, or "man's soul," except that of this so-called spirit-devil. It is, hence, no wonder that believers in that doctrine are anxious to defend his existence and truthfulness. Unfortunately for their main witness, Jesus saith, "He is a liar, and the father of it."—John viii. 44. "Ye shall not surely die," was his first lie; but it seems a later lie, of the same character—if we believe the "Advent Herald"—is positive truth! According to that paper's teaching, the "demons" stick to the old lie; because, it says, "The demons understand the destruction awaiting them to be synonymous with 'torment;'" and it adds, "It is altogether likely they are not mistaken with regard to their own destiny."

Thus, if we credit the "Advent Herald," its devil has become a very conscientious truth-teller. He still holds fast to his first statement, "Ye shall not surely die"—"we shall live forever"—"destruction don't mean to die"—"it is living in torment"—"but that part of the story we kept from Adam till we got him in the trap."

Saith our cotemporary, "The demons uttered the truth when they said of Jesus, 'I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.'" Did Jesus accept that testimony? He did not; and "it is altogether likely" that their statement of their knowledge was a lie; for, "He is a liar, and the father of it." It seems, however, the "Advent Herald" and other "orthodox" papers believe their devil when he speaks to suit them, or in confirmation of their "traditions."

Let us test a little this assumption, that to destroy means to torment. "The last enemy shall be destroyed, death."—1 Corth. xv. 26. Does that mean death shall be eternally tormented? Again: "That through death he (Jesus) might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil."—Heb. ii. 14. Suppose this to be orthodoxy's spirit-devil, that tempted Eve. What saith the LORD God concerning him? Did He not say, The seed of the woman "shall bruise thy head?" Does that mean he shall be tormented eternally? Shall the Seed of the woman be eternally employed in mauling the devil's head, but be unable to kill him, seeing he is "deathless?"

Again: "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii. 8. Does that mean, Jesus was manifested to torment the works of the devil?

Let it be remembered that we do not call in question the fact that the term destroy is used in the sense to "denote ruin as to all purposes of use, where annihilation is out of the question," as "The Advance" says: but that is not its only use; nor the main one; yet if it were, it would not help our opponents; for then the orthodox devil and his associates must be annihilated according to their own showing, because they are "ruined as to all purposes of use," saith "The Advance:" and will it and its orthodox brother the "Advent Herald" tell us if their God can make "use" of that which has no "purposes of use?" i. e., cannot be used for any purpose? Do they believe Omnipotence will be eternally employed in keeping in a living existence those who are useless in His empire? Do they charge their God with such folly? It may be very "amusing" to them to worship such a God, but we do not sympathize with such amusement.

Let us try the orthodox notion of the meaning of the term destroy a little farther. When inspiration saith "Every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth; and Noah only remained alive and they that were with him in the ark," (Gen. vii. 23), are we to understand that "man, cattle, creeping things, and fowl" all went together to the torments of the theological hell? We believe the record as it stands. It may be "amusing" to our "orthodox" brethren to think otherwise.

Again. When the LORD was about to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah, Abraham interceded, saying, "Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?" Did Abraham think to destroy meant to torment? Here is a dilemma for our orthodox friends. "Ten righteous" could not be found in those cities, and the LORD destroyed men, women and children. Does that prove their destruction was only tormenting them, and that their torment still continues? If so, how are our wise friends to escape the conclusion that all the little children of those cities are now in torments and have been for thousands of years, and will be eternally? That may be a very "amusing" idea to orthodoxy in Boston, but we know orthodoxy in Chicago don't relish it; still, it is inevitable from the premises, in both places.

If such a God exists as these orthodox notions represent, we do not wonder they believe in spirit-devils; for their Divinity has attributes that exceed in horribleness those of their devil. Their devil cannot create if he would; and hence cannot produce sensitive beings to torment; but their Divinity can create them for their devil to deceive and torment endlessly! No wonder that thinking men, under the influence of such teaching, turn away from the Bible with disgust, supposing it teaches these horrid ideas held by men who profess to believe and understand that Book. For such teachers of religion we cannot but pray, "Father forgive them; they know not what they do." They virtually "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame" by their traditions.

"Hallowed be Thy name," is our daily prayer to "Our Father which art in heaven." "May Thy name be honored, reverenced, adored and loved by all intelligent beings:" and we know it shall be, for He has said, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD."—Numb. xiv. 21. But never can that day come while the character and government of God, and His "name is continually every day blasphemed" (Isa. lii. 5), by the representations made by His professed friends through the doctrines of inherent immortality or a deathless nature in man, and eternal torments as the portion of any created being. Such doctrines may be very "amusing" to some minds, but we envy not the state of mind that can continue to publish them with the Bible in their hands.

Whether the course of those who receive the devil's testimony, or that of those who have "ruled it out," is the wisest, let the reader judge.

"PREACH THE WORD."

WE give the following extract from a letter received a few days since, without giving the name or place of the author. We give it to call the attention of Life Preachers to the subject, and to ask them if they can feel justified in withholding from the hungry sheep the grand and glorious truth of Life future and eternal, only through Christ? Shall we withhold this truth for fear of giving offence to those who are opposed to it, mainly for the want of proper information on the subject? What if some of them are offended and will not hear us again; is that any more than happened to our MASTER when He preached the great Life sermon of John vi? Did not "many of His disciples go back, and walk no more with him," when He had finished that discourse? and did they not say, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" Is our reputation of more consequence to us, than our MASTER's was to him? Shall we withold what we verily believe to be important truth for fear it may cost us something? Let us have done with all such time-serving spirit; and if they shut us out of their synagogues, let us accept it as a token from our Lord that we are accounted worthy to suffer shame for His name and truth's sake.

The brother we speak of writes as follows:

BR. STORRS: We wish to say, that we cannot do without the HERALD OF LIFE, for we are believers in Life only through Christ the one only true LIFE-GIVER and complete Saviour. There are a precious few of this class here; and they believe it, too, because it is God's blessed truth; but we do not have any sermons on this precious theme; but sometimes our Life Preachers, who come here, weave in a little with their talk for filling, and we are very glad to get a crumb once in a while in these days of apostacy.

We wish it were in our power to go to the place from which the above comes, and give those brethren one feast of fat things. If "Life Preachers" withhold the truth on the subject, or deal it out only in "crumbs," they may expect their light to go out, and God will lay them aside, and raise up others who will do the work fearlessly, yet in love and kindly. Let there be no hiding of this truth by those who believe it. If some take offence others will receive it when they see that you are resolute, and in earnest in promulgating it. A "milk and water" policy never did and never will accomplish any good. Be bold for the truth, and "stand up for Jesus" as the only source of life future and eternal for any of Adam's race. Proclaim it everywhere, lovingly and kindly; but proclaim it fearlessly, and leave "consequences" with God; and leave ourselves in His hands. So shall we be approved of Him.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD.

ADAM'S posterity were made subject to corruption by being excluded from the tree of life, not as a penal infliction on them, but in the wisdom of God, under a new dispensation for that posterity, in which personal sins may be remitted, on repentance toward God, and faith in a promised and given Messiah, or second Adam. On compliance with such terms God promises remission of sins; so that as Messiah could not be "holden of death," because he had never sinned, neither can any who are joined to him by faith, and become "partakers of the divine nature;" death cannot maintain "dominion over" them, because they are members of the life-giving Adam, Jesus Christ, and their sins have been remitted.

Without this LIFE-GIVER, the race of Adam must all perish, or follow the condition of Adam the first, whose nature alone they possessed; and a future life was not, and could not be an object of hope to that nature. Hence all men, without a revealed promise of God, were in total ignorance of any future life, and destitute of any hope of one.

To a race thus situated, God proclaims, as an object of hope, a future life by a revival from the dead, or a re-living; so that death shall not have dominion over any man except by his own choice, or by a neglect of the provision for life, God should in his mercy unfold.

The gospel then, comes to men who are perishing—going out of life without hope of a future one—and proclaims life through Jesus to all those who embrace him—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

Such an announcement was light beyond the grave such as the world had not, till revealed as a gospel benefit—or as a favor from God. It belonged to such, and to such only, as gave credit to the testimony, and governed themselves by the injunctions and commands connected with the proclamation. Such an announcement of future life, by a revival from the dead, made to those who had no knowledge of a future life previously, must have been regarded as a pure gift of God, to be bestowed only on those who complied with the terms specified. In its nature it was not, and could not be, a penal life. It was deliverance from death, or from the wages of sin. Under such a proclamation no idea of a future life at all, unless to the believing and obedient, could have entered the minds of those who heard. The gospel came not with a penalty. It found men perishing through sin, and it offered them life beyond the grave, by a compliance with its demands; but informed them, distinctly, that there is no other name given whereby men can have life, (Acts iv. 12), and that such as neglect this medium should perish hopelessly: be condemned not to see life. They are left where the gospel found them—in their sins; and hence remain under death.

Considering the ignorance of the world about any future life, and that the gospel came proclaiming such life by a revival from the dead, through Jesus alone, it seems manifest that no one is to have such life except as a favor or gift of God; and such appears to be the teaching of the Bible.

That wicked men should ever live again was unknown to the Patriarchs. They looked for another "country, that is an heavenly;" and hence knew it must be by a revival from the dead; for they "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off," etc. They "accounted that God was able to raise up even from the dead."—Heb. xi. 13–19. But such revival they regarded only as the result of promises, not of threatening; and they regarded it as only to be possessed through faith, or a loving confidence in God's promises; hence they were "strong in faith giving glory to God."

Moses in the law informed the people of Israel of great and terrible calamities that should befall them, if they sinned; and he set "life and death" before them, (see Deut. xxx. 19), and called upon them to "choose life;" and assured them that the terrible calamities of which he had spoken would follow them, if they persevered in sin, till they should perish; but he nowhere gave any information of a future life to the wicked, or of any suffering subsequent to death. So far as Moses taught the people, there is not one solitary threatening of revival from death at all; there was no such life, except to the obedient, made known in the law. The Prophets announce no such doctrine. The entire Gentile world were ignorant of any such doctrine. Is it to be credited that four thousand years should pass—from Adam to Christ—and the race be exposed to a revival from death to a life of suffering and hopeless torment, with not one positive statement of it during that whole period, to the millions who were liable to it? We think it wholly incredible, and a high impeachment of the character of our Maker.

Let it be remembered that such was the ignorance of all men—so far as any positive revelation was concerned—up to the time of the mission of Christ into the world. If, then, it is a truth, that the wicked dead are to be made alive, for any purpose, we have a right to expect that he, who "brought life and immortality to light," should announce the fact in plain and positive terms; and in such language as admitted of no more question than that employed to convey the truth of the reliving of those who believe in him. We should expect, and have a right to expect, that the doctrine would be proclaimed often, and in various forms of speech, that none could mistake, and so that there should be no more ground to doubt a future life for the wicked than there is for the righteous. It must not be left to inference; because if they live again from the dead, it is a penal life; and a penalty must not be obscure, or depend on inferences: it must be plain and positive. A reward—a gift of blessings—may or may not be fully and clearly announced, because it is a gratuity; and the receiver is not wronged by its being hidden wholly or in part from him, till he comes into the full possession of it. Not so a penal infliction. Justice requires that the penalty shall be known to the person liable. But, a revival from the dead to a life of hopeless suffering—whether to die again or not—is an awful penalty, if it be one; and cannot justly be inflicted unless clearly made known; yet no such revelation was made known for four thousand years of this world's history; and neither Jesus nor his apostles ever distinctly announced such a fate as a penalty of sin. Some expressions they uttered, it is true, have had such construction put on them; and with the prejudices of our education, have passed as testimony for the truth of such a doctrine. We may find, however, on a careful survey of the whole subject, that it is a popular prejudice, instead of a revealed fact, that there is any life after death except to such as have had their sins taken away, so that death hath "no dominion" over them; but because Christ lives they shall live also, who are members of him.

Death is either extinction of life, or a suspension of the functions of life. Death as a penalty—i. e., as the "wages of sin"—is extinction of life. Such a death none but the unpardoned die; it is the death of those who "die in their sins;" and hence "are perished:" See 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18, and also John viii. 21, 24. Such a death all impenitent and unbelieving men do die; their life is extinct; and they "find it" no more.

Death which is a suspension of life the pardoned believer may die; but his life is not extinct; for it "is hid with Christ in God," Col. iii. 3; and "when Christ who is" their "life shall appear, then shall" they "also appear with him in glory." Their life was not extinct, though for a time its functions were suspended so as not to appear to themselves or others; but they were not dead under the penalty of law.

Such is the difference between the death of one whose sins are remitted and one whose sins are not remitted. "In the name of Jesus," who "rose from the dead," "repentance and remission of sins" was commanded to "be preached among all nations:" See Luke xxiv. 46, 47. Such repentance and remission secured the person's revival into life, as Jesus was raised up from the dead. Without this repentance and remission, "the wrath of God abideth on them," and they "shall not see life." See John iii. 36.

IS GEHENNA IN A FUTURE LIFE?

"That this passage [Mark ix. 43, 48, with Matt. xviii. 8] relates to the doom of the wicked after death, is beyond doubt. We know of no criticism requiring notice, that questions it. We can conceive of no other rational construction in the case. Evidently the words could have had, to the Jews, with their notions of a future state, no other meaning."

SUCH is the language of some of our opposers. We remark, in the first place, these words were not spoken to the Jews, but to the disciples alone. Please examine the context in both chapters. Those disciples had been taught to "beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees" who "made void the counsel of God by their traditions"—of which, the immortality of a soul-entity was one—and the Saviour pronounced them, to their faces, "fools and blind."—Matt. xxiii. 19. The "notions" of these characters seem to be the rule by which our opponents would establish all their propositions, and assume that our Lord practiced deception if he did not use the terms in the Pharisees' sense. But our Lord did sometimes use phrases which they understood in their sense while he had a different one; and did not undeceive them. While standing in the Jewish temple, he said to the Jews—"Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up."—John ii. 19. "Then said the Jews, 'Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?'" Did Jesus tell them they misunderstood him? Not at all: nor was it till after "he was risen from the dead" that the disciples, even, understood that "he spake of the temple of his body." In numerous instances he spake to the blind, self-willed, and proud Jews in a manner they did not understand; nor did he undeceive them, for the obvious reason they would not, like his disciples, ask an explanation. But our opponents assume the position that our Lord's words must, on all occasions, be understood according to the Jewish construction of phrases.

When our Lord said to the Scribes and Pharisees—whom he had called just previous "fools and blind"—"Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell"—"the condemnation of gehenna"—he must be understood, according to our opponents' views as speaking of their "doom after death;" and possibly the Pharisees so understood him. Does it therefore follow that such was his meaning? We think not; and the context compared with Jer. vii. and xix. goes to prove conclusively, to our mind, that such was not his meaning. Our Lord tells these same persons, that upon them "shall come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, all these things shall come upon this generation." He then makes his lament over Jerusalem, and adds, "Behold your house is left unto you desolate." He had charged these Scribes and Pharisees with being engaged in filling "up the measure of" their "fathers'" iniquities; and thus, that generation were preparing themselves for the "condemnation of gehenna." Was that condemnation some "doom after death?" If so, will our opposers give us the law threatening such a doom? Paul tells us "as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law."—Rom. ii. 12. Give us the law, then, that doomed the Jews, for their sins, to gehenna "after death." We fearlessly affirm, there was no such law ever given to the Jews. The gehenna our Lord speaks of, Matt. xxiii. 33, is clearly the same spoken of Jer. vii. and xix. Let the reader examine those chapters, and see if it is not evident the judgments written in those prophecies are what our Lord referred to when he said, "How can ye escape the condemnation of gehenna?" Let him remember that the term Gehenna is from Ge— a valley—and *Hinnom—*a man's name. "The Valley of Hinnom." This valley in former times was used in the worship of Moloch; and when the Jews departed from God they too burned their sons and daughters in the fire, in that valley, to bloody Moloch.—See Amos v. 26; and Jer. xxxii. 35, where God charges the Jews that "they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech." For such sins God threatened the Jews, if they did not repent and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, He would visit them and Jerusalem, and "kindle a fire" there, "and it shall not be quenched."—Jer. xvii. 27. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor The Valley of the son of Hinnom, but The Valley of Slaughter," etc.—Jer. vii. 32–34. Again, Jer. xix. God saith—"Because they have forsaken me" . . . and "have built also high places to Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal" . . . "therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The Valley of the son of Hinnom, but The Valley of Slaughter. And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hand of them that seek their lives: and their carcasses will I give to be meat for the fowls of heaven, and the beasts of the earth; and I will make this city desolate," etc. Now, saith the Saviour to the "fools and blind," viz., the Scribes and Pharisees of his time, "Fill ye up the measure of your fathers" . . . "how can ye escape the condemnation of gehenna?" that condemnation of which God spake by the prophet, just considered. Was this all to take place "after death?" So our opponents may assume; and so might the hypocrites, to whom our Lord spoke, construe it, seeing they had become paganized in their "notions" about souls and a future life by a present immortality; and hence perverted the plainest texts of the Scriptures God had given them. But what right have we to affirm Jesus used the words in their sense, when their sense was a perverted one? Was it not their business to "search the Scriptures," and get the sense from that, and not from their "traditions?" Jesus was responsible only for his own sense in the use of words, especially when that sense was the true Scriptural one. If the Jews had departed from that sense and adopted one of human invention, they must eat the fruit of their own corruption of the words of the Most High. Jesus was under no obligation to instruct them in other than Scripture words, even though they did put a different construction upon such terms than that of their true import. It was their business to learn, by searching the Scriptures, the proper sense of these terms and phrases, and not follow "fools, and blind" corruptors of the words of truth.

Let us look more closely at Mark ix. 43, etc., than our opposers have done. What does the text say? "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to go into hell"—gehenna—"into the fire that shall never be quenched," etc.

The reader will observe the thing to be gained, by cutting off the hand, is life—"to enter into life." Then that which is the loss is life, or failing "to enter into life;" and the figurative agency—fire and worms—denote the sure and certain exclusion from life, by showing the continued "mortality and corruption" of the wicked, and hence their certain and irreversible destruction, as gehenna's fires devoured and destroyed whatever was cast therein.

The text therefore shows that the wicked are corruptible and mortal when this doom is inflicted upon them; and that they do not enter into life, but die—for "the wages of sin is death;" Rom. vi. 23; and "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" Ezk. xviii. 4, 20. Whenever this doom occurs, then, it is inflicted on mortal beings; and the agencies employed—"whether figurative or literal"—make this certain, for immortality cannot suffer nor die; such an idea has no harmony with divine nor human language. Suffering and death are connected only with mortality. To us, it seems truly astonishing that intelligent and thoughtful men should not see that immortality and suffering can no more be amalgamated than fire and water; one or the other must recede—they cannot co-exist. This fact is so plain and self-evident that we shall spend no time in arguing it.

Let the advocates of eternal pain prove the contrary if they can. We regard the idea of an immortal being's suffering as a self-evident absurdity. Hence to claim Mark ix. 43, and parallel texts, as teaching such doctrine is a claim showing an utter destitution of any direct and formal declarations of the immortal existence of the wicked. We find positive reasons for interpreting the language in the text under consideration adverse to the views of the believers in endless woe, and equally adverse to the notion of a mortal resurrection and a gehenna for wicked men thereafter. No such doctrine is taught in the text. The Bible gehenna extends not into a future life, at all, but ends its destroying power in the utter extinction of the being of the sinner at death, by God's decree that they "shall not see life, but His wrath abideth on them."—John iii. 36.

Church Organizations.

THERE are many who have been educated to think a man cannot live a Christian life without joining some so-called church. And some ministers, perhaps nearly all of them, for some reason, encourage this idea; yet we are not found in that class, and most likely differ from many of those who have embraced the view of Life only in Christ. We have never "organized," a church since we left the Methodist E. Church in 1840; believing that all who receive Christ, and are accepted of Him, are by the "Spirit baptized into one body," and that is, "the body [or Church] of Christ." Those thus baptized by the Spirit into the body of Christ, are "joined" to the Church, and constitute the true one. They may, or may not have what is called a "visible organization," but that makes them none the less or more a church. It is not an external organization that makes them such; but the internal grace which makes them of the body of Christ. The external organizations have deceived many souls to their ruin, we fear, by the persons supposing, that because they have accepted a place in them, by the rites and ceremonies of such organisms, they belong to the body of Christ; whereas, they remain ignorant of a true and living union with Christ, and rest in outward observances, which can never give them life eternal; they think more of what has been done to their flesh than of the working of the Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead, and by which only can any man be quickened into eternal life.

In relation to those who embrace the life views, as held by us, we would say to them as Paul said to the Corinthians, in another matter, 1 Corth. vii. 27, "Art thou bound unto a" church, Baptist, Methodist, or any other, with a name of human invention? "seek not to be loosed." "Art thou loosed from a" church, Baptist, Methodist, or any other with such names? "seek not a" connection with any of them.

We have never advised a person, embracing the views we hold, to leave a church where he or she held a relation to it, merely because of having embraced these views, if said church would allow them to remain in peace, "Seek not to be loosed" from it. But do not put your light "under a bushel" for the sake of remaining in their body; for, by so doing you sin against the light God has given you, and your light will be sure to go out; or, which is the same thing, your light will not shine, and others will not be benefitted by it; and thus you will meet with loss, and dishonor the LIFE-GIVER. But if the church is willing you should remain in it as a free person, then remain, using kindness and love among them; speaking of your views frankly, but not forcing them upon others at improper times or in an uncourteous manner. If this privilege is denied you, then leave them, or let them exclude you; in such cases a brother or sister is not bound to such church. Being free from such church, "in our judgment" he or she is better off not to attempt a union with another human organization; you will not find it any more tolerant than those you have left. In these organizations there soon arises some spirit that seeks to control and restrict the actions of its members, and they find they have left one organization to be enslaved by another. Make sure that you have received the Spirit of God, and are thus baptized into Christ; then stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage.

By these remarks we do not wish to be understood as opposing church organizations for such as cannot live without them. It is better to use crutches than not to walk at all; but such will be likely always to walk limping. A living, healthy man, with sound limbs, will be likely to lay aside crutches, or esteem them as a burden, rather than as a help.

Live for Christ; seek the fulness of his Spirit that you may be "filled with all the fulness of God;" and do not be troubled by your want of what is called a "church relation;" you are probably better off without it than with it. Remember, nothing can give you life save union with the LIFE-GIVER—the Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead, working in you. Therefore grieve not the Holy Spirit of God by trusting in any device of man's invention; whether it be organizations or "carnal ordinances," however specious they may seem. Beware of losing the Spirit by the use of any human device. Trust in the living God; watch and pray, and wait for the Son of God from heaven; then will He organize his Church, never to be dissolved or deranged.

LEISURE is sweet to those who have earned it, but burdensome to those who get it for nothing.

An Aged Brother Fallen Asleep.

JAMES CARLESS, Toronto, C. W. "On the morning of March 26, in the 81st year of his age, he gently fell asleep in Jesus," saith "The Christian Journal—Toronto." That paper contains an obituary, rehearsing his life and labors, highly honorable to him. It states that he was born in London, England, Jan. 4, 1790: was converted about 1829: in 1833 he emigrated to Canada: was a member of the Primitive Methodist church. "Possessing more than ordinary intelligence, and no one doubting his piety, he soon found a sphere of usefulness in the Sabbath-school, and subsequently filled the office of superintendent for some years. He was also appointed a trustee of Bay street church, and filled the office of church steward with great acceptance and efficiency. It was also his custom to visit the wharves and steamboats to distribute religious tracts, and speak to men of the things of God."

He held the office of Depositary of the Upper Canada Bible and Tract Societies for near thirty years; and on his retirement, by his own request, on account of his age, in 1868, the secretaries of both societies recommended that Mr. Carless should still be retained in the services of the societies, "To perform such duties as he may be able to render, and to afford such counsel and advice as his long experience and intimate knowledge of its affairs so eminently qualify him to give."

The following is from A. McCord, Esq., City Chamberlain—"I have known the late Mr. Carless for thirty years, and a more upright, honorable and consistent Christian, I never knew. His faithful services as Depositary of the Bible and Tract Societies were invaluable, and greatly contributed to raise these societies from very small beginnings to that of great prosperity and extensive usefulness. He was not a mere official, he had his heart in the work, and every one felt satisfied that so long as he retained his situation, nothing would suffer from inattention or neglect."

Says his biographer, in the paper before us:

"During last summer his health gradually declined, and his once noble form wasted. As the close of the year approached it became evident to himself and his friends that his long and useful life was drawing to a close. But death to him had no 'sting.' Although his pain of body was sometimes very severe, he bore it with Christian patience and resignation to the Divine will. The Bible, which had been his study and rule of life in health, afforded sweet consolation and imparted strength in prospect of death. To the numerous friends, who visited him, his testimonies to the power of Christ to save were the most emphatic and satisfactory. The words of Eliphaz to Job were applicable to this aged Christian: "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full old age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season."—Job v. 26. We can scarcely conceive of the precious golden grain, ripened by the summer's sun, and bowing with its own weight to the earth, being more ripe for the storehouse than our dear old friend was for the heavenly garner. There was such a rich mellowness in his experience, such a calm, unshaken faith in the merits of Christ and the promises of a covenant keeping God; such a blessed foretaste of eternal bliss, and such a sure and steadfast hope of being with Christ forever, as is not often found in life's last hours. Very often while conversed with about Jesus as the foundation of our hopes, and of the rest awaiting him, his hands were raised, tears of joy filled his eyes, and "Glory, glory," the language of exultation, escaped his lips. His mind remained unimpaired till within a few hours of death. . . . He was a Bible reader. This book he read carefully, and studied prayerfully. His mind, like the Bible-house he managed, was richly stored with Divine truth, till, probably, few persons in Toronto were more familiar with its contents. He read the Bible for himself, and formed his own opinions of its sacred teachings, independent of human creeds and ecclesiastical dogmas; and if on some minor points of doctrine he arrived at conclusions differing from those held by many of his brethren in the same church, no one who knew him will for one moment doubt his sincerity of heart in this matter, nor the intelligent firmness with which he held these views.

He was a grateful Christian. Gratitude, which some one has said is bliss, was a prominent ingredient in his cup of earthly joy. He was grateful to his Heavenly Father for the blessings of His grace, and for the manner he had been led by Him through life; grateful for the temporal means granted him; and grateful to his beloved wife and kind friends who ministered to him in his affliction."

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."—Psa. xxxvii. 37.

The foregoing testimony is, to us peculiarly interesting, as the "conclusions he arrived at, differing from those held by many of his brethren," were none other than the great truth of "Life only in and through Christ." We have known him by correspondence for many years. He was an early subscriber for the Bible Examiner, we think at least twenty years ago, and possessed himself of all our books, pamphlets, and tracts, and has been a subscriber for the HERALD OF LIFE from its first issue, uniformaly taking two copies and paying liberally for them. We can hardly restrain our tears at the thoughts that we are to receive no more communications from him, till the resurrection: but that is not far off; then he will "come again from the land of the enemy," and "the last enemy, death, shall be destroyed." If Jesus does not return soon, we expect to sleep with our brother, ere long; and trust, through grace, to sleep with him in Jesus. May our gracious God and our Redeemer enable us to work while the day lasts, and we be found prepared for the kingdom of God when our Lord shall return in His glory; so "that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with Him, who died for us," (1 Thess. v. 10), but is risen again, to die no more, and is "the first-fruits of them who sleep" in Him; the pledge that, though they die, they shall live again, and be the children of God by being children of the resurrection.—Luke xx. 36, and 1 Corth. xv. 20, 23.

"What is Truth?"

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

THE Master said, "I came into the world that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. Pilate saith unto him, What is truth?"

That is an important question, Pilate; and we think a correct answer can be arrived at; for Jesus said to those Jews which believed on him, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Many in these days say, "It makes no difference what a man believes, if he is only honest and right at heart." We think this statement is not of God; that it is simply incorrect. Would Jesus have exposed himself to insult and death in contending unflinchingly, as he did, for the truth, and in laying the axe to the root of human traditions if it made no difference what a man believed? We think not. We know he would not, for he feared death, and prayed earnestly to be saved from it; still, prayed in submission. Read his simple statement when his life was pending before Pilate: "I came into the world to bear witness unto the truth." See in the eighth of John how he stands up for the truth. Search his whole teachings, and then say if it is immaterial what a man believes.

The above matter has been on my mind a great deal the last few months. I have been round amongst those of different sects considerable, and have seen how determined each one was for his way. His way was the way to heaven. All others were wrong.

A little of my own experience, if it is not out of place. I once believed in the main part just as they do. I was zealous, untiringly so. It was my every day study how I could save immortal souls. I suffered torment in believing in eternal torments; still studied my Bible on my knees daily. The difference of opinion amongst professed, and all seemingly honest Christians afflicted me greatly, and I cried out in bitterness of spirit, Lord who am I to believe? Who has the truth? The answer came. "The anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie; and even as he hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." On that spot, on my knees, with the open Bible before the Lord, I accepted that teacher; thenceforth to search the word for myself, having the Spirit for my guide. But then little dreaming the way I was to be led, that I was to suffer the loss of all things, even my good Christian name, that I valued so highly. But now I count it all dross, nothing, vanity, that I may win Christ, and have my name in the Book of Life, so I may attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

But to return, I went on daily reading my Bible on my knees, and daily laboring for souls; and thought I was doing well. By and by, I was introduced to the "SIX SERMONS;" but I had "never eaten anything common or unclean," and could not even look at them. Still all the time praying, "What is truth?" Three or four more years and the question was asked me, Do you know there is not such an expression in the Bible as immortal soul, or deathless spirit, or never dying soul? This roused me. I went directly to the Bible, expecting to find it on every page; but no, not there. Try another; no not there; try all over, now. No, not there; and what was my amazement! Had I, and the good, learned ministers been believing a fable? Impossible! Still, here is the Bible, and it is not in it. What can I do? Hold on to what I now know is a heathen fable! a fabrication of man? No! I let it go. It was the keystone of my beautiful structure, but it fell, and the rest began to crumble.

Next came the reliving of the wicked. I thought the Bible taught that, but was wrong before, and would not say much until I investigated. I never fought the doctrine, but quietly and prayerfully examined; then after some months it came all plainly to me. Future life is conditional; future life is through Christ; the wicked are not in the conditions of the gospel; the wicked are not in Christ, therefore, there is no future life to the wicked.

On commencing the above I did not expect to go off on personal experience; but here it is. If it is not worth publishing I shall not be offended: throw it aside. But I have been grieved to see how professed Christians would follow blind leaders and ignore the only true teacher.

A man said to his minister a few weeks ago, while this question was being agitated, "If death don't mean cessation of being or loss of life, tell us what it does mean." The wise above what is revealed minister, told him, "It means separation of soul and body;" and so the man believes him. Is that the truth? Would that man have believed him if he had said so with regard to a plant, a tree, a lower animal? No! he would have used common sense. But the other is Popery, nothing else.

They have succeeded, in throwing a mist, a vail, over the Scriptures, or rather over the people's eyes, and so are blind leaders of the blind. Ministers how can you do it? The Bible don't teach the immortality of the soul. You cannot produce a single instance of it in the whole Bible! Neither can you prove any future life except through Christ.

But we "need not that any man teach" us. There is a true teacher, even the Spirit of truth, and a sure guide book, the precious, blessed Bible. If they cast us out, never mind, our forerunners have shared the same fate; "after they were illuminated they endured a great fight of afflictions;" were "Made gazing stocks, by reproaches and afflictions." Let us be "companions of them that were so used."

But the reward is not far distant. Our Elder Brother is coming soon. Things are ripening richly. O to be found in him in peace, without spot, and not be ashamed.

RACINE, Wis., May 22, 1870.

"God is Love."

"GOD is Love." What a beautiful expression! How extensive; how lovely! What could be expressed more beautiful? It is a sentence which will kindle love for our heavenly Father, even in the coldest heart. Having read a little tract sometime past, my mind was deeply impressed with its contents, which were very interesting, and I think true. It called my thoughts into action and awakened my cold heart to new sensibilities. Since that time this beautiful and touching sentence seems to be expressed from everything in nature. The deep water as it glides slowly on its way seems to murmur, "God is love;" and the noisy brook as it dashes o'er its pebbly bed seems to echo forth the same language, "God is love." "Fair Cynthia," as she sits on her throne of blue, shedding her soft mellow light, expresses that same sweet sentence, "God is love;" and the myriads of little worlds which beautify our firmament all seem to join in the expression as they twinkle, "God is love."

Take a stroll in the wild forest, every spear of grass, every tiny floweret, leaf, bud, sprig, and branch, and even the giant oak as its lofty branches wave in the breeze all alike seem to speak in living language, "God is love." The little warblers as they sit on their high perches, make it part a of their song. How can any one consider this, and not at the same time feel stronger emotions springing up in their heart for our heavenly Father? What a great pleasure those three little words afford! It is a continual feast to me.

When everything else speaks this beautiful language, can't we, who claim to be the most noble of God's creation, express it in some way? We can't expect it of those who think God created man to torture millions of ages, etc. Ah! that is what is wrong; man hasn't the opinion of God he should have. I once thought God thus cruel; but thanks be to him, I have new light and love. Some people say, "If I thought there was no punishment but death, I wouldn't try to be a Christian." The case is quite different with myself. The idea, "God is love," creates new love in my heart. I don't desire to be a Christian through fear of an awful hell, but through love for that just, kind, and merciful God.

H. A. FARMER.

BULL'S GAP, Tenn., May 23, 1870.

"THE WICKED DEAD: OR, Statements, Explanations, Queries Answered, and Expositions of Texts relating to the Destiny of Wicked Men. By the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE.

This Tract of 24 pages, No. 18 of the "Campaign Documents," will go to press in a day or two. PRICE, two cents: postage to be added; viz., 2 cents on seven copies, or on any number less.

One hundred dollars wanted, and can be used profitably, to scatter this tract gratuitously. Who will help do it?

From Thomas McClary.

BR. STORRS: I see by the last HERALD OF LIFE that you propose to publish a new tract on the Life question. You solicit donations to enable you to do the work; to this appeal I most cheerfully respond to the amount of $10, which I enclose in this letter, and trust you will not lack the necessary means to prosecute the work with vigor, viz., the glorious truth of Life only for the righteous, to be given to them (not at death) but at the appearing of Jesus Christ: all others to remain in the congregation of the dead; not to be eternally tormented, as popular theology has it. We, as a people, have a precious truth which the world as yet know but little about; we ought to do what lies within us to bring this precious truth out prominently before the public. The so-called church is holding to much for truth that is only error and superstition. There would be many more seeking after God, and a knowledge of his ways, if they could only divest themselves of the idea that they have immortal souls that can never die. If they could only get the true knowledge, as the Bible reveals it, that God only has immortality, would they not begin to seek for it, by patient continuance in well doing, looking for the mercy of God unto eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Love to all the brethren, whom I love for the truth's sake, believing me, yours in Christ.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 29, 1870.

From O. O. Rogers.

BR. STORRS: I have been in the lumber region in the Adirondac mountains, in the State of New York, the past winter amongst very rough people, and some of them very unprincipled, with none of Father's children to converse with; yet I felt and realized the blessedness which our Saviour spake of when he said, He was not alone, for the Father was with him. Blessed be his name forevermore; yea, Hallelujah to Jesus' name forever. Amen. Yes, brother Storrs, even those rough men would cease their evil communications while in my presence, and some would say to their fellows, "That is a singular man." Some would say, "He is a good man." Some would say, "He has a very strange faith, we heard him pray when he was out alone at such a place;" and they would name different places, where unknown to me, they had overheard me whilst I conversed with my God alone. Blessed be his name; yea, he hath greatly blessed and prospered me while all around me were entire strangers; yet in some places I found a few that loved the Lord; one a brother Merrill, a steward in the Methodist E. Church in Elizabethtown, Essex Co., who informed me of a sister, a Mrs. Wilson, who was a Second Adventist, yet was not clear upon the doctrine and belonged to the church and rather kept her ideas to herself, and I had some talk with the brother about our paper, and promised to send it to him for three months. I think the last paper with your editorials, is a mine of wealth, in and of itself. Please send it to him.

Since I returned home, I have had a feast of fat things reading my HERALDS, as I had a pile of them on hand then. Thanks to our Father for the letters sent to the paper. Be faithful to the Lord brothers and sisters, and stand in your place with your heart full of love to God and to his dear children, which is an evident token that ye are his disciples when ye have love one to another. There is no envy in love; there is no hatred in love. Except ye have the spirit of Christ ye are none of his. Did Christ ever show the spirit of envy or hatred, or get up an accusation against himself, whether false or otherwise, and report it of a brother, or any one else? Did he join in any such vile and unholy practices? We have no record of such things against him, so it must be unchristian in man. Brethren and sisters guard well against such things; never let such things arise in your heart, and avoid all communications and all practices that will cause the world and all others to speak reproachfully of your course to the injury of the cause of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; but be as Moses was, faithful in all his house. Yea, and try with all our powers and energy to secure the righteous man's reward; yea, good Lord, help me, and all, so to walk that we may win the approval of our Redeemer, and so get our crown, and thereby secure our lot in the inheritance with our father Abraham, when he gets his, which will be when our LIFE-GIVER comes to give reward to the prophets and to all who are honestly and truly his by faith in him, and good works for him, which will insure us in the Life company, with a policy whose stamp will be the seal of God in our foreheads and a capital that will never fail, for it is secured by the word of our God which is sure though all else shall fail; yea, bless his name forevermore: amen and amen.

Brethren and Sisters, do we truly value the goodness, the greatness, the richness and the costliness of the promised inheritance to the chosen and faithful of our God and of his Christ? Glory to God. Hallelujah to the Lamb.

Yours as ever in the love of God and the waiting for his Son from heaven, to change our vile body and make it like his glorious body, to dwell with him in his immortal and everlasting kingdom.

BETHEL, Vt., May 30, 1870.

Appointments.

CHARLESTOWN, Mass., eve., June 9.
LYNN, Mass., eve., June 10.
PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sunday, June 12.

S. W. BISHOP.

AMHERST, June 12.
HAMDEN, June 19.
KENDUSKEAG, June 26.

L. WETHERBEE.

NEW YORK CITY, Cooper Institute, (Room 24), June 12.

W. S. CAMPBELL.

BRADLEY, Me., Sunday, June 12.

GEO. W. BROWN.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—M. M. Markham, J. Chandler, C. N. Wixom, B. C. Simonds.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—John B. Cousart.

VARIOUS SUMS—Chas. Wesley Morse, $5 on pledge; John E. Jones, $5; C. C. Chase, 50 cents; George U. Lewis, $1 50; R. L. Johnstone, $1 20.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Abel Larkin, Chas. Hartough, Horace Story, J. Douglass, John Hayes, A. W. Durkee, A. Boynton.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. W. DURKEE.—We regret the failure of No. 30 to reach you. We send again to each subscriber in Lake City.

Jesus the Resurrection.

Fain would "my soul prolong
The never ceasing song."
Jesus, whom God the Father gave,
His own begotten Son,
The dear anointed one,
To save us from the dreary grave.

The Holy One came down
To purchase us a crown,
Of endless joy and righteousness;
With sinners lived and died,
But rose, the Glorified;
And lives, the Conquering Prince of Peace.

These eighteen hundred years,
With longing hopes and fears,
His saints have waited his return;
But falling, one by one,
Each in his turn laid down
To sleep, while living brethren mourn.

But now the day rolls on,
When the Bridegroom shall join
In bands of holy wedlock pure,
His dear translated Bride,
And place her at his side,
A union ever to endure.

Though deep beneath the ground,
The penetrating sound
Of His dear voice shall reach the dead;
And wakened by the sound,
With an electric bound,
They leap with joy to meet their Head.

Hail! resurrection morn;
God's people newly born
To life, and endless holiness,
Shall walk the golden street,
With unpolluted feet,
And Jesus with loud harpings bless.

"Then, Oh my soul, prolong
The never ceasing song
Jesus my life, my joy, my theme,"
May all my future days
Be spent in prayer and praise,
To him who shall from death redeem.

J. A. Pearce.

Pawling, N. Y., May 13, 1870.

First Death and First Resurrection.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection."—Rev. xx. 5.

I shall not attempt to give an explanation of this most difficult chapter of the Apocalypse. Suffice it to say, a few things are certain; viz., there is no evidence that the angel in the first verse is Christ; or that they, that sat on the thrones of the fourth verse, were the righteous martyrs. But in some sense there was no resurrection during the thousand years; and it is equally certain that the first resurrection took place at the end of a certain thousand years; and that there are two periods, each of a thousand years in the chapter is as certain as that there is one. The first thousand is past. This was clearly shown by Br. Wolcott, a few years ago, in an article which ought to be republished. The second thousand is future, during which those of the first resurrection will reign with Christ. That the whole chapter is highly symbolical, there is no doubt, and it is not safe to build a doctrine on it.

The first resurrection looks very much like the reformation which broke out at the end of the thousand years of persecution, and was the first this side of it. At any rate, it is a figurative affair, and is Life from as figurative a death; for there can be no first resurrection without a first death.

The first object, therefore, will be to find the first death. And, "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all (men) have sinned." "Sin when finished bringeth forth death." All admit that man would not have died had he not sinned. And on a little reflection all may see that he would not have returned to dust had he not first died a moral death, which also came by sin. So sin brings moral death; and moral death brings bodily death. Here lies the difficulty; all men are morally dead in sin, and this is the reason why they die bodily. Moral death is a consequence of sin, and the first condition of man's fallen state: this is the first death; and the death which destroys his entire being, is the penalty of sin; this is the second death. This penalty being passed upon all men, all must perish forever in the second death like natural brute beasts, if there is no way provided to raise them from this moral and universal death. This is the first great object to be accomplished by the gospel as will be shown hereafter.

The Jews considered all men as dead except the righteous worshippers of the true and living God. And that they were not mistaken appears from the following—"Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead."—Matt. viii. 22. "This thy brother was dead and is alive again."—Luke xv. 32. "Because we thus judge that if one died for all then were all dead."—2 Corth. v. 14. "For to be carnally minded is death."—Rom. viii. 6. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." This is the first resurrection. John v. 25. "Whereas he saith, Awake thou that sleepest and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Eph. v. 14. In John viii. 12, this light is called the light of life. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John v. 12. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."—1 John iii. 14.

These texts are quite sufficient to show that the first death is the first state of fallen man; from which, if there is no first resurrection to a moral life in Christ, the case of a sinner is as hopeless as that of a beast. But there is a hope; but it is conditional; and these are the conditions, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. The hour is coming and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live."—John v. 24, 25. To hear, believe, and obey the gospel, is to pass from death unto life; that is, from moral death to spiritual life in Christ, by the first resurrection. The same is brought to view in Eph. ii. 1. "And you hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and in sins. But God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Verses 4–6.

There is, therefore, nothing more evident than that those who are alienated from God by wicked works, are doomed by the law to utter destruction, and are dead in the language of inspiration; for God calls things that are not in the present tense as though they were. Thus to prove a resurrection, our Lord referring to what was said to Moses at the bush, viz., "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob;" said, "God is not the God of the dead but of the living, for all live unto him." —Luke xx. 37, 38. Matt. xxii. 31, 32.

Now here is a plain case. There are two classes of people; and God is the God of one class which proves the resurrection of the one class, because they are said to be alive while their bodies are dead; their eternal life being hid with Christ in God. But he is not the God of another class; which proves that the other class will have no resurrection, because they are said to be dead while their bodies are alive; having no future life hid anywhere. This is the true difference between the two classes. So it is impossible to make the Saviour's language prove the resurrection of one class, without making it prove the non-resurrection of another class; or else God is the God of both classes. So God is not the God of those who have no part in the first resurrection, for they are dead. The second death has dominion over them and will never release them.

As, therefore, the pall of moral death is spread over all mankind, from which, if there is no first resurrection, all will pass into utter annihilation. It is, therefore, the all important object to seek that resurrection. And Peter, in his first epistle, informs us by what means it may be brought about. Speaking of the Gentiles he says, "Who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that were dead, that they might be judged according to man in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."—1 Pet. iv. 5, 6.

The object of a preached gospel is, therefore, according to Peter, to bring men to judgment. If they believe and obey, they live according to God in the spirit. This is the first resurrection. But if they disbelieve and disobey, they die in their sins, and death holds them eternally, without intermission. This is the second death. The same is expressed by Paul in other words. "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. viii. 13.

Living after the flesh is the first death, leading to the second; and living after the Spirit is the first resurrection leading to the second. No doubt the Lord referred to the second death when he forewarned us whom we should fear—"But rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

But the subject of life and judgment is more fully set forth by the Lord himself in John v. Christ had healed a man on the Sabbath, for which the Jews upbraided him, and sought to kill him, and the more so, because he called himself the Son of God.

Here it is evident they entered into judgment against him; judging him not worthy to live. But he turned upon them, showing them that they had gone beyond the Almighty; for he judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all men should honor the Son as they honor the Father. And he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which hath sent him. The Jews honored not the Son, therefore, they honored not the Father; consequently their pretended zeal for keeping the Sabbath was not so much to honor the God of the Sabbath, as it was a pretext to condemn their Messiah. And that he was abundantly able to judge them, he does not fail to show—"The Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." That is, he has Almighty power and wisdom, and is, therefore, a competent judge. Next: "For as the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Quickeneth whom he will, by implication, proves that there are some whom he will not quicken; and what of them? They will never be made alive.

But he goes on still further to show how, and to what extent men will be judged by his gospel. In the 24th verse, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation but is passed from death unto life." This is the first resurrection, and a corresponding judgment passed—"And shall not come into condemnation." The 26th and 27th verses, show the power he has to give life, having it in himself; and also to reaffirm his right to execute judgment. And the 28th verse is the hour of the 25th verse, continued on until all the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of man by his gospel, and they that hear shall live. This is the first resurrection, continued on untill the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, or, unto the end of gospel times. And they that will not hear shall also come forth to judgment, and to condemnation; for now, under the gospel, is the judgment of this world, or age. See John xii. 31; also Mark xvi. 15, 16. "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Now when the gospel is preached in all the world to every creature, all in the graves will hear his voice, and will thereby be brought forth to the judicial judgment now going on.—John xii. 31.

Having shown what is the first death and the first resurrection, and that those who reject the offer of the first will have no resurrection at all, the next object will be to examine some of the arguments advanced to maintain the bodily resurrection of all the wicked dead.

One is, "We do not die here for our own sins, but for the sin of Adam;" hence the conclusion is, "the wicked must be raised to life, to die for their own sins." But the premises are not true. No evidence can be given why any should die for Adam's sin more than for the sin of any one else. God is Love, goodness, and justice; but there is neither love, goodness, or justice in requiring one to die because somebody sinned thousands of years before he was born. Nor do we sin because Adam did; else he ought to bear the whole weight of all our sins, which would be a bigger load than he could carry. But we sin because we are all inclined to in and of ourselves, and not because Adam gave us the inclination. The human family consists of individuals all alike; and when tested, all prove sinners; Christ only excepted.

But admit the wicked die here for Adam's sin, and live the second time to die for the sins of this first life. Then if they sin again in the second life, they must live again in the third life, to die again for sins committed in the second life, and so on ad infinitum; this is the "death that never dies." Or if they do not sin after being raised, they will be righteous, and must all be saved. So the doctrine drifts into restorationism, or the manifest injustice of God.

But as to men dying here for Adam's sin, the Scripture settles that without controversy. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for that all have sinned." Not because Adam sinned, but because all men have sinned.

Another argument is, "It is necessary that the wicked should be raised to see what they have lost." But they have the word of God here to tell them what they will lose if they do not repent and believe; but they do not see it nor believe it; and for this reason they die sinners, and when they are raised to life and compelled to see and believe it, they are righteous and ought to be saved, yet are damned. This is die twice logic; every batch of which is labelled, inconsistency. First the wicked dies, because he does not believe; and then he dies again because he does believe! Well this will do, so far.

[To be Continued.]

No Singing, No Preaching.

A story is told of an old New England pastor, Dr. Emmons, who, it was said, was no great lover of sweet sounds, and religiously excluded from his meeting house all instrumental music, except a little mahogany-colored wooden pitch pipe of the size of an "eighteen mo." book. A member of his choir had learned to play the bass viol, and anxious to exhibit his skill, early one Sunday morning most advisedly introduced his big fiddle into the singing gallery. After the first prayer was ended, and the doctor began to handle his "Watts," the bass viola lifted up his profanation, and trying his strings, instantly attracted the doctor's attention. He paused, laid down his hymn book, took his sermon from the cushion, and proceeded with his discourse, as if singing was no part of public worship, and finally dismissed his congregation without note or comment. The whole choir were indignant. They stayed after the meeting, and all the girls and young men resolved not to go into the "singing seats," at all in the afternoon, and the elders who did go there, bore the visages of men with minds made up. Service began as usual in the afternoon. The doctor took his book in his hand, looked over his spectacles at the gallery, and saw only a few there; but, nothing daunted, read a psalm and sat down. No sound followed, no one stirred, and the "reader," looked up in utter unconsciousness. After a long and most uneasy silence, the good man, his face somewhat over flushed, his manner rather firm, read the psalm again, paused, then re-read the first verse, and pushing up his spectacles, looked interrogatively at the gallery. The leader could bear it no longer, and, half rising, said decidedly; "There won't be any singing here this afternoon." "Then there won't be any preaching!" said the doctor, quick as thought; and taking his cocked hat from its peg, he marched down the pulpit stairs, through the broad aisle, and out of the house, leaving his congregation utterly astounded. We need not inform our readers that the big fiddle was not used in the "singing seats" afterward.

An aged lady of Boston recently said to a sensational preacher, "I hear no preaching now that reminds me of that which I attended in my earlier years, when every sermon made me feel that I had a soul to be saved, and that my pastor had a yearning desire for the salvation of his hearers. I presume the literature of the modern pulpit is of a higher order, and the theology may be as sound, but I do not see that preaching is as impressive or as effective in conversions as it formerly was."—Zion's Herald.

Personal Religion.

These thoughts may not be very new, but they are pertinent to every human soul:

A vague undefined belief in religious matters is of no use to any of us. What we want, and what we must have to satisfy our spiritual needs, is such a faith in, and love for, our Master and his cause, that our daily lives shall be pure and sweet, and living sermons in themselves. It is not the words we speak directly for Christ which do our greatest work, though if these be spoken for the same reason the brook sings, because it must, there is little danger of their falling useless. It is the way we look when something crosses our will, the way we answer when our rights, or what we fancy to be such, are invaded, the way we treat those who have spoken ill of us—ah! if we have grace in our hearts, if we have really a hold upon even the hem of the Master's garment, those about us will certainly know it. We may fail in our endeavors, but the love glowing and burning like a beacon star in our hearts will surely lead us again to the Master's feet for pity, and for help. It is the Lord himself who bade us be so forgiving toward our erring brother. Shall he do less by us? He remembers we are but dust. Never a true penitent comes to him in vain. Let us try if need be, over and over again, and so long as sin is not pleasant to us, we are certainly not wholly gone; only he has a right to expect that we shall not be a life-time in learning the alphabet. We are to go on, and we shall if we are true disciples.

L. V. S.

—The Advance.

A Noble Reply—A very poor and aged man, busied in planting and grafting an apple-tree, was rudely interrupted by this interrogation: "Why do you plant trees who cannot hope to eat the fruit of them?"

He raised himself up, and leaning upon his spade replied. "Some one planted trees before I was born, and I have eaten the fruit: I now plant for others, that the memorial of my gratitude may exist when I am dead and gone."

He that thinks he hath no need of Christ, hath too high thoughts of himself; he that thinks Christ cannot help him, hath too low thoughts of Christ.

The child of God will soon know the full import of all the precious promises; the wicked will soon know what is meant by the terrible threatenings of God.

Bleeding Piles.

Wm. Forrester, Dundee, N. Y., writes: I find Mullen leaves an excellent remedy for bleeding piles, to be used closely on going to bed, and remain till morning. Some have been entirely cured by them.

Children's Department.

A True Story of a Naughty Boy.

BY HIS TEACHER.

I will call him Ishmael as I write of him (though that is not his name), for he is wild and his hand is against every one, and every one's hand against him, (the latter, generally, with but too much cause.) But I give him that name for a reason dearer to my heart; Ishmael means, "God will hear;" so for my Ishmael there is hope, for we pray, both he and I and God will hear.

One summer morning, his father said to him at the breakfast table, "Ishmael, you are to hoe the hill-side lot to-day."

"I don't want to work on the farm," he answered rudely. "I'm going to school."

His father repeated the order, but the boy, starting up from the table, refused, adding insolently, "Neither you nor anybody else can make me do it, if I don't want to."

"You take the hoe and go to your work, or I'll flog you!"

"I guess I shouldn't have the worst of it, if you tried that," he answered with a scornful and defiant laugh. No wonder he was instantly collared, and soundly whipped. No wonder that his father whose temper was as hot as his own, punished him with severity and even violence, using hasty and hard language, and, when he escaped from the lash, pursued him with threats and curses.

So he went out of the yard, angry and defiant, vowing never to return.

There were two hours yet before school, and he spent them in the woods, allaying the heat of body and mind in their cool silence. After school he went away to play with other boys, and a plan was proposed for robbing a melon patch that night. "Not this evening," said Ishmael, "for I'm going to Miss Ellen's. She has promised to show me about the sums you all did last week when I was out working on the farm."

The boys had found it was of no use to try to persuade or laugh him out of any engagement with me. So they deferred the theft till the following night to accommodate him; and to me he came. He told me when the lesson was over, that he had left home. He cried, for he was hungry and forlorn, but when I told him that he ought to go home at once, and confess that he was wrong, he dashed away his tears, set his lips firmly, and declared he would starve to death first. My heart ached for him, and I longed to give him food and shelter, but I knew he ought to be left to feel that "the way of transgressors is hard;" so I let him go, and he went supperless to sleep in a barn. He had dined on an apple and a couple of crackers which a boy gave him.

Next morning when I was starting for school, I found him waiting for me at the door. He had had no breakfast so I gave him some, and we went to school together. He did not give me much trouble there for he was too spiritless and dejected for his usual mischief. He was just as obstinate as ever in his refusal to return home.

That evening he went with Jack Peters and two other boys, and stole the melons, and so involved himself in still deeper disgrace and trouble; for he was discovered and the angry owner went to his father demanding redress.

"I have not a cent to pay with," said the father, "and I wouldn't pay it for him if I had."

"Then I'll put the young rascal in jail!"

"Well, the law must take its course."

The next day was Saturday. There was no school. It was a dismal, rainy day, and the poor little wretch had no where to go. So he came to me. "Ishmael," I said, "you must go home. There is nothing else for you to do."

"I cannot do that," he replied.

"What do you intend to do?"

"I don't know," he said, the tears running down his cheeks, "if I had my clothes, I'd go to the city and get a place, or go to sea; but I cannot go in this way." And indeed he was not a presentable object in his torn farm-clothes, and broken, muddy shoes.

"There is only one thing for you to do," I repeated. "Come home! I will go with you."

"No," he said, "I can never go! I wish I had gone yesterday!" Then he told me about the melons, and of the prospect of his being sent to jail.

"Come home my child," I said, "and I will take care of that."

But he would not, and turned reluctantly away into the rain, wet, and cold, and hungry. I called him back.

"Have you had anything to eat since yesterday morning?"

"Only that melon."

So I gave him bread and butter and a cup of tea, and then dismissed him and stood looking after him almost in despair.

Early in the evening he came again. The rain storm had cleared away beautifully. I put on my hat and shawl and went to the door to meet him. "Ishmael," I said, "I'm going to see your mother. Come with me."

"Oh, Miss Ellen, I cannot!"

"Well, come part way with me, just for company." As we passed the house where Jack Peters lived his mother came out and poured a torrent of abuse on Ishmael for having led Jack off to steal melons, for which she had now to pay. "It was Jack took me," said Ishmael, and would have said much more, for he was growing angry, but I held his hand tightly, and whispered, "Don't say a word!" and I answered for him, and we passed on down the quiet lane. The moonlight brightened one side of it, and threw deep shadows along the other, where trees and bushes leaned over the way. No persuasion would induce him to take a step beyond an old elm tree some little distance this side of his home. "I will wait for you here," he said, and I went on alone into the kitchen where his father and mother sat, and talked with them about their wayward boy.

The father was still angry, but when I said the child was afraid to come back, he replied,

"He need not be, for I shall not touch him."

When I left the cottage the mother walked up the lane with me, for which I was heartily glad. When we came near the elm-tree, I knew he must be lurking somewhere in the black shadow, and I called him. He came out.

"Ishmael," said his mother, "how could you go away and leave me to do everything alone?"

"I won't go back! I'll never go back!" he cried passionately. "I know just how it would be! No I won't go back!"

"My child," I said, laying my hand on his shoulder, "is that the way you speak to your mother when you have not seen her for three days?"

He paused a moment. The struggle in his face was sad to see. It reminded me of the child whom the demon rent sore, ere he came out of him. Suddenly he turned, threw his arms about his mother's neck, and cried with a heart-broken cry, "Oh, forgive me! forgive me! I will go home! I will be a good boy! Oh, mother, will you forgive me?"

"My son," she said, "it is not in your mother's heart to do anything else but forgive you."

When their long embrace relaxed, I said, "Good-night," and would have left them, but the boy exclaimed, "I'm going home with you."

"No, go with your mother, my child."

"I'll go right straight home to her, when I've seen you to your door. Oh, let me! May I go with her mother?" he asked, and she gave a willing consent. "God bless you," she said taking my hand, "God bless you forever, and ever!" Then I kissed her, and we parted.

The boy and I went up the lane in silence awhile; then he stopped, suddenly threw his arms around me, and laid his head on my shoulder, saying with a long, deep sigh, "Oh, Miss Ellen I love you with all my heart!"

We talked the rest of the way home; he received all my good advice with a tender and gentle willingness, and promised to go to his Heavenly Father also, confessing, "Father, I have sinned."

Early the next week I settled for him with the owner of the 'melons, and no more was said about his going to jail.

And this was my naughty boy's last running away from home.—The Advance.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts.
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "You are Immortal," per hundred, 75 cents.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 35. WHOLE NUMBER 321.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers: invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE FIRST ADAM AND THE LAST ADAM.

ST. PAUL bases his assertion that "if there is a psychical body, there is also a spiritual," first, on the analogies of Nature, and, second, on the nature of Man as revealed in Holy Writ.

The analogies of Nature teach that the quality of life and its conditions determine the form it assumes. One substance may take many forms, one kind or type of life many different bodies. The one seed, for instance, takes two bodies—the body that rots in the earth, and the body that waves in the air; and each of these corresponds to the life in the seed and the conditions in which that life is placed. There is one flesh; but it takes many forms in man, in beasts, in birds, in fish, although in its earliest embryonic stages it is similar in them all, and often indistinguishable. There is one glory of light; but this glory again, though one in essence, is manifold in form; the glory of the sun differing from that of the moon, that of the moon from that of the stars, star differing even from star in glory. In short, throughout the universe, as in the seed and butterfly, we see life determining form; the form rising as the life rises and changing with its changed conditions. Why then should man, and man alone, be exempt from the operation of this universal law? The presumption is that he is not exempt. The presumption is that, as his life rises in quality and power, as it shifts into new and more heavenly conditions, it will clothe itself in a new organism answering to its new conditions and capable of expressing its newly developed powers. We may rationally conclude that as the earthly man has an earthly body, so the heavenly man will have a heavenly body; that if the psychical man has a psychical body, the spiritual man will have a spiritual body.

This conclusion, drawn from the analogies of Nature, is confirmed and defined by the Scripture revelation of the nature of Man. Man, according to St. Paul, consists of body, soul, and spirit. Under the term "soul," the apostle includes the intelligence and passions which man possesses in common with creatures lower than himself. Under the term "spirit" he includes the higher reason, conscience, faith, hope, charity—the moral qualities which raise man above other creatures. The mortal body we now wear is a soulish body—a body exquisitely adapted to serve and express the soul, to feel and use the world of sense. But it is not a quick and adequate minister of the spirit. It veils the spiritual world from us; it clogs and thwarts the action of our spiritual energies; it restrains devotion, and faints into weakness under the pressure of the willing spirit. Before the spirit can be at home in the body, it must clothe itself with a spiritual body—an organism as responsive to the impact of spiritual truths and virtues, as quick and serviceable to faith, love, devotion, as the eye is to beauty, the ear to music, or the hand to the busy uses of the contriving soul. When the spirit reigns over the soul, when it is supreme in us, we may hope that, according to the analogies of the natural world, it will weave for itself a body like itself, an incorrupt and immortal body, a spiritual and heavenly body corresponding to its spiritual character and heavenly conditions.

All this is included in St. Paul's assertion that, "if there is a psychical body, there is also a spiritual."

We may now advance to the second point of his argument, viz., the historical basis on which his assertion rests. Thus far we grant the force of his logic. We admit that, throughout the universe, form is determined by the quality of the life that dwells in it as modified by the conditions which surround it; and that, therefore, the quality of life in man and the conditions in which it is placed will determine the character of his body or form. We admit that if the psychical man requires and obtains a psychical body, so also the spiritual man requires a spiritual body, and may hope to obtain it. But we may reasonably demur to St. Paul's metaphysics. We may reasonably ask, "Is his distinction between the soul and the spirit in man a true distinction? Are there in us both a psychical and a spiritual nature?" And to this question St. Paul gives a singular but profound reply. Instead of at once throwing us back on our own experience, or plunging into the subtleties of Hellenist metaphysics—both of which would have supplied the answer he wanted—he appeals to historical facts which at first may seem to have very little to do with the question, but which we shall nevertheless find to contain the truest and deepest answer it could receive. The historical facts to which he appeals are the nature of Adam and the nature of Christ as revealed in the Sacred Records. "Thus it is written, 'the "first man," Adam, became a living soul,' the last Adam a life-giving spirit."

. . . The Scriptures teach that man was created a spiritual being, or, at the lowest, a being capable of the higher life of the spirit, and that he degraded from his first estate.

. . . In order to show that there must be in rerum natura a psychical and a spiritual body, the apostle affirms that both a psychical and a spiritual man have actually appeared in human history. Adam was, or became, a psychical man; Christ was, or became, a spiritual man. The psychical life demands a psychical body, the spiritual life a spiritual body. This is the bare argument. But, let us mark what light the introduction of Christ and Adam into the argument sheds upon it.

The psychical, or soulish, man is a man in whom the soul is supreme. Intelligent and susceptible of passion, he uses his intelligence on temporal things, his passions are excited by that which is sensuous, transient, earthly. He does not live in the spirit, nor walk in the spirit. Conscience, righteousness, faith, hope, love, heaven, eternity, God, do not stand first with him; but man, time, earth, the gratifications of sense and intellect. Was not Adam, the living soul, a man of this type? . . . He could love and fear, desire and hate; he could use and enjoy whatever ministered to sense and passion, whatever was good for food, or pleasant to the eye, or able to make one wise. He could even aspire to be as God in knowledge and in rule. But all this was living after the soul, not after the spirit. When the spiritual crisis came, his faith failed him, his hope in God, his gratitude to his Benefactor; the sense of right yielded to the stings of desire; his love of the creature conquered his love for the Creator; the craving for knowing subdued the dictates of conscience; the pleasures of a season overmastered the prospect of immortality. God was not first with him, nor God's will.

A soulish man, he had, or came to have, a soulish body. What the physical change was that passed on him through sin, we cannot determine with precision; but that there was a change, a disastrous change, is beyond a doubt. The newborn shame of his own nakedness was one indication of it. The sudden heat and violence of passion which made Cain a murderer and a vagabond was another. The infirmities, the special forms of death and corruption, to which he and his children became liable—these, too, indicate a change as sweeping as it was disastrous. Nevertheless, as our own experience proves, the body, even when thus changed and depraved, was a most quick, subtle, and delicate minister of the soul. It might limit spiritual insight, and impede the energies of spiritual life. But for all the purposes of the soul—as the servant of intelligence and passion, as conversant with earthly and temporal objects, nothing could well be more exquisitely adapted to its work than the eye with which Adam looked out on heaven and earth, or the ear which gathered all the sweet sounds of nature. Flowers were still fragrant to him, food still pleasant to the taste; Eve could still thrill him with her touch: and the inventive soul, which rules the senses, soon taught him to create beauty, to make music, to store up food and so dress it as to enhance its rich savors; it soon learned at least the simpler secrets of social order and domestic peace. If he had only a soulish body, it was nevertheless perfect in its adaptation to the faculties, functions, cravings, needs of the soul. Not capable of immortality so long as it was informed by the soul alone, it was a perfect instrument of all mortal uses and delights.

But if the first Adam was a living soul, Christ, the last Adam, was a life-giving spirit. He was the true spiritual Man: for in him all faculties and passions of the soul were in subjection to the spirit. Man, time, earth, social and intellectual pleasures, the wisdom and wealth, the political splendors and æsthetic marvels, of the world did not stand first with him: but God, eternity, heaven, worship, conscience; faith, hope, charity; righteousness, joy, peace. We cannot so much as conceive of him as craving a splendid mansion, sumptuous fare, robes of state; as making a fortune, inventing manufactories, collecting works of art; as seeking the suffrages of men or discovering laws of nature, as wearing the poet's crown, or ascending an imperial throne. All these, though they may be in themselves innocent or even commendable aims and avocations of the soul, we instinctively feel to be utterly alien to him, incongruous even with our poor thoughts of him. But why? Simply because he was a spiritual man. To him, living and walking in the spirit, all that is of earth and time and soul was as nothing when compared with the eternal realities; all that was good only as it served to exercise and cultivate spiritual graces, to bring heaven to earth, to lead men to God and prepare them to meet him. And therefore he could refuse all the kingdoms of this world. Therefore he could nevertheless hasten to help any man, however lowly, however earthly, and seek to quicken in him, by help to the body, the life of the spirit. Of a charity so intense that he loved every man better than himself, of a faith so clear and strong that he looked through all the shows of time to the eternal substance from which they rise and over which they float, of a hope so lively that he despaired of no man, of a righteousness so pure that even the keen practised eyes of incarnate evil could find nothing in him, of a peace so perfect that even his unparalleled agony of labor and conflict could not impair it; in heaven even while he was on earth; carrying an eternal life through the changeful hours of time; making his Father's will his daily food, he stands before us the Man, the one true spiritual Man, bearing all the marks and tokens of life in the spirit, not in the soul, in their most exquisite and consummate perfection.

So also, if the last Adam teaches us what the spiritual man is, he also teaches us what the spiritual body is. He who had no appetite but for his Father's will, no ambition but to finish the work his Father had given him to do; he who, in the strength of the spirit, gave up all that men love and dared all that they fear; he who poured out his soul unto death that by his spirit he might give life to the world, had a body like to ours, yet not altogether the same as ours. Conceived of a virgin by the Holy Ghost, whatever else that profound and awful mystery of the Immaculate Conception may mean, it surely means this: that in taking our flesh, Christ took it, as Adam took it, from the hands of God, undepraved, untainted, immaculate; receiving a physical body which might change and rise into "a spiritual body" without passing, as our bodies must, through the purifications of corruption. We die perforce. We see corruption. We are held in hades till, at the sound of the trumpet, its walls are shattered, and we are summoned to meet the Lord. But he "lay down" his life. He saw no corruption. It was not possible that he should be holden of death. . . . And, therefore, we may with reason look for some signs of the spiritual body even in the body of his humiliation. Do we not find them? Virtue went out of him. He lived not by bread alone. He walked on the storm-tossed waves. His benison multiplied the loaves. On the mountain he was transfigured into an excellent glory; the face more marred than that of any man shone like the sun in its strength. As he talked of the "exodus" he was about to accomplish at Jerusalem—that triumphant close to his work of redemption, the spiritual glory burning within the veil of his flesh peered through, broke through, and suffused it with a divine intolerable radiance. He stood before the eyes of his amazed and dazzled disciples a spiritual Man in a spiritual body: corruption put on incorruption, the mortal immortality; weakness was clothed in strength, shame with honor.

But, observe, all these signs of the spiritual in the physical region of his life were prompted by that which is of the spirit, not by that which is of the soul. It was not when he sat with Martha, and Mary, and Lazarus, nor when John leaned on his bosom, that he manifested forth his glory; though love, even such love as we bear to friends, often raises and imperfectly transfigures the body through which it shines: nor was it when he uttered thoughts too large and high for human reach, though high thoughts do refine and elevate the face and bearing of those who habitually pursue them. It was not at the prompting of intellect or passion, or aught else that holds of the soul, that the body of Jesus proved itself a spiritual body or capable of becoming a spiritual body. It was at the touch of faith, of spiritual need and desire and trust, that virtue went out of him. It was that he might feed the hungry, succor the distressed, or deliver the imperilled, that he exerted a supernatural control over natural laws: and he fed, succored, delivered men that they might come to know him, and God in him, and thus possess themselves of eternal life. When the weak physical frame was transfigured with an immortal strength and splendor, it was because his spirit was rapt in the ecstasies of redeeming love as he talked with Moses and Elias, because he saw that the work of his redemption would be triumphantly accomplished.

After his death and resurrection, the signs that he inhabits a spiritual body grow more apparent, yet more mysterious. Though he can still eat and drink, though he still bears the stigmata of his wounds, and may be seen and touched, he glides through closed doors, passes as in an instant from place to place, vanishes from their sight as the disciples recognise him. As we read the story of his life, during the interval between the Resurrection and the Ascension, we receive the impression that, though for the most part invisible, he is always with his disciples—with them all, even when they are in different places; that at any moment "the sightless air" may seem to take form, and he be seen in their midst: that, so often as he needs to quicken and assure their faith, to revive their hopes, to inspire them with an unconquerable ardor for his service, he manifests himself unto them by a mere effort of will. In brief, at his will, he is visible or invisible: he is here, he is there; he is gone, he returns: the spiritual body being now as perfect a servant of the spirit in him as the psychical body of the soul. He can eat, but he does not need to eat. He can utter audible words, but words are no longer indispensable to his communion with his friends. He can show himself in visible form; but he may be present, yet not seen. If his body be subject to the laws of time and space, it is not subject to them as our bodies are, or even as his body was before. It is raised into higher conditions, endowed with loftier powers. It is heavenly, not earthly; it is ghostly and spiritual rather than physical or psychical.

Do any ask, "But what is all this to us? Adam and Christ were both exceptional men. If the first Adam was a psychical man and the last Adam a spiritual man, how does that bear on St. Paul's argument, that, as we have a psychical body, so also we are to have a spiritual body; or, on his exhortation, 'As we bear the image of the earthy, let us also bear the image of the heavenly?'" It is much—nay, it is everything—to us; and that precisely because both Adam and Christ were exceptional men, men who stand in an exceptional relation to the human race. . . . From Adam, the living soul, we and all men derive the intellectual and passionate qualities which we name collectively the soul. From Christ, the Life-giving Spirit, the Creative and Redeeming Word, we derive that higher better nature which believes, loves, hopes, which lays hold on spiritual truth, and follows after righteousness. In every man there are [so to speak] two men, and these are contrary the one to the other; the one draws us toward God, eternity, heaven—the other draws us toward earth, time, man. . . . When we are men, even though we have suffered the lower nature to usurp dominion over us and deprave us, the better nature still asserts itself, and so asserts itself that we know it to be the better. It speaks with an authority which the base self never claims. . . . These are the Adam and the Christ in us, the psychical and the spiritual, the earthly and the heavenly. It is as we yield to the one or to the other of these that we become men of the soul or men of the spirit. If we permit the Christ to reign in us, in our mortal members, our mortality will put on immortality—as his did, and be swallowed up of life—as his was. Like his, our spiritual manhood will demand and receive a spiritual body. And, therefore, St. Paul may fairly exhort us that, "as we bear the image of the earthly (man), so also we should bear the image of the heavenly."

Let us take the exhortation: for obedience to it involves an exceeding great reward. When the spirit rules the soul in us, and Christ the spirit, when "our citizenship is in heaven" from whence we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, then "He will change the body of our humiliation, that it be fashioned like unto his glorious body;" virtue will go out of us; we shall be redeemed from our bondage to the temporal and the visible; we shall be transfigured, rising from glory to glory till we stand before him reflecting his eternal splendors, seeing him as he is, satisfied with his likeness, our very bodies spiritualized and wearing his heavenly image. —Selected.

SOME OF MY EXPERIENCE.

BY DR. JAMES F. LEE.

BR. STORRS: From my earliest recollection to the age of seventeen I reverenced the aged and the wise, and viewed my instructors and tutors with such respect and esteem as arises from a consciousness of their wisdom and virtue and great literary attainments. I loved study, and delighted in instruction and self-cultivation. My thirst for improvement and the approbation of preceptors and parents stimulated me to such a degree, that my whole ambition amounted to a desire to be honored while living and venerated when dead. Acting, as I imagined morally and uprightly, I knew nothing of remorse, or what is so commonly called a "guilty conscience." Time passed sweetly and profitably, as I concluded, and yet I lacked the one thing needful, but knew it not. But though I fancied I had acquired a knowledge of self, and foolishly fancied I was wiser and better than others, even the most learned of any of the professors in all the seminaries, colleges or universities, I knew not myself, nor once thought I was foolish, vain and blind. I was, however, sincere, and really did believe that a knowledge of Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Demosthenes, Virgil, Horace, the ancient and modern philosophers, orators and poets, mathematicians and astronomers, chemists and physicians, justly entitled me to the name of learned Doctor. Associating with the learned, the literati of various nations, and the polite of different countries, I began to get glimpses of the weakness and frailties of human nature in its highest state of cultivation, and lost, alas! my reverence for almost every one save a very few whom I truly respected as saints. Time now passed—the face of things changed—rather I myself was changed. I became gloomy, melancholy, dissatisfied, discontented. I sought amusement contentment, everywhere, but found it in nothing created—in no land or nation—in no society. It was not in me. My distress became unutterable. I knew not what was really the matter with me. For I had long cherished very exalted notions of self and exulted in the rich luxuriance of my attainments, and the readiness of my ability to quote Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, Italian, Spanish, Gaelic, German and English—wise sayings, aphorisms, truisms, etc. Time, however, wrought in me a strange change. Was it strange? It was to me. Was it time?

Suddenly it came over me, after twenty years of sorrow and anguish. Suddenly—in a moment—in the twinkling of an eye, I was o'erwhelmed with such a feeling of reverence, humiliation and shame, that I could not speak. What sight did I behold? Myself. It was a horrid sight. Any thing else? Something I can ne'er forget—sight and feeling were instantaneous, simultaneous. I am unable to describe my impressions at that moment. They are unutterable. I was in the presence of God, and for the first time in my life I was speechless. Where can I find words to express my feelings? They are not to be found in the whole catalogue of lexicons and dictionaries on earth. For the first time I esteemed others better than myself—felt the power of divine truth—"Holy and reverend is His name"—and O! how I realized the fact, the truth, that I was the chief of sinners. I abhorred myself. I was pregnant with vileness—filthiness of the flesh and spirit, condemned, and there, there—O! there, I was in the presence of God, revealed to myself the most loathsome object I ever beheld. Where now was my pride? my vanity? What agony I endured for three days no eloquent tongue can express, nor could I even say, at that time, God be merciful to me a sinner. God was present, and God did pity me. He taught me self-knowledge; and in the midst of my agonizing suspense I knew he could pardon, and had pardoned Peter and Paul, but could not see how he could pardon me. Yes, I thought I had always believed the Bible—that Jesus would save his people from their sins—that he was the Saviour of sinners—but I knew not how he could save me, or rather whether he would pity me, for I deserved no pity. O! how it grieved me that I had offended him who died for sinners; offended God, who is love. The idea was full of horror and anguish verging on despair. How I did live three days in such a state, agitated and tossed in an ocean of grief and despair, mixed with a glimmering of hope, God only knows, for He alone spared me—and at last, when I cried to Him in my distress to take me out of existence and doom me to destruction, only suffer me to love him. No sooner was the prayer felt, ere it was uttered: all my distresses vanished as soon as I felt the power of these words, "God is love." The indelible impression of them and the emotions of love arising in my heart, diffusing through my whole frame a joy I never before realized—dissolving my heart in thankfulness, and making me love God—my enemies; teaching me the nature of pure religion and undefiled—never, never will fade away. Sometimes I look back thirty-four years ago, and call to mind how many times since I have, through mercy, been encouraged to persevere in well doing by a manifestation of the goodness of God in preserving me, and saving me from presumptuous sins, or any thing like vanity, self-conceit. When I am weak, then am I strong—and when I am most happy, I never feel any disposition to shout, or make any fuss. The more I feel the presence of God, the less I feel, and the more I am inclined to esteem others better than myself. I know I am so weak and impotent naturally, that it requires Omnipotence to save—to preserve me from pollution and destruction. The grace of God that brings salvation is sufficient for me. It teaches and enables me to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts—to hate and abhor evil—to love and cleave to that which is good, and to rejoice when all manner of evil is said of me falsely—to do good to those that hate me—to love my enemies.

And now, in conclusion, permit me to say, that for thirty-four years (nearly) I have had an impression which is comprised within the narrow limits of these words: No man who does not love his enemies, was ever called to preach the gospel. For unless he loves his enemies he has not the spirit of Jesus Christ. I need not amplify. For the Scripture is sufficient and excludes all human amplification. I know that some are strong while others are weak, and that it is the duty of every one to search the Scriptures, and see whether what they hear and read is according to revealed truth. Our experience and lives should be in harmony with revealed truth—the truth as it is in Jesus. "Jesus wept." Did he ever shout? How the apostles shouted I have not read; but I know they did rejoice. May God in mercy preserve us daily, hourly, through life, that we may attain to the resurrection of the dead, and inherit eternal life at the appearing and kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen. May you ever love God who first loved you.

P. S. That the Christian who has had and continues daily to have so many blessings conferred upon, should be humble, thankful, and tender-hearted, is plain and self-evident—but if he forget himself, or rather if he forget his benefactor from whom he derives all his comforts and enjoyments, he surely must be demented and in a sad condition. A daily study of his Bible and self-examination is the surest and wisest method to guide him into the way of all truth, and act not only as a preventive to pride and ingratitude, but as a balm for every sorrow and affliction. To read so many letters in the HERALD OF LIFE may afford some consolation to the reader—but the letters of the Apostles are always new and instructive—always read with profit and advantage by every sincere believer who hungers and thirsts after righteousness. They give us the clearest view of the character of the Christian, and contain everything essential to salvation. A few sentences of Paul are more precious in my esteem than pages of some good meaning, pious souls, who are so apt to give us a narrative of their joyous feelings, exultant hopes and ecstacies of joy. Yes, yes, I have no objections to shouts of triumph; but the victory is always ahead; the enemy is always nigh; we carry him with us whithersoever we go, or wheresover we tarry. He is a sly, subtle devil; his true name is, self.

I have a great mind to describe him—his name: but no, no; he is so well described already that I need not try. It takes a whole life to conquer him, to keep him under subjection. There is an appointed time to shout; it is ahead; that time will surely come, and then what a shout! what a triumph! it will, like all our gifts and graces, be ushered in in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: "O death where is thy sting. O grave where is thy victory." Glory to God. Yes, reader, then there will be a shout worth hearing; it will be no transient joy; no evanescent ecstacy. Love will not get cold then, as unfortunately it may do after protracted meetings and camp-meetings; shoutings one day and frettings if not quarrels next day. Take heed; frail and irresolute is man; he is always needy, never secure without divine aid; helpless without Christ. Self-crucifixion—self-denial is the word; watch and pray. The triumph is sure if you persevere in well doing to the end—denying all evil—self.

MONROE, N. C., June 6, 1870.

THE ABOLITION OF DEATH.

THE prevalency of the law of death is one of the most mysterious facts in the history of the human species. Men who are contented with looking merely at the surface of things—who contemplate external phenomena alone, and classify and speculate about them just as they find them—are apt to look upon death as an inherent or essential principle of human nature. They see that all animals die—human beings among the number—and they rush at once to the conclusion that man was created in order to die, and that mortality, or the certain destiny of death, forms one of the conditions of our very being. And yet every one is conscious, in his own bosom, of a feeling that life, and not death, is man's natural destiny; that dissolution and its horrible accompaniments are uncongenial, and indeed involve something penal. Moreover, the entire language of Scripture concurs with man's natural feelings. The history of the fall in the early chapters of Genesis, represents death as the consequence of man's eating the forbidden fruit, and again and again, in the doctrinal announcements of New Testament inspiration, we are informed that the very existence of death in the world is attributable to the sin of our first parents. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." There is accordingly no doubt whatever, if we are willing to be guided either by the instinctive feelings of the human heart, or by the utterances of Scripture, that death is an accident which has befallen us, and that our mortality or liability to dissolution, involving, of course, everything which leads to these horrible results—accident, disease, pain, suffering, and so on—is the consequence of our fallen or sinful condition. In short, man in the beginning, and at the dawn of the creation day, was duly informed by his Creator that death could not happen to him save by his own fault. Other animals, for aught I know, might be dying around him; but from this law of animal existence, his case was to be an exception; and did he maintain his allegiance or obedience to the God of heaven, he would continue to live forever.

Whilst, therefore, universal experience proclaims the unexcepted prevalency of the law of death, Scripture with equal distinctness accounts for the phenomena. It does more. It holds out the prospect of man's restoration to his primeval state. Had Adam and Eve not sinned, they and their posterity would have peopled this round world of ours, filling all its continents and islands with their descendants—glorious, happy, and immortal. The resurrection which is coming, and which it is the object of the apostle in this chapter to describe and illustrate, will prove that death is a conquered enemy, that its ravages are of temporary duration, and that the hour is coming when death's law, now absolutely universal, will be abrogated forever. A lengthened period may have to elapse before this is accomplished. Ages in the resurrection epoch may have to revolve before it is finally realised. But the result is announced in the words before us, which proclaims the purpose of the Almighty utterly to abolish death, and banish it from creation forever. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

Striking and momentous words! What desolations death has accomplished; what countenances it has saddened; what happy households it has filled with mourning and woe; what wide regions of the earth it has covered with graves, and the mouldering relics of all that was lovely, good, and noble! But death, it seems, is destined to die. A time—blessed epoch it will be!—is appointed to come when such a thing as death will be found no more within the precincts of the universe of God. Its destruction is doomed. Notice the emphatic words before us: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Destroyed!—not curbed, restrained, and kept within bounds, but absolutely destroyed! Such a thing as death no longer anywhere existing! What a glorious consummation—the fullest blessedness that human nature is capable of—and an eternity undimned by the shadow of death, wherein to enjoy it!

The whole subject referred to in these verses is, therefore, about the most sublime and momentous which can engage the thoughts of man. Any one who thinks and believes that there is a God, must often have felt it to be a strange thing that in this beautiful world there should be so much vexation, suffering, and death—must have often wondered, in utter amazement, at the unsatisfactoriness, disappointing providences, and ceaseless agitations of this our mortal state. Do we never ask the question, Can such things last forever? Is it to be eternal misery and woe? No, by no means. There is a glorious world of the hereafter; and the faith of the Christian anticipates the coming of the kingdom of God. Oh, the visions of rapture which rise before the imagination of the believer, lighted up by the word of God, like a glorious landscape, when the sun from behind a dark cloud, bursts upon it in all its splendor! Have a share, brethren, in these hopes. Hold fast the beginning of your confidence steadfast unto the end. Believe me, no worldly possession can ever equal a place and a portion in the coming kingdom of God. Be united to Jesus. Cherish his spirit; continue to do his work. What say you yet to hear the very accents of his voice, and saying to you, "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord?" —Selected from COCHRANE on "The Resurrection."

ELD. HENRY PERKINS, whose Post Office address is now Walnut Forks, Jones Co., Iowa, writes: My health is still very poor. I was obliged to leave Pennsylvania on account of the weather being very changeable. My cough is somewhat better since I came here, and also my night sweats, which I have had for the last two months. I am about fifty miles from the Mississippi River, and seven miles north of the great Northwestern R. R. The religious people here are mostly Methodists and United Brethren. I have not heard of any Life or Advent people yet. I hope the word of Life may find way into some hearts; for I believe it is the crowning truth of this age, and the truth through which the Church will be sanctified, and by it be baptized by one Spirit into one body: and the most ambition I have to get well is, to do a little something to carry it forward. Your brother in affliction and in hope.

WE have received, the Sunday Magazine for June, profusely illustrated.

CONTENTS.—1. The Struggle in Ferrara. By W. Gilbert. Part ix. Illustrated. 2. Prisoners of Hope. By the Editor. 3. On the Miracles of our Lord. By George Macdonald, LL. D. ix. The Government of Nature. Illustrated. 4. Diana Coverdale's Diary. By B. Orme. Illustrated. 5. A Life in Earnest. By G. W. Blaikie, D. D. 6. Waste. By M. B. De Lys. 7. Episodes in an Obscure Life: Being Experiences in the Tower Hamlets. By a Curate. Part ix. Illustrated. 8. Questions that are always Turning Up. iv. Grosser Sins. By the Rev. Professor Milligan. 9. Dr. De Sanctis, By the Rev. D. K. Guthrie. With Portrait. 10. How to Study the Old Testament. By W. Lindsay-Alexander, D. D. Numbers.—Analysis of the Book. 11. The Companions of St. Paul. By John S. Howson, D. D., Dean of Chester. ix. Onesimus. 12. At Cæsar's Bar. By Mary Senior Clark. Illustrated. 13. Supplement.—Notes for Readers Out of the Way.

For sale by all Periodical Dealers.

TERMS.—Yearly subscription, $3 50. Single number, 30 cents. Liberal Clubbing Rates. Specimen Number mailed, postage paid, to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

J. P. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

Also, we have received "GOOD WORDS," for June, from J. P. LIPPINCOTT & Co.

RELIGION is the best armor, and the worst cloak.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 15, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE RESURRECTION: ANASTASIS.

WE have often-times referred to Dr. BLOOMFIELD'S critical notes on the Greek New Testament, edited by Prof STUART. In looking at his remarks on the question of the Sadducees and our Lord's reply, relating to the resurrection, we observe some important statements, or admissions. On Matt. xxii. 23 he says:

> There is little doubt but that the phrase anastasis ton nekron, or anastasis, denoted, in common parlance, and agreeably to the general doctrines of the Pharisees, the resurrection of the soul as well as the body, and the re-union of both in a future state. Though, at the same time, the ideas of the Pharisees themselves (and still more the people at large) as to the nature of that future life were very vague, and occasionally founded on the notions of the heathens. So that our Lord's reply was, in wisdom, so framed as not only to refute the Sadducean doctrines, but remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees; and thus to benefit not only the unbelievers of the doctrine of the resurrection, but the misbelievers.

On the foregoing statement of Dr. Bloomfield, we remark, first—The resurrection of the dead—anastasis ton nekron—"denoted in common parlance," or discourse, even with the "Pharisees," not a resurrection of "the body," merely, but "of the soul." In other words, it embraced whatever constituted the man—the entire manhood. Let this fact be remembered; and it follows, that when Christ and his apostles speak of the resurrection of the dead, "in common parlance," the soul is included, whatever that soul is. No matter what the Pharisees meant by the immortality of the soul, so long as they maintained it must have a resurrection in order to a future life; they clearly had no idea of a future life to disembodied human souls.

Second: The Pharisees, it seems, held to a "re-union" of souls and bodies in a future state; hence it was that they taught the transmigration of souls; i. e., the passing of their fancied immortal souls into other bodies at death; without which those souls would have no resurrection, and could not live, in their estimation. Their notions "as to the nature of that life were very vague, and occasionally founded on the notions of the heathens," says Dr. Bloomfield. It is evident from all this, that the Pharisees were ignorant of the true nature of the resurrection, though in words they held to a resurrection. This Dr. Bloomfield admits by saying, "Our Lord's reply [to the Sadducees] was so framed as" . . . "to remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees," who were "the misbelievers." They professedly believed in "the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust;" but their views were false and erroneous in several particulars. First: The resurrection they advocated was a necessary result of the supposed immortality of the soul, which, leaving its present tenement behind at death, must have another body to enter, in order to its continued life; such was their resurrection of body and soul, and "re-union in another life."

Another error of the Pharisees' doctrine of resurrection was, that it embraced "both the just and the unjust." The unjust, however, with them, included only the Jews, and not men of other nations. If a man was a literal child of Abraham, through Isaac, he would be saved, or have a resurrection, though he had been unjust; such was Pharisaic pride and error. Dr. Bloomfield says—"Our Lord's reply was, in wisdom, so framed as not only to refute the Sadducean doctrines, but to remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees; and thus to benefit not only the unbelievers of the doctrine of the resurrection, but the misbelievers;" that is, those who did not believe aright on the subject. The Sadducees denied that there is to be "any resurrection of the dead," either of the good or bad. Jesus refutes them by showing that there is to be a resurrection of the good, and at the same time refutes the Pharisaic notion of the resurrection of the wicked dead; for he teaches distinctly that the resurrected ones "are as the angels of God in heaven;" which could not be said of the wicked dead if revived into life. And Jesus gives "Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," as the samples of those "which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world" [the future life] "even the resurrection from the dead."—Luke xx.

With the two-edged sword of truth our Lord hews in pieces the Pharisees' false notion of the transmigration of souls and the resurrection of the wicked dead, while he demonstrates to the Sadducees the resurrection of the righteous dead. Thus, truly, did he "refute the Sadducean doctrines," and "remove the misconceptions of the Pharisees," and correct their misbelief. But they were "fools and blind," and did not profit by his teaching. Bound up in their "own traditions," like thousands in these days, they still adhered to their errors, as we learn from Paul's testimony, Acts xxiv. 15, where he states that his Jewish accusers "allow there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust," while they found fault with him for maintaining the resurrection of Jesus, and of those who "fall asleep in him."

Paul's doctrine of the resurrection was one which was an object of "hope;" not of fear or dread. He never speaks of any other resurrection of the dead, to be looked for, but that of such as fall "asleep in Christ." For preaching this he was accused of the Pharisaic Jews; yet they themselves allowed there would be a more extensive resurrection than Paul contended for; even of "both the just and unjust;" for such an extensive resurrection Paul never said one word in all his preaching or epistles; but, on the other hand, he proclaimed the resurrection from the dead as an object of "hope," to be sought for most diligently, and to be bestowed only on those in Christ; hence he saith, he labored and suffered "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."—Phil. iii. 11.

MEANING OF WORDS AND PHRASES.

WE use the same terminology, but apply it in diverse ways. For instance your motto, "Life only in Christ," is used by me, very frequently, in my sermons, exhortations, etc.; but you give it one meaning or explanation, and I another. You affirm one view of the term "Life," while I hold to another. You maintain the special characterization: existence; I maintain the special characterization: blessedness. The latter includes and presupposes the former; but the former includes the latter only by assumption.

The foregoing language we meet in substance, from many of our opponents. We are glad they use the glorious phrase "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," but regret that they do not see the same "meaning" in it that we do.

That living "existence" is the "special characterization" of the term "Life" we have no more doubt than we have that the term "living God" means a live God, and not merely a "blessed" God, or a God having "blessedness." To say, a blessed God, may "presuppose" that He is alive, but it does not alter the fact that the expression "living God" has the meaning of a God alive, or having a living existence.

The term Life, in the Bible, as in all other writings, has the primary meaning of "living existence." And no expounder of that Book has any right to change that sense, unless there is an imperative necessity, and that necessity must be obvious. What is the necessity for changing life to blessedness? Can any rational reason be given "only by assumption" that man is inherently immortal? We do not believe they can pretend that any other reason exists.

On which side then is the "assumption," theirs or ours? Let them prove by the testimony of inspiration that inherent immortality exists in man, and then they have a good reason for changing the primary meaning of the term Life to blessednes. Till they produce that proof, their change of the meaning of the term is "only by assumption."

The terms life and blessed have each their appropriate meaning and original words, in Hebrew and Greek, to express their sense. All words are sometimes used figuratively; but such cases are generally manifest to the reader.

The term life has its "special characterization" in the Bible, and it is that of "living existence." That is its first and primary meaning. Beginning at Genesis, the first time the term occurs, (chap. i. 20) it has this sense, and no other; thus, "Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life." Does that mean "blessedness?" Again, "Every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth, wherein there is life." Verse 30. Shall we say, wherein is "blessedness?"

Again, chap. ii. 7. "God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Does the term blessedness fit here as a substitute for life and living? Then there was the tree of Life, and God excluded sinful man from it with this assigned reason, "Lest he take of it, and eat, and live forever." Does that mean, lest he should have "blessedness" forever? Is it not clear that a living existence is what is intended in these various places?

Further, in Genesis vi. 17, a flood of waters to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, etc., and chap. vii. 22, "All flesh died . . . . in whose nostrils was the breath of life," etc.

We might multiply examples to any extent showing the "special characterization" of the term life is that of "living existence." How then is our view "only by assumption?" We might fill columns demonstrating the truth of our position; while our opponents are wholly dependent on the "assumption" that man is possessed of inherent immortality. Without that point is established as a fact, their assumption has no foundation.

We might go to the New Testament and doubly confirm our position from that unmistakable source; but it is needless unless the "assumption" of inherent immortality is proved to be a fact; and that, we are sure, never can be done by Bible testimony.

We "maintain the special characterization" of the term life is living existence; and when applied to "Life only in Christ," it necessarily "includes and presupposes" blessedness. "Because I live," saith Jesus, "ye shall live also."—John xiv. 19. The fact that Christ's disciples shall live ["I will raise him up at the last day"] draws after it, "blessedness," inevitably. But in either case we are under no necessity to assume either the life or the blessedness, because each is expressly stated and promised in language peculiar to itself. The righteous put on immortality when made alive from the dead (1 Corth. xv.); "neither can they die any more" (Luke xx.); "and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" (Rev. vii. 17); "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain," etc. Rev. xxi. 4.

These, and hundreds of other texts go to show that life and blessedness are each expressed by their own appropriate terms, and both belong to, "the gift of God through Jesus Christ," and are neither of them inherent in man; and to possess either we must be "in Christ;" for "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son: he that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son hath not life."—1 John v. 11, 12.

"If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11.

Life future is only in Christ, and through Him to all His members, who are his body—the church; so that, as "He dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him," (Rom. vi. 9), "neither can they die any more" who are "the children of the resurrection;" for they are "the children of God, being children of the resurrection," (Luke xx.), and Christ is "the resurrection and the life." —John xi. 25.

Now, if any man can find any living existence—beyond this present life—out of Christ, he may well reject our "meaning of the term life." Till that is made to appear, we still proclaim to all, "NO LIFE OUT OF Christ;" or, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST;" meaning, as we do, that there is no living existence, after the present life closes, to any who are not, by the favor of God, united to Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER. So has God appointed, and who shall annul it?

THE HOPE OF THE GOSPEL.

LET us look at Paul's language relating to the gospel hope. Acts xxiii. 6, "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." Then truly he preached the resurrection of the dead as the gospel hope; unless he was called in question for something he did not preach. But let us see, Acts xxvi. 6–8, he says, "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our Fathers: unto which our twelve tribes, instantly serving, day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" Here again is seen the burden and hope of Apostolic preaching. It is a future life, by a resurrection from the dead. He adds, verse 22 and 23, "Having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day witnessing to both small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come; that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead," etc. Not only is the resurrection the Apostolic burden and hope, but he affirms the same things were the theme of the Prophets and Moses: the hope is one. Not an intimation thus far of the notion of entering the holy of holies—heaven—at death, or at all; it is the hope of the resurrection. He has shown us that was "the hope of Israel," as well as the hope of the gospel; and chap. xxviii. 20, in his bondage at Rome, he saith, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain."

But we will now see whether Paul does not with equal clearness state the hope of the gospel in his Epistles. 1 Corth. xv. 12–19, "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen . . . . then is your faith vain . . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," i. e., they are lost out of being—there is no hope for them; for, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." That the Apostle has reference to the hope of a future life by a resurrection is clear from what he saith at verse 32, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, [exposing my life] what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Plainly affirming he had no hope of going to heaven at death, and that he had acted a foolish part in hazarding his life at Ephesus, if there is no resurrection. Such a course would be folly indeed; rather "Let us eat and drink," if there is no resurrection, "for to-morrow we die," and there is no hope beyond that. Such is the Apostle's conclusion if there is to be no resurrection of the dead. But this reasoning is both absurd and false, if he could or would go to heaven at death.

But again, Paul saith, Rom. viii. 23, after speaking of the groaning creation, "And not only it, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting [to go to heaven at death? No, but] for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body:" not its dissolution at death. He adds, "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not then do we with patience wait for it." And what does the Apostle affirm he and the Christians of his time were "waiting for?" Answer. "The redemption of our body;" that is, for the coming of Christ from heaven, and the resurrection. This will be clearly seen by comparing what he saith here, with Phil. iii. 20, 21; "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," etc. Here is no ground for mistake or doubt. Paul was not expecting to go to heaven at death, nor at all; but he was looking for Christ to come from heaven—not when his vile body should go to corruption, but when the time should arrive for it to be fashioned like to Christ's glorious body, which is not till the resurrection. This is further confirmed by his language in the same chapter, where he tells us how he labored and suffered, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead::" verse 11. How unlike all this, is the common idea of an entrance into heaven at death.

The hope of Paul is thus distinctly stated; and it is the gospel hope, and demonstrates that modern Christians are as ignorant of what that hope is, as the pagans themselves. In fact, the theology of these days has substituted an immortal soul for, or instead of Christ; and hence a hope of going to heaven at death instead of a future life by a resurrection from the dead, at the last day as Christ has promised. A fatal mistake this, by which Christ is robbed and dishonored; while death is crowned "Prince of Peace," and as the door into heaven! Christ, however, declares himself to be the door, and affirms that those who climb up any other way, are thieves and robbers. He is "the resurrection and the life;" without him, and without that resurrection which he has promised at the last day, there is no gospel hope of a future life or immortality. Let men beware how they attempt to approach the holy place into which Jesus our High Priest has entered. That is no part of the work of a Christian even to attempt an entrance into heaven at death, or any other period.

THE WICKED DEAD.

A FACT.—God is not the God of the Wicked.

THIS truth needs no argument to establish it. It is the legitimate consequence of the covenant made with Abraham. This covenant embraces "the children of the promise" alone.—Rom. ix. 8. "But unto the wicked, God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?"—Psa. l. 16. When the children of Israel (the ten tribes) revolted from the Lord, He said, "Ye are not my people, and I will not be your God."—Hos. i. 9. And Paul, in referring to the multitudinous seed, Heb. xi. 12–16, says, "God is not ashamed to be called their God." The undoubted inference from which is, He is ashamed to be called the God of the wicked.

ANOTHER FACT.—God is the God of all that have a resurrection.

The words of Jesus settle this point. "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto Him."—Luke xx.

To comprehend the meaning of these words, we must keep in mind the question at issue between Jesus and the Sadducees. It was not whether Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were then alive, for the controversy was founded on the fact of their being dead; and the question was, Will the dead be raised? The true idea of Jesus' argument is conveyed in the following paraphrase:

"If God did not intend to raise Abraham, Isaac and Jacob from the dead, He would not call himself their God; for He is not the God of them that have no resurrection; but He is the God of them who are to be raised. They are all alive to 'God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were' (Rom. iv. 17); hence, He is the God of the living."

CONCLUSION.—Those of whom God is not the God, will not have a resurrection.

But God is not the God of the wicked.

Therefore, THE WICKED WILL NOT HAVE A RESURRECTION.

"THE UNSEARCHABLE RICHES OF CHRIST."

CHRIST has riches; and they are unsearchable, and so extensive that they cannot be explored, nor exhausted. Let us dwell a moment on this topic. What are we called to? First, a union with Christ: to become his bride. Of course, partners in His treasures, honors, and whatever belongs to him. Let this truth be proclaimed. But who and what are we? Mortal, corruptible, dying creatures: whose foundation is in the dust; and all of whose tendencies are to return to dust again; with no principle of immortality or endless life in ourselves. To such creatures Christ is proclaimed, as seeking to bring us into a relation to himself of the nearest and most interesting character. Men are allured by the charm of riches, gold, inexhaustible mines; that wakes up their whole being, and they eagerly inquire what it is, where it is, how they can find it, how they may possess themselves of those treasures? If they find there is even a chance for success in the pursuit, they enter at once on the expedition, hazarding all the labor, toil, risk, suffering, or privation that may be attending the enterprise. Now, says the apostle, I come to proclaim to you riches unsearchable, a mine that is inexhaustible in Christ. He is the Son of the living God, and heir of God: heir of his incorruptibility, glory, endless life, and whatever pertains to the fulness of God. He proposes to share these riches with us: and in exchange for this short and fleeting life to give us an endless life: instead of these corruptible bodies to give us incorruptible ones; instead of the dishonor of consuming in the grave, by worms, to raise us to crowns of glory that fade not away. In a word, to give us riches as much more glorious, valuable, and durable than the richest diamonds, or the most refined and pure gold, as they exceed the most worthless and loathsome object that earth bears upon its surface. But all comparison fails, and we feel the deepest sense of weakness in the attempt, and leave it to your own reflections to follow up the contemplation of the honor, glory, and riches that are so freely offered to us in Jesus Christ.

"GREAT WORDS BY THE LITTLE HORN."

THE Roman "Harlot" demands to be proclaimed "Infallible," and she will be by a set of stupid worshippers: then she will say, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow."—Dan. vii. and Rev. xvii.; Saith Daniel, when he saw the judgment set, the "Ancient of days did sit"—"I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." And the Revelator saith, when the Harlot proclaims herself a queen, etc., "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

Read the following "schema" which is to be promulgated at Rome with great pomp on the 29th inst., and ask yourselves if they are not "The voice of the great words which the horn spake," and which clearly mark the point in prophecy when the judgment sits on her, and she is to be "utterly burned with fire?"

1. If any one shall say that the Episcopal Chair of the Roman Church is not the very true and infallible Chair of Blessed Peter, or that it has not been divinely chosen by God as the most solid, enduring, and incorruptible rock of the whole Christian Church—let him be anathema.

2. If any one shall say that there exists on earth, distinct and separate from the Chair of the Blessed Peter, any other Infallible Chair of the Truth of the Gospel of Christ the Lord—let him be anathema.

3. If any one shall deny that the Divine Supremacy of the Chair of the Blessed Peter is to all men, whether unbelievers or believers, whether laymen or Bishops, necessary as the true road to eternal salvation—let him be anathema.

4. If any one shall say that each and all of the Roman Pontiffs, legitimately elected, are not jure divino successors of the blessed Peter, in the gift also of Magisterial Infallibility, and shall deny to any one of them the prerogative of Infallibility to teach the Church and the Word of God, pure from all corruption and error—let him be anathema.

5. If any one shall say that Ecumenical Councils are a power placed by God in the Church for feeding the Divine flock on the Word of God superior to the Roman Pontiff, or equal to him, or necessary, by Divine institution, to the completion of the Infallible Magistracy of the Bishop of Rome—let him be anathema.

A telegram, dated at Rome June 5 states: "The discussion of the dogma of infallibility was closed amid great confusion, the debate being forcibly ended. The distinguished Bishops who were appointed to speak in opposition to the schema, and who are among the most profound and able debaters in the Council, were summarily ruled out of the debate, and prevented from participating in any way in the discussion. They were loud in their protestations, and it is believed will issue a formal protest against the arbitrary manner in which the debate was closed.

"The opposition were totally unprepared for this manner of procedure on the part of the Ultramontanists, and their indignation at the defeat of their tactics for maintaining a stubborn opposition to the adoption of the schema is very great. The excitement in church circles is intense, and the opposition seems to gain strength from the efforts of the Ultramontanists to crush them."

Let them fight on; the day of judgment on the Roman Harlot is at hand; and this infallibility proclamation will seal her doom and hasten her fiery burning. May God speed the hour when she shall be hurled "like a great millstone into the sea . . . and be found no more at all."—Rev. xviii. 21.

Calls for the Herald of Life.

Some unknown person, without our knowledge, caused the following advertisement to be inserted in "The Christian Standard," Cincinnati, Ohio, for three months, prominently displayed:

THE DIVINITY THAT IS NOT SICK AND NEEDS NO DOCTORING.

"No Immortality nor Endless Life Except through Jesus Christ alone."

ADVOCATED BY THE

"HERALD OF LIFE,"

A weekly religious family paper, published at two dollars a year, or 48 numbers. Send for sample.

Address, GEO. STORRS, Box 4658,
18—12t New York.

This advertisement has brought us several calls for "samples," and will explain the following letter:

Havana, Huron Co., Ohio, June 4, 1870.

Geo. Storrs, Esq., Dear Sir: I am anxious to see the "Divinity that is not sick and needs no Doctoring." It must be a strange Divinity, truly! and very unpopular to clerical gentlemen of the D. D. order, and entirely repugnant to their ideas of ecclesiastical dignity and authority. What! don't theology need doctoring? Do you say, No? May the departed spirits of John Calvin, John Wesley, and all the illustrious D. D.'s from their time down to the present, save, defend and protect us.

But your advertisement in the paper smacks of reform. Have you any thing new to offer on the vexed questions of modern orthodoxy? Do you propose to solve the problem of the 666 different sectarian parties of Christendom? Do you acknowledge the supremacy of the Scriptures in matters pertaining to Christian faith and practice? or are you but another priest of another temple which man pitched, but not the Lord, whose declarations are oracular, and whose decisions are an end of all dispute? In my opinion, it is such a priest as this sacrificing on an unauthorized altar and in a forbidden temple that has been the occasion of all the theological doctoring of the last 200 years. I cannot conceive of any Divinity, but that of human origin, that needs the perfecting touch of a theological doctor. But the "law of the Lord is perfect;" and Christ as the Ruler over his own house, and his apostles as its wise master-builders are the only authoritative teachers of theology under the New Institution. I recognize no others.

If your paper is the exponent of partyism, and uses the language of Ashdod instead of that of Canaan, when speaking of the church of Christ, its laws and ordinances, then, permit me to say, respectfully, yet emphatically, I don't want your paper. But if it uses Bible names for Bible things—in other words, teaches Bible theology, unmixed with any of those modern notions that pass current, are, in fact, substituted for it, it would be a pleasure to me to read your paper. At all events you may, if you please, send me a sample copy, and direct as above.

We have made no claim with regard to the perfection of the "divinity" of the Herald of Life, or of its needing no improvement. As to "doctors of divinity," we think any such claim is forbidden by our Lord when he said to his disciples, "Be ye not called Rabbi: for one is your Master even Christ; and all ye are brethren." We regard the appellation of "D. D." the same, in fact, as "Rabbi;" and the voluntary acceptance of such a title, a departure from implicit faith in the teachings of Christ, if not a violation of His command: we think it would be both, if we were to assume such title. But Christ is the Judge.

Truth Goes Bravely On.

We take the following article from the "Bethlehem Daily Times," Pa. It shows the battle advances, and the Life views cannot be kept in a corner; they are sounding out in the earth, and the opponents must meet them and the result is not doubtful. "Life, future or eternal is only to be had in Christ, and is a gift of God to believers, and not inherent in man, or bestowed on him by creation or natural birth." That is the question to be met; and its triumph is certain. Let no Life believer waver in the battle. Stand firm, trusting in God and His truth. We think we see our friend Rondthaler in the following:

HOW ABOUT THE FUTURE STATE?

Mr. Editor: In reading the columns of your paper, I find many articles devoted to the discussion of secular subjects, political and otherwise, which have interested some classes of your readers. I have been led to inquire whether it would not also be advisable to offer a few suggestions of a religious nature, and thereby open the discussion and study of vital and eternal interest to all your readers.

In your issue of July 16th, an article with reference to the annihilation of the wicked appeared, in which it was stated that, according to The Methodist Home Journal, the above named doctrine was taking root and spreading among thinking men, both in and out of the Methodist ministry, with a growth both obvious and threatening. It was also asserted that the question "whether the righteous only should live again" must soon have a thorough rehearing in that denomination. Methinks the question ought to have a hearing in the Moravian Church also, and inasmuch as the synod of that sect is at present meeting at York, would it not be well to propose to the body there met to study the interests of that denomination in taking measures to prevent heresies in their flock, to give the matter attention, and by thorough, logical, and above all, scriptural argument, compel such as have already been tossed about by this wind or wave of doctrine (if proven as such) to retrace their steps and return to their first love. If permitted, I would propose the following questions for discussion.

1. Does the natural birth impart to the off-spring immortality, or an entity known as an immortal soul? If so, of what force are the words, "Who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life?" And in what manner was life and immortality brought to light through the gospel?

2. Is death an extinction of being, a ceasing to exist, or is it only the door to glory, and thereby made an angel of light in place of an enemy, (the last one to be conquered?)

3. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life," "I am the Bread of Life," "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." And inasmuch as sin is death, how is a mortal being to obtain life apart from Christ, and how is he to gain a resurrection from the state of death if he never partakes of the Bread of Life?

4. They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. They are like the angels, and cannot die any more. Therefore, if wicked men also have a resurrection, do not they become, like the angels, etc., the children of God? Hence restoration or Universalism must be true, and the eternal tortures of hell a myth.

The above is submitted solely with a view of eliciting truth. "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good."

Berean.

Since writing the above I have read that men in England who are noted for their piety and scholarship have embraced the Life views. And in our own country "men of prayer," "thinking men," "the cream of the church," maintain the doctrine of a future life only in Christ.

The Judgment Message.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

[Continued from last issue.]

As a matter of deep interest and importance to us, we will now briefly consider the light drawn from God's dealings with man in the past; for there are many brilliant rays of light beaming from God's light-house by which the Church of Christ assuredly may not be in darkness concerning the coming of the "hour of His judgment."

THE PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH GOD DEALS WITH MAN.

In contemplating God's dealings with man in the past a great truth is made apparent, which it is very important for us to bear in mind. That truth is this: God deals with man upon eternal principles, which are based upon the attributes of His character. Those attributes are immutability and impartiality.

God is a being of immutability. To assume that he is mutable, like mortal man, is to charge him with changeableness, and hence make a serious reflection upon the stability of his character. Man manifests his mutability in forming plans, and making decrees which he may be wholly unable to carry out. But it is not so with the Omnipotent Jehovah. With him all things are possible; and his plans and decrees cannot fail.

Again: Nothing is more plainly taught in the pages of inspiration than the impartiality of God's character. The moment we look upon him as a partial being, like selfish man, we charge him with injustice in dealing with man, and also contradict the Scriptures which affirm that he is "no respecter of persons."

THE WARNING MESSAGE.

One of the eternal principles upon which God deals with man, based upon the immutability and impartiality of his character, is this: God never inflicts a judgment of a universal nature without first promulgating a warning message, and this judgment message always presents the nature of the danger, and makes known the means of escape. This message also judges the world, inasmuch as it reveals the destiny of man, whether he accepts or rejects the means of escape therein presented. This fact we wish to be distinctly impressed upon the minds of all, that our conduct with regard to this warning may be governed accordingly. To sustain our position on this point we need refer only to the history of God's judgments in the past.

THE ANTEDILUVIAN WICKEDNESS AND ITS OVERTHROW.

Hardly had the first generation of earth's inhabitants passed away ere sin and rebellion had increased to such an extent that God repented that he had made man. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. And the Lord said, "I will destroy man whom I have created from the face of the earth; both man and beast; and the creeping things, and the fowls of the air; for it repenteth me that I have made them. But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord."—Gen. vi. 5–8.

We need not go into a detailed examination of this judgment upon the antediluvian world. The truths involved therein are many and important.

1. The moral corruption of the world was the reason assigned by God for sitting in judgment upon that race, and in promulgating his decision to overthrow the world by the flood of water. Man was so corrupt, that every desire and purpose of his heart was only evil continually, and for this reason God repented that he had created him.

2. Man was undeserving of mercy. But in accordance with the attributes of God's character, which we have just noticed, he did not immediately execute his decision, and let the flood loose in its awful work of destruction, but, in his long suffering and mercy, he spared the race in their wicked career, and by the judgment message promulgated his purpose to destroy all who would not accept of the proffered salvation.

3. Noah, a man who had found grace in the eyes of the Lord, was warned by God of this approaching destruction. His character was put to the test; he proved obedient; and full of faith in the God of heaven, went forth as the divinely-commissioned bearer of the judgment message. He faithfully warned the world, giving them as favorable an opportunity of escaping the danger as he himself had.

4. The lamentable fact is recorded for our consideration, that the antediluvian world did not and would not know the truth; though faithfully warned of the coming judgment, they chose to take the risk into their own hands of disobeying God, and utterly perished, while Noah heeded the voice of God, and built an ark "to the saving of his own soul, and of all them that were his."

MAN'S DESTINY THE RESULT OF CHOICE.

Again: The same truths we find manifested in the case of Lot. He was warned by God of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah. He faithfully warned those around him. But they rejected the message, continued in their sinful ways, and knew not until the fiery tempest burst upon them. It found them wholly unprepared, and they perished. They would not heed the admonition to believe and obey God, and they suffered the fate of the heedless.

In this brief history how clearly appears the principle, which we have stated, that a judgment message always precedes the execution of the judgment; and that man's destiny is determined by the character which he shall develop under under the promulgation of this message—whether of obedience to the requirements of God, which will result in their salvation, or of heedlessness and rebellion which dooms them to irrevocable destruction. Thus, the world is judged by every judgment message which God promulgates, and, as in the case of the antediluvians, the choice which man makes—the character which he develops—fixes his eternal destiny. This fact appears in its force and power to us when we realize that we are now living under a judgment message, and in the uttermost parts of the world we now hear the divinely-commissioned messengers proclaiming, "Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come."

A SIGNIFICANT FACT.

Beloved friends, before we part, let me impress upon your mind another important fact made apparent in the significant history to which I have called your attention, viz., The generation to whom was proclaimed the judgment message, was the generation upon whom was inflicted the judgment. In other words, the judgment message and the infliction of the judgment were confined to one generation. Thus it has ever been, and so we may expect it will be in the end of this dispensation. I advance this thought at the present time as being worthy of consideration. Who, that will carefully review the evidence of our Lord's return, can say that this generation, which has been so earnestly warned of the coming judgment, may not witness the rising of the Morning Star—the coming of the long-looked for King and rightful heir to David's throne?

[To be Continued.]

Rochester, N. Y., May, 1870.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. W. McCagg.

Br. Storrs: It has been a long time since you have heard anything from me; and lest you should think I had renounced the one faith, I write this which will explain itself. On the last day of March about 10 P. M., I was wrecked upon the Western division of the New York and Erie R. R., west of Hornelsville. It was the Pacific Express train running very fast. I received my injuries upon my head and spine: and have not been able as yet to do anything, neither can I tell when I shall be. I am able to get about the village some, and I bless the good Lord for that.

I had been down into the State of Pennsylvania, and rented a mill, and opened a Sunday-school, and was commencing the labors I truly believed God had called me to do, calculating to run the mill through the week, and teach the glorious truths of the Gospel on Sundays. I had some Grant Adventists as neighbors, and they praised the Lord that I had again come among them. I made all my arrangements for business and left for this place to get my things, and books and papers for a Sunday school.

We separated full of anticipation of the great pleasure in store for us all; having had as I truly thought, the witness that this was just what God wanted me to do; but here I am: yet thank the Lord, not discouraged; but still trusting him. I must admit, however, that I was left in a peculiar state of mind, and all my friends at South Creek are as yet unable to see God's meaning as regards the matter. I am determined with His help, to serve him, let come what will, life or death, and trust all to Him. Although my nerves and mind have been much injured, I still feel that love for God and the precious truth of Life only by a union with Jesus, that I am willing to sacrifice all earthly pleasures for the witness of the Holy Spirit that I am an heir to that glorious inheritance soon to be given to the faithful child of God. I truly feel this world and all its vanities soon will perish; but, they that are accounted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead will never perish. Praise the Lord. As soon as I am able to travel some, I expect to visit your city, and shall as a matter of course call and see you. Dear Br., let us be faithful to the trust reposed in us, and soon we shall wear the crown. I had an accident ticket at the time I was hurt which draws $15 per week. Your Br. waiting for the Master's return.

Warsaw, N. Y., June 2, 1870.

From Helen Robertson.

Br. Storrs: The redemption of the little waiting flock is nigh. Who knows how soon the Son of man may appear in power and great glory? Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Jesus says to us now, "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Through the Revelator he also says, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth."

And now, little children, abide in him; that when He shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

Our Father help us to watch and pray always, for it is to those that look for him, that he will appear unto salvation.

You say with regard to the distribution of tracts, "A hundred dollars just now, will enable us to send out several thousands with good results." I cannot give much but will do what I can; so find enclosed five dollars toward that hundred. Are there there nineteen others who will give the same amount? Brethren and sisters, do it for him, who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor. It may pinch us a little. He was pinched by poverty too; but is now glorified. If faithful to the end, we shall soon have eternal life.

Racine, Wis., June 5, 1870. (Box 769.)

From Emeline Wood.

To the dear Ones scattered abroad: Our precious Br. Wolcott, is laid up again by sickness. He wrote me on the first of the month. Our Father once heard prayer for him and raised him up. Now I ask you to intercede at the throne of grace in his behalf, and God will raise him up again. We all want to see him at the coming anniversary. How our hearts will rejoice in meeting the loved ones once more; and may our Father fill them with all his fulness, that they may come richly laden with the fruit of the gospel. I for one expect to have a good time. I was well paid for going last year, and we must all pray that God may come with us, for we can do nothing without him. Oh I hope that God will permit dear Br. Wolcott to be there this year, and all the loved ones.

If it is so good to meet here, what must it be to meet where we will never part again? The Lord has been gracious to me in giving me health to work once more. I have been out two Sabbaths on the mission; met with one of the dear ones, a Baptist, that holds the Life views with us, but had never seen any of the Documents or tracts. How pleased she was to get some of the tracts. God has given her the light just from reading his precious word. How good He is. He leads his children into the truth. What a blessed time we had. May our God guide more into the truth. I sometimes wish I had nothing to do but work in the vineyard. But perhaps it would not be as good for me. My heart does rejoice to know that God can work without us; but he makes us instruments for good at times, and then it is so good to see his blessing on our labors.

We laid our Br. Hagar away yesterday. How he did long for the rest for the people of God. He sleeps in Jesus. Oh how happy he was, and how I do praise God that he made him happy in his love. We will meet him soon again for our blessed Life-giver is near at hand. May we labor for others to go with us. They who will read, love this truth of not making the wicked suffer after death. I will have more time to go out now. Dear Br. Hagar wanted me there every Sabbath, for his comfort; and it did do him so much good, he loved to hear the Life views. I love to go where they love the blessed truth. The Lord does bless me so much; fills my heart full of his love and love for the cause of truth. He abides with me as he says in his word; he verifies the promises to me, and He comforts me. Father comforts his children. The dear Saviour is more precious than ever. May he bless you all with our beloved editor. May he have all our prayers for strength to carry on this great work. I often think of him in this warm weather. How wearied he must be. May the everlasting arms be constantly round him to uphold him. May his strength be renewed every day, is my prayer for him. I hope to have something to say for the encouragement of our blessed cause. Our labor is not in vain in the Lord. He will own his own word and prosper his work. Hold on to God and he will sustain you.

Albany, N. Y., June 6, 1870.

From Daniel Hawks.

Br. Storrs: I should feel lost without the Herald of Life. I like it, because it allows people of different views, to express what they believe to be the truth, whether it is popular or not. By so doing, light and truth are advanced. I have found that great men are not always wise. Sabbath evening I heard a great Methodist minister say to the congregation, that God, in order to show his hatred to sin, punished it in the person of his well-beloved Son. How God could show his hatred to sin by punishing it in his well-beloved Son, who knew no sin neither was guile found in his mouth, is unknown to me. It seems to me, that God shows his hatred to sin by punishing the sinner, and not by punishing it in his well-beloved Son. I have frequently heard great men tell the mission of the Saviour into this world, that he fulfilled the law in our room and stead, and wrought out a righteousness that must be imputed to us; bore the penalty of the law for us and made satisfaction to God for us, and bare the penalty due to us in our room and stead, and like expressions, which are dark to me. Was his mission into this world to affect God, or us? I believe his mission was to affect us, and by his precepts, example, and the gift of his Spirit, show us how we may please God, and gain eternal life beyond the grave; for he brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. He is my Saviour by saving me from sin and death; my righteousness by making me righteous; my wisdom by making me wise, and as far as his precept, example and Spirit makes me to become righteous and wise, I am, and no more. This idea of the Saviour's satisfying the Lord by bearing the punishment of sin due us, I cannot see it. The Scripture informs me that every one must bear his own sin, and by his mercy and grace, and the aid of his Spirit, to do his will, I expect to be saved. I understand his mission here was to affect us, and not God, by enlightening and leading us in the path that leads to eternal life. This is what the Saviour did while here, and when gone the disciples said, "We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." Yours in the hope of eternal life.

Andes, N. Y., June 1870.

From Eld. Wm. P. Shockey.

G. Storrs: Dear Sir: I am still at this place. School is progressing finely; and I think any one can imagine about how busy I am to teach 30 pupils in a mixed school, five days in the week, then preach three times on Saturday and Sunday; answer many questions from infidels and all classes of sects—but little differing in doctrine, and from a few honest inquirers. But I praise our Father in heaven for enabling me to have good health to perform this work. Praise his holy name for the influence of his Spirit in his written word which has led six precious mortals to obedience of the faith in order to get life in Jesus, learning that "He that believes not the Son shall not see life;" and that "they who obey not the gospel shall be punished aionian destruction." They upon the full confidence of Christ's and the Apostle's teaching were immersed into the Christ, desiring "as they have received him so to walk in him," setting their affection on things above, and not on low things, knowing they are dead—prospectively—and with Christ their life is hid, and when he who is our life—Life-giver—will appear, we shall appear with him in glory.

There are a few more, who seem to listen, and are almost persuaded to surrender to our Lord. O how hard to kick against the goads. How few will find the way to the Life-giver.

We went five miles to a Cam'ite house—spoke twice to large audiences. Four of their preachers were present part of the time; and though one of their own brethren and my friend was anxious to introduce three of them, they avoided it, so he could not do so until after preaching. They would not offer a demur; but announced that another, "Belcher" by name, would preach Sunday at 4 o'clock P. M. First day morn, about 10 o'clock, 500 or more were assembled. My subject was announced "The Bible, Hell and Destiny of the wicked."—Mark ix. 43. They came, but Belcher, though there, let not himself be known or any desire to review. Therefore I took time; and that sea of strange hearers sat entranced, gazing at me for two hours and 20 minutes. Then B. said, he had designed a review, but upbraided me with so long a use of time, (which, had it been intimated to me that he wished to review, I would by no means have done), begged the audience to excuse him. But no, they voted largely for his review. He promised to begin it in half an hour. In an hour and a quarter he began. What! a review? Nay, a tirade against Adventists, Christadelphians, even personal abuse of one J. K. Spear of Illinois. Thus he found it easier to caricature a man 500 miles off than to answer me. Then he refused to let me have the audience a few minutes, dismissing them. I called out, I would meet them at the bush a few yards distant. One hundred tarried to hear me more. O Lord forgive them; they know not what they do.

Tipton, Mo., June 5, 1870.

From Johannan Roberts.

Br. Storrs: I enclose $5 for my Herald of Life, and that of Salathiel Roberts, Crocket, Texas, and for Campaign Documents.

It would be but a repetition for me to tell you how much I prize the Herald, and with what anxiety I look for its weekly visits, and how it strengthens me in my Christian pilgrimage, how much the letters from the scattered flock encourage me from week to week, and enables me to stand up against the scorn and sarcasm of those who call themselves Orthodox. Truly one needs grace to conquer and keep them through all the vicissitudes of this life. But when proclaiming the great love of God, and the precious promises that He has made to the children of men, that there is life only through the Life-giver, there is a great need of a double portion of His grace; for he meets with opposition on all sides. The Orthodox spurn him, the Spiritualists scorn his doctrine, for it overthrows their theory, while the careless, or Infidel looks upon it with an indifference that is truly lamentable by those that have the love of our Saviour at heart. Oh, how long, how long will this last? often is uppermost in my thoughts, placed in the midst of a community for nearly two years, with many heart burnings, and sore perplexities, has caused me many a sore trial; but by the grace of God I have endured all opposition, feeling that I have had the helping hand of our Saviour in every trial. If I were to undertake to give you an account of the opposition that has been hurled against me for proclaiming a doctrine so repugnant to the so-called orthodox belief, it would fill pages; but I must forbear; feeling to go forward in the duty I owe to God and my fellowmen, fearless of the enemy's batteries.

May God's grace be with you, and many years be added to your life, with strength sufficient to vindicate the character of God, and the love of a precious Saviour to the children of men, is my earnest prayer. Yours in the gospel hope.

Owensville, Cal., May 28, 1870.

Appointments.

Hamden, June 19.
Kenduskeag, June 26.

L. Wetherbee.

Meriden, June 19.
Providence, June 26.
Hartford, July 3.
New Britain, July 10.
Terryville (Br. Yale's neighborhood), July 17.

Chas. C. Barker.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Eld. H. Perkins, Eld. Wm. P. Shockey, W. H. Ford, Lewis L. Brown, N. Hall, Wm. H. Yale.

Two dollars each from—Wm. Steele.

Various sums—S. J. Finson, 50 cents; D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; James L. Boyd, $20 on pledge; Mrs. E. C. M. Boyd, $5 on pledge; Johanna Roberts, $5; Wm. Perine, $ 50; Lindley M. Moore, $5.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Mrs. Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, $3; Helen Robertson, Racine, Wis., $5; D. B. Salter, Saltersville, N. J., $5.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Daniel Hawks, M. A. Frost, Eld. Henry Perkins, Wm. J. Mitchell, Wm. Steele, A. Greenwood, Johannan Roberts, O. F. Yale.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Abel Larkin.—We sent you six copies of May 25 at the time it was issued. We are nearly out of that number now and can't supply your order. If we can find some subscribers who will spare them we will help you. The money you speak of is credited in Herald, May 18.

Lewis L. Brown.—Your paper is now paid for to the end of this volume. Direct to Hon. O. S. Halsted, Box 91, Newark, N. J., for his work, enclosing $3, and say to him, you are a subscriber for the Herald of Life. He sends to all such on the receipt of $3, which includes postage.

"I HOLD STILL."

(From the German of Julius Sturm.)

PAIN'S furnace heat within me quivers,
God's breath upon the flames do blow,
And my heart in anguish shivers
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And in his hottest fire hold still.

He comes and lays my heart all heated,
On the hard anvil, minded so
Into his own fair shape to beat it
With his great hammer, blow on blow;
And yet I whisper, As God will!
And at his heaviest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and beats it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er, and heats it;
And lets it cool, and makes it glow,
And yet I whisper as God will!
And, in his mighty hand, hold still.

Why should I murmur—for the sorrow
Thus only longer-lived would be;
Its end may come, and will, to-morrow,
When God has done his work in me;
So I say trusting, As God will!
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles for my profit purely,
Affliction's glowing fiery brand,
And all his heaviest blows are surely
Inflicted with a Master-hand:
So I say praying, As God will!
And hope in him, and suffer still.

—Selected by GEO. W. ALLSHOUSE.

FIRST DEATH AND FIRST RESURRECTION.

BY ELD. Z. CAMPBELL.

[Continued from last week.]

WE pass on to consider other arguments. The advocates of the resurrection of the wicked dead say, "It is necessary for the wicked to be raised to suffer more or less according to the amount of their sins." This is but a modification of eternal torture, and came from the same source, and is in perfect harmony with depraved nature; but is far from the adorable attributes of a good God. With him, suffering is no part of the penalty of sin. But it is judging God after the manner of wicked men, who inflict suffering to gratify the spirit of revenge. But God is love, and punishes through the spirit of love. "For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways, higher than your ways and my thoughts (higher) than your thoughts."—Isa. lv. 9. Sin, by its own nature, makes men miserable, and so death is kindly instituted to prevent the sinner from being eternally miserable. And one death will answer this purpose as well as two; while ages of suffering would not; but would only frustrate the kind object of the penalty. Moreover, death is designed to eliminate sin, and its evil consequences, so that the will of God may be done on earth as in heaven, and earth finally become a heaven. No amount of suffering will accomplish this great good. The death only of all the wicked will accomplish it, and one death will answer all useful purposes.

God is just; but he keeps no balances to weigh sins in. He that steals a mite, sins; and he that steals ten thousand dollars does no more than sin. But that kind of human policy which would punish that sinner most, who sinned the most, would make a God to reward that saint the most, who had served the most. But not so with the laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. There were some who had wrought twelve hours, some nine, some six, three, and one: yet all received alike; every man a penny. Yet God rewards every man according to his works; whether they be good or bad; not according to how much good, or how much bad. 2 Corth. v. 10.

Again: the die twice believers call our attention to 1 Tim. iv. 10, wherein it is said, "God is the Saviour of all men, especially of those who believe." In commenting on this, they tell us, there is a common salvation and a special salvation; and by the common salvation all men will be raised from the dead. And by the special salvation the righteous receive the gift of eternal life, while the wicked die again. This common salvation is a queer thing in theology, and something new under the sun.

To bring a dead man to life and kill him again, is salvation with a vengeance! No one can thank God for such a salvation as that. The idea better becomes a cruel and revengeful tyrant than a God of love. The thing is too ridiculous and God dishonoring to merit a serious consideration; so we pass it by for another text. It is Rev. i. 7. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so. Amen."

On this text we are told, "As every eye must see him when he comes, all that ever had eyes, if dead, must be raised." Suppose we admit it; then every knee and every tongue shall be raised. And now it is written also, "That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear."—Isa. xlv. 23. "And as I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God."—Rom. xiv. 11; also, Phil. ii. 10, 11, "That at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father." Now if every knee bows to him, and every tongue confesses him to the honor and glory of God the Father, all will be saved, and Universalism, is true. "And they also which pierced him." One Roman soldier pierced him with a spear. The plural pronoun, they, cannot refer to him; so there is no evidence that he will be raised. "And all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." What all kindreds of the earth? Not the righteous; for they will rejoice, knowing their redemption is come. It will be the blessed day that all the holy ones of old have desired to see, but died without the sight. How then, are we to understand the text? Only in the general order of the fulfilment of prophecy. That is, to allow a time, a place, and a people, to the fulfilment of every prophecy. For it will be fulfilled in the future, as it had been in the past, not all at once. It concerns the people that live at the time of its fulfilment, and sometimes those that live afterward. If it concerns the dead, it is stated. And it is very wrong to throw in a resurrection to make out a creed, where God has not foretold one.

In Matt. xxv. 31, we read, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. And before him shall be gathered all nations," etc. What all nations? Is it all nations that ever existed? Not a word of it; but all nations that exist when he comes in his glory. And even then; what are the all nations? Dan. ii. 44. "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall not be destroyed." These kings are the ten, and when they are gathered before him every eye shall see him, and they also who have pierced him, and all the kindreds of the earth will wail because of him. All this, and no resurrection either.

And now by the parable of the wheat and tares; there will be a time when the wicked will be destroyed. The tares are not the resurrected wicked, but the living wicked at the time; and are gathered out of his kingdom before the saints are gathered in; therefore they are destroyed before the righteous are raised. And so when all the wicked are destroyed every knee shall bow to him, and every tongue will confess him, to the honor and glory of God the Father. But further we are told, "It is necessary to raise the wicked to bring them to judgment;" in proof of which Heb. ix. 27, is, with much gusto quoted: "And as it is appointed unto men once to die but after this the judgment." But the next verse is a second death to their theory. It reads, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many," etc. As it is appointed unto men once to die; so, for that reason, Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many. But had it been appointed unto men twice to die, so Christ must have been twice offered.

We have successfully met the orthodox views of eternal torment in that Christ took upon him the penalty of sin, in making the atonement. But as he did not suffer eternal torment, eternal torment is not the penalty. And the argument is just as irrefutable that the penalty is not die twice, because Christ did not die twice in making the atonement.

Still it is insisted that the wicked must come to judgment. Let them come then; I am quite willing. But I have shown that they are now passing the judicial judgment, which began under our Lord's preaching, and that it will continue on, until all the morally dead will be judged by the gospel. But I admit, also, that there is a future judgment; but it is executive in its character. Proof. Psa. cxix. 84: "When wilt thou execute judgment on those that persecute me?" Psa. cxlix. 5; "Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praise of God be in their mouth and a two-edged sword in their hands; to execute vengeance upon the heathen and punishment upon the people; to bind their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgment written. This honor have all his saints. Praise ye the Lord." John v. 27; "And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man." Jer. xxiii. 5. "Behold the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." And of the same tenor are Ezek. v. 8, 15; xi. 9, and Jude 15.

These texts abundantly prove the character of the future judgment, both of the living and the dead. But how are the dead judged? The Revelator says, "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which was the Book of Life; and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works."—Rev. xx. 12. Judgment as here represented, is executed on the dead, not on the living. The righteous dead died under the promise of a resurrection. John vi. 44. This promise will be executed on them while dead; and will bring them to life. The wicked died under a promise that they should not see life; John iii. 36; and that they should remain in the congregation of the dead; Prov. xxi. 16, and that they shall fall and never rise up again. Amos viii. 14. These promises will be executed on them while they are dead and that will end them.

Another text is sometimes dragged in to the die twice theory. It is, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." To make this answer the purpose it is asserted that the same all in Adam, is the same all in Christ. Suppose we grant it; then the same all will be raised, for the very good reason that they are all righteous. Gal. iii. 29. So, by their own exposition of the text, they prove the resurrection of the righteous only. This is bad shooting; to aim at the resurrection of the wicked, and hit the resurrection of the righteous, and not discover they have missed the mark. Their mistake is, all in Adam are not all in Christ; if they are, all are righteous, and all will be saved.

The case of Baalam is sometimes brought up. He is represented so wicked as to have no redeeming trait of virtue about him. Then he could not have been a true prophet, and could not leave any evidence that he will be raised to see the Lord. If God restrained him from cursing Israel, so be it. He restrains the wicked from doing many things they would do if they were not restrained. There is not the least evidence that he was compelled by the Holy Spirit to foretell the coming of Christ. Enoch had foretold it long before the flood; so he might have known it without being inspired.

Luke xi. 31, 32, is referred to. But there appears no evidence of a resurrection of the wicked in the text. It is stated that the "This generation" must be raised in the day of judgment to be condemned by the Ninevites and the queen of the South. But in Matt. xxiv. 34, "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled." All these things are not yet fulfilled, so that generation is not yet passed. The words mean, tribe or race; and is the Jewish race still existing, and will exist when Christ comes; and may be condemned by the resurrected penitent Ninevites. There are several other texts of a similar import in which things are said to the generation, or race, at one time to be fulfilled on the same race at another time before the race is extinct.

The above quotations and arguments are thought by many to prove a resurrection of all the wicked dead; but it must be borne in mind that it is the old orthodox view of the subject, and until lately all believed it. And scarcely a shadow of evidence is necessary to convince or confirm those who already believe. The earnest seekers after truth, cannot be convinced by such thin shadows; they must have something more tangible.

The resurrection of the wicked cannot be made to harmonize with the divine attributes of God; for that reason alone, it cannot be true. There are thousands in full faith that all the dead will be raised, who never heard but one side of the question. Such, really have no belief about it; but only a confirmed habit of thinking. The Bible cannot prove both sides of the question; and here is one side—"But they that shall be counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage: NEITHER CAN THEY DIE ANY MORE: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36. Here God has put his veto on the resurrection of any but his own children, and has declared that they shall die no more. Some of his children may die before they are perfected in faith and righteousness, and be raised; if so, there may be such a thing as a resurrection of the unjust; and if so, it does not touch the question of the resurrection of the wicked; for the unjust are not necessarily wicked. New born babes are unjust, because not justified by faith; but they are not wicked, because they never disobeyed; they are not disbelievers, because they have not refused to believe; but they are unbelievers, because they know nothing to believe.

As touching the positive proof on one side of the question, it has already been shown that it is utterly impossible to make the Lord's language on this occasion (Luke xx. 37), prove the resurrection of one class, without making it prove the non-resurrection of another class. But as further proof, I call attention to John vi. 47–50. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath eternal life. I am the bread of life. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is that bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die." And the 58th verse; "This is that bread which came down from heaven, not as your fathers did eat manna and are dead; he that eateth of this bread shall live forever." The fathers ate manna, and their bodies are dead. Christians have eaten the bread of life and their bodies are dead. Now what is the difference between the two? The Saviour says, the fathers are dead; but those who eat the bread of life shall not die. According to this, one is dead, and the other is not dead. Now God is the God of the one that is alive, which proves that one will be resurrected. But God is not the God of the one that is dead, which proves he will have no resurrection. In other words, God is not the God of the fathers who ate manna, but he is the God of those who eat the bread of life.

But it may be said, The difference is, the fathers who eat manna, will die twice; and the Christians who eat the bread of life, will die but once. But there is no force in the argument until it is demonstrated that two deaths will kill a man deader than one.

Here lies the error; one death will answer all purposes that two can. And the one death theory reflects more of the Divine goodness, mercy, and wisdom, than the two death theory. And the more we see of the goodness of God, the more good men will love him, and the more they will love the brethren; and in all respects be better Christians.

LANDAFF, N. H., May, 1870.

HAVE FAITH.

WE once listened to a sermon on faith, preached in a Congregational church not more than ten miles out of Boston, to a highly intelligent audience who were greatly amused, to say the least, if not instructed.

Said the preacher, "Noah was commanded to build the Ark. Well, now, Noah did not know what an ark was. He had never seen one, and much less expected to be called upon to build one; but he had faith to believe that he could do it, and set himself about it without any misgivings. He commenced first by collecting together all the materials needed, and found that a large quantity of lumber would be required, in fact this was perhaps the heavest item required in the construction of an ark such as he was commanded to build, and that a great amount of labor was required in getting these things all together. Well, now, human nature was much the same in those days as it is at the present time, and," said the preacher, "I have no doubt but there were men actually employed to haul that lumber who, taking advantage of Noah's necessities, charged much more, say two or three times more for doing the work than any man would consider a fair price. But Noah did not get discouraged, for he had faith to believe that he could build the Ark, even against all these adverse circumstances, and he did build the Ark.

"Again," said the preacher, "Peter was confined in prison; he prayed for his release, and had faith to believe that he would be liberated. He would kneel in prayer, then rise and try the door of his cell, only to find it bolted and locked on both sides, till at last, on taking hold of the handle, he found it unfastened, when he lost no time in leaving his uncomfortable quarters. Well, my hearers," said the preacher, "where do you suppose Peter went, on first stepping out of his cell? Did he go down to the hotel? No, he went straight over to the prayer-meeting on the other side of the way, and little Rhoda opened the door and let him in. So much for having faith."—Boston Transcript.

A GOOD WIFE.

THE following sentences from Archbishop Secker's "Wedding Ring," are worth reading twice:

"Hast thou a soft heart? it is of God's breaking. Hast thou a sweet wife? she is of God's making. The Hebrews have a saying, 'He is not a man who hath not a woman.' Though man alone may be good, yet it is not good that man should be alone. 'Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above.' A wife, though she be not a perfect gift, is a good gift, a beam darted from the sun of mercy. How happy are those marriages where Christ is at the wedding! Let none but those who have found favor in God's eyes find favor in yours. Husbands should spread a mantle of charity over their wives' infirmities. Do not put out the candle because of the snuff. Husbands and wives should provoke one another to love; and they should love one another, notwithstanding provocations. The tree of love should grow up in the midst of the family, as the tree of life grew in the garden of Eden. Good servants are a great blessing; good children are a greater blessing; but a good wife is the greatest blessing; and such a help let him seek for that lacks one; let him sigh for him that hath lost one; let him delight in him that enjoys one."

THE BENEFITS OF SLEEP.

THERE is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this, that the brain expands its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are recuperated during sleep; if the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers—this is insanity. Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs; thus it is, also, that those who are starved to death become insane; the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The practical inferences are these:

1. Those who think most, who do most brain work, require most sleep.

2. The time saved from necessary sleep is infallibly destructive to mind, body, and estate.

3. Give yourself, your children, your servants—give all that are under you, the fullest amount of sleep they will take, compelling them to retire at some regular hour, and to rise the moment they wake; and within a fortnight, nature, with almost the regularity of the sun, will unloose the bands of sleep the moment enough repose has been secured for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and sufficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself. Nature will never fail to write it out to the observer under the regulations just given.—Selected by W. H. S.

"I WON'T DRINK IT NOW."

A COLORED man died recently in the streets of Washington. He was formerly a slave in Alexandria, Va. His life as a professed Christian, had been consistent. All who knew him prized him for his honesty, truth, sobriety, and industry. At the time of his death he was in the employ of the Washington city government, engaged with others in digging a deep trench through one of the public thoroughfares. While stooping down at his work, a large body of hard earth, mingled with stones, suddenly fell upon him, crushing his body beneath its weight. He was extricated as soon as possible, and carried to a neighboring building. There was no bruise perceptible, no blood; but he gave signs of great inward pain. In a few moments it was apparent to all who saw him that he would die almost immediately. A surgeon examined him, and at once gave him up; at the same time adding that a glass of brandy might revive him for a short time. It was speedily procured, and placed in his hand. The moment it was raised to his lips, he threw it from him, as far as the room would permit it to pass. It struck against the wall, and was dashed to pieces, the poisonous stuff flowing beneath the feet of the people. With an almost superhuman effort the dying man exclaimed:

"I haven't drinked liquor for more than thirty years, and I won't drink it now!"

NOTHING teaches patience like a garden. You may go round and watch the opening bud from day to day; but it takes its own time, and you cannot urge it on faster than it will. If forced, it is only torn to pieces. All the best results of a garden, like those of life, are slowly but regularly progressive.

HE who receives a good turn should never forget it; he who does one should never remember it.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

ALL'S WELL.

THE day is ended. Ere I sink to sleep,
My weary spirit seeks repose in thine;
Father! forgive my trespasses, and keep
This little life of mine.

With loving kindness curtain Thou my bed,
And cool in rest my burning pilgrim feet;
Thy pardon be the pillow for my head—
So shall my sleep be sweet.

At peace with all the world, dear Lord, and Thee;
No fears my heart's unwavering faith can shake;
All's well! which ever side the grave for me,
The morning light may break!

COMPANY MANNERS.

"WILL you please sit down and wait a few moments till mother comes?" said a little girl to two ladies who came to see her mother.

"And will you give me a glass of water, Martha?" asked one of the ladies; "I am very thirsty."

"With pleasure," answered Martha. Martha presently came back with two goblets of water on a small waiter, which she passed to both ladies.

"Oh, thank you," said the other lady; "you are very thoughtful."

"You are quite welcome," said Martha, very sweetly.

When Martha went out of the room one of the ladies said, "This little girl is one of the loveliest children I ever met. How sweet and obliging her manners are."

Let us go into the next room and see. Martha took the waiter back into the dining-room.

"Me drink! me drink!" cried little Bobby, catching hold of his sister's dress and screwing up his rosy lips. "Get out Bob!" cried Martha roughly; "you are for ever in the way." "Me drink," said the little fellow.

"No," said Martha; "go to Bridget." "Don't speak so to your little brother," said Bridget. "It is none of your business what I say," cried Martha, tossing back her head.

"Martha!" That is grandmother calling from the top of the stairs. "What?" screamed Martha back. "Please come here, dear," said grandma. "I don't want to go" muttered Martha. She, however, dragged herself up stairs. Unwilling feet you know, find it hard to climb.

"Martha," said grandma, "will you try and find my specs? I am pretty sure I left them in the dining-room." "No, you didn't," cried Martha in a cross contradictory tone; "you always lose them up here;" and she rummaged round the chamber, tumbling things over like the north wind.

"No matter," said the dear old lady, seeing she would have much to do to put things to rights again, "no matter, Martha, they will come to hand;" and she quietly put down the newspaper for by-and-by. Martha left her, and went down stairs with a pout.

Oh, dear! where are Martha's civil, obliging manners? Why, those are her company manners. She puts them on in the parlor, and puts them off when she leaves the parlor. She wears them before visitors, and hangs them up when they are gone. You see she has no manners at home. She is cross and disobliging, and rude and selfish. She forgets that home is the first place to be polite in—polite up stairs, down stairs, in doors, out doors, in the kitchen, as well as in the parlor. There is no spot in the house where good manners can be dispensed with.—Child's paper.

A CHILD'S REBUKE.

"'MAMMA,' said a little child, 'my Sabbath school teacher tells me this world is only a place where God lets us live a little while that we may prepare for a better world. But mamma, I don't see any body preparing for eternity. I see you preparing to go to the country, and Aunt Eliza is preparing to come here. But I do not see any one preparing to go to heaven. If any body wants to go there, why don't they try to get ready?' Reader, are you making any preparation? If not, when will you begin? To-day, why not? 'Now is the accepted time; and now, is the day of salvation.'"

A CHILD'S IDEAS OF THE THEOLOGICAL HELL.

A LITTLE girl was very fond of preaching to her dolls. Her mother one day, heard her reproving one of them, for being so wicked. "Oh, you naughty sinful child!" she said shaking the waxen limbs; "you'll go to the lake of brimstone, and you won't burn up—you'll just sizzle!"

HOME CHEERFULNESS.

MANY a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles, as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases they are apt to seek it; if it displeases they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother, then, try to be happy. Let them look happy. Let them talk to their children, especially the little ones, in such a way as to make them happy.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts.
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD'S LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

Diamond Edition of Tracts.

1. "YOU ARE IMMORTAL," per hundred, 75 cents

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1870. VOLUME VII.--NUMBER 36. WHOLE NUMBER 322.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

PROF. BARTLETT'S BOOK.

IN our issue of May 11, we published an article from "The Advance" on "Annihilation," which wound up as follows:

"Those who wish to see the question ably treated in full, we refer to Prof. Bartlett's 'Life and Death Eternal,' Published by the Boston Am. Tract Society."

As some of our readers have never seen Dr. FINLEY'S notice of that work, published by us in April 1867, we republish it:

DR. BARTLETT'S BOOK.

LETTER FROM DR. J. K. FINLEY.

NILES, Mich., April 9, 1867.

MY DEAR FRIEND: At your request I procured Dr. Bartlett's work, "Life and Death Eternal," and have given it as careful a reading as it required. It was hard work to wade through a book filled with arguments, which, like those of infidelity, have been refuted time and time again, until both the arguments and their refutation fall upon the ear as a "thrice told tale," "stale, flat and unprofitable." The whole book is made up of unfounded assumptions, ad captandum arguments based upon these assumptions, ridiculous sophistries, and as politicians say, appeals for Buncome, with learned and laborious efforts to prove that when "the sun shines it gives light."

The animus of the man, to use one of his own expressions, "lies upon the surface;" and the merits of the book, or rather, I should say, its demerits, are equally apparent. He writes with all the impertinence as well as the unfairness of one who is fully conscious that he is in perfect sympathy with all orthodoxy, and is fully backed up by its authority, rather than by the weight of argument or the power of truth.

Orthodoxy has always been mean and tyrannical. From the time when at the bar of Pilate it cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him," down to the present moment, it has shown itself bigoted and intolerant, and when it had the power, persecuting and cruel. Dr. Bartlett, in my humble opinion, is largely imbued with its spirit, and only lacks the power and the opportunity to manifest it, in its most hateful characteristics.

He and some others of our opponents have even descended so low as to impute improper and injurious motives to those who differ from them, a species of arguments which truth, in the hands of a sincere votary of truth, will never employ, and which a gentleman, who has a proper respect for himself, and for the truth, will treat with contempt and pass by as unworthy of notice. It ill becomes a man of the calibre and scholarship of Dr. Bartlett to pretend to turn up his nose at such opponents as Archbishop WHATELY, Chancellor HALSTED, Professor Hudson, Rev. Messrs. Dobney, Panton Ham, Moncrief, White, and multitudes of others who might be named. Such demonstrations too forcibly remind one of Shakespeare's dog "baying the moon," and the effect upon intelligent minds in either case will be the same.

In his preface, the Doctor says:

We have commonly employed the term 'annihilation' to designate the cessation of existence which these writers advocate. We are aware that many of them object to the term as not being fully expressive of their mode of stating and arguing the case. We would only say that we cannot be debarred the use of a convenient, indeed an indispensable term, out of deference to their preferences. We state their views and arguments fairly and fully; and it will be found, we trust, that the validity of our reasoning does not at all hinge upon the name by which we characterize the system.

Now, I would like to know by what claim of right does this mass of self-conceit justify himself before any tribunal, either in heaven or on earth, for using a term to designate our doctrines which he knows was given to us in reproach, and which, he admits, we object to as not expressive of our views. I do aver that in all my experience of human nature in its most repulsive aspects, I have never met with a more perfect exhibition of discourteousness either in a clergyman or a layman.

When I first read the above extract, I supposed Dr. B. meant what he said, and that he intended to use the term annihilation because it seemed convenient, although I could not see why the term destructionist, which we do not object to, which is Scriptural, and which was used by our Saviour himself, would not have been quite as convenient. But when in the third chapter I came across the following quotation, his object was very apparent. Some of our writers had, it seems, made use of the phrase extinction of being, and cessation of existence, meaning of course living existence; the Doctor, however, pounces upon them as if he thought he had made a grand discovery of an exceedingly weak point. He prates as follows:

Death does not literally mean, nor does it include, extinction of being, cessation of existence, or even dissolution; nor is life in its lower sense simply synonymous with existence. The distinction between the animate and inanimate is not between the existent and the non-existent. Here are two trees; one is dead and the other is alive, but they both are in existence, and both are trees. Death does not itself signify even decay or dissolution; for the dead tree is still entire. A dead body is still a body, though dead.

After continuing in the same strain for some time, even ad nauseum, he says:

Dissolution again is not extinction, only a change of form; for no matter is annihilated.

Now, how apparent it is that all such stuff as this is simply to throw dust in the eyes of his readers, for the Doctor well knows that he will not find a child ten years old, possessed of ordinary intelligence, who will say that death consists in non-existence, in the sense in which he has presented it. There can be no mistaking his principal object, which was undoubtedly to convey the impression that we believe death to mean, literally, the annihilation not only of man but of the particles of matter of which he is composed. Verily, let Dr. Bartlett have whatever virtues he may, he ought not to boast of common honesty as one of them.

In this connection our author gives the definition of death found in Webster's Dictionary, which it seems to me ought to have been sufficient to have opened even his eyes. He says, "The primary meaning of the word, as there given, turns, not on the extinction of being, but on 'the cessation of certain functions.'" Precisely so, most discriminating Dr. Bartlett! Death is ceasing to live, and when it takes place the functions of life cease, as the procuring cause of it: and when these functions cease to be performed, man is no longer subject to the laws of physiological action; in other words, the controlling power of life over chemical action ceases, and then, as a natural result, the particles of matter of which he is composed are brought under the uncontrolled power of chemical forces. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was" before "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his 'breathing members' the breath of lives, and man became an 'animal of life,' or living creature."

Again, in his first chapter, the Doctor, with characteristic disengenuousness, says, "There have arisen from time to time individuals and bodies of men who have denied that the doctrine of endless misery is in the word of God." (The phrase "endless misery" is certainly not in the Bible.) "But here," he continues, "appears a singular phenomenon: the opposers cannot agree among themselves." He then informs us that the opposers of the doctrine of "endless suffering" (not in the Bible either) "consist of three divisions, viz: The Restorationists, the Universalists who do not believe in any punishment, and 'the third section who teach the complete extinction of the wicked.'" Now, the disingenuousness of the Doctor consists in the implication that all the believers in the inherently immortal soul and endless misery theory, are perfectly agreed and united among themselves—a happy family, there being no "singular phenomenon" amongst them! Whilst no one knows better than Dr. B. that they are divided into an almost countless number of sects, who have heretofore, and are now, spending more of their strength, ten-fold, in fighting with each other, than in fighting what they call their common enemy. As Chancellor HALSTED has well said, "Books of so-called theology have become so multiplied that a lifetime is not sufficient to read and compare the thousand and one different and contradictory views of men on various points supposed to be involved in Theos-logos—God-word—Theo-logy—of the Bible, but which have really no foundation in God's word."

A large part of Dr. Bartlett's volume is taken up in proving that life and death, and various other words, are used in a tropical sense in the Scriptures; and he piles up proof upon proof, and illustration upon illustration, as if he really believed that any person in the wide world, of ordinary common sense, ever doubted it. And still further to show the animus of the man, he says that Mr. Hudson and Mr. Dobney both admit that these words are sometimes used in a tropical sense, as if they or any other destructionist ever disputed it.

It would appear as if the Doctor's only object could be to prevent his readers from seeing the real question at issue; which is, not whether they are sometimes used figuratively or metaphorically, but in what sense does God use them, when He designates by them, the penalty of sin, and the everlasting reward of the righteous.

This is undoubtedly the question, and it has been made so unanswerably apparent that they are, and necessarily must be, used in their primary sense, that I do not think it worth while to waste time in analyzing and refuting his so-called arguments. The Bible truth has been fully set forth in "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST" by George Storrs—"Bible versus Tradition"—Dobney on the future punish- of the wicked—Prof. Hudson's great work, "Debt and Grace," and many minor works which can generally be obtained from Geo. Storrs, box 4658, New York. A recent work by ex-Chancellor O. S. HALSTED, of New Jersey, entitled "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE. Itself the teacher and its own interpreter," is a most critical and learned book of great labor and research, covers the whole ground, establishing the doctrines of the destructionists beyond any reasonable doubt. Twelve years of study were devoted to it, and it will amply repay its careful study to any one who is honestly desirous of knowing "what is truth."

I remain very truly your friend,

J. K. FINLEY.

NOTE BY THE ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.—The foregoing was accompanied by the following letter to us:

BR. STORRS: I received a letter some time ago from a friend in Peru, a lady of uncommon mental powers and attainments, requesting me to give her my opinion of Dr. Bartlett's book. Owing to severe sickness I have been unable to attend to her request until lately. I was in hopes to have seen something in the HERALD on this subject, but as there has nothing appeared yet, I thought I would send you my reply to this friend's request. I have thought there might be some of our friends who might, at least, be confused by his foolish assumptions, and special pleadings, it might do some good to such persons to expose the man. I send it to you to do as you think best. Publish or not, as may appear proper. I think I have done the Doctor no injustice—indeed the whole spirit of the book is such as would justify me in saying more than I have.

A GLIMPSE OF OUR TIMES.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

MEN of the world are generally but little interested in looking at the times through the prophetic word. Their hearts may be filled with fearful forebodings of some coming calamity, and vainly try to pierce the vail of the future, they settle down to feed on the feeblest morsels of hope, and await for the onward strides of time to disperse the deep darkness which overshadows them. But God's children act differently. Like the sailor on the broad ocean, they always consult their never-failing chart, while they watch every sign which foretells that the harbor is near.

It is a remarkable fact that all great convulsions in this world have been preceded by signs which marked their approach. And God's people have never been in darkness regarding the infliction of a judgment upon the world.

Again: All important eras in the history of the world have been ushered in by inventions particularly adapted to the emergencies of the times. The discovery of gunpowder immediately preceded the breaking up of the feudal system of the middle ages; and the invention of the art of printing paved the way for the onward march of the Reformation. In looking back but a few years in the history of the world we witness such a progression in invention as to startle the world with a feeling of the nearness of some great event. Month after month mankind have been startled by new discoveries in the art of killing men. Nations vie with each other in producing weapons of destruction. No other generation ever witnessed such a condition of things. How soon these implements of death may be called into requisition no one can tell. There exists a universal apprehension throughout Christendom of some great crisis in the history of this world—a prevailing impression that a mighty revolution is at hand. We hear of these expectations from the east and the west, from the north and the south. It is no transitory impression. It is a conviction that has forced itself upon their consideration, and which has sprung up spontaneously in their minds. They breathe it in the atmosphere surcharged with the elements which feed and keep it alive.

In looking at the condition of the world we cannot refrain from considering the impressive description that Christ gave of the generation which should witness his coming. On the part of the world he says there should be "distress of nations, with perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory."—Luke xxi. 25–27. And he further says: "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." We need not array before you the fact that we are now living in a time of distress and perplexity of nations. Look upon the world. Was there ever such a time of perplexity known? The daily papers are teeming with facts of the universal distress and commotion of nations. For years all Europe has been preparing for a dreadful struggle, and now stands ready upon short notice to bathe the land with human blood. The conflict of nations cannot long be delayed. It is sure to come. Soon—aye, perhaps very soon—the tumult of battle, the clash of steel, and the rushing (as the prophet Isaiah says) of the "multitude of many people like the rushing of mighty waters," will announce to the world that the day of the Lord has come. "The nations shall rush, but God shall rebuke them, and shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a thistle down before the whirlwind."—Isai. xvii. 12–14.

But look at America—"the land shadowing with wings," "that sendeth ambassadors by the sea."—Isai. xviii. 1. No Republic was ever rocked by such political agitations as this. The dividing spirit is in her councils, and distress and perplexity stand out in bold relief throughout her borders. Oh, America! thou mother of liberty; the hand of judgment rests mightily upon thee. Concentrated as thou art no foreign foe dare attempt thy subjugation. Thy enemies are within thyself. Thy destroyers are the children which thou hast reared with the fondness of parental care. Thy masses walk in debauchery and crime, and thy rulers wallow in the deepest mire of corruption, while the foe is concentrating within thy borders to inflict thy death wound. "Mene, Tekel," is written by the sweat of thy oppressed people, and in letters of blood upon thy walls.

But, dear reader, I leave this subject with you for the present. There was never a more thrilling time in the history of the world than the present. Every evidence, coupled with the present condition of the world and the nominal church, shows conclusively that we stand upon the eve of Christ's advent.

We have passed all the landmarks, and now stand at the end of our journey, tired, and groaning for our deliverance. The rays of morning already begin to shower their pellucid glory upon our pathway. The prophetical history of the world is in the past, except the closing event, when Christ shall come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory to redeem His people. This is what we are waiting and watching for. This is the great motive to purify ourselves from the stains of sin, and be ready for His coming; having our robes washed and made white in His blood.

In sober consideration of this subject what thrilling times are these! What destinies of human beings hang upon the silken cords of these fleeting moments! Oh, reader, arouse thyself. No time now must be lost in the idle fancies of the world; for, behold the Master cometh. Be watchful, and make thy salvation sure. "BEHOLD I COME QUICKLY."—Rev. iii. 11.

BROTHERLY LOVE.

"Let brotherly love continue."—Heb. xiii. 1.

THIS word "continue" looks two ways, prospective and retrospective; it first implies that love has been, and next indicates fear that causes have arisen or may arise to disturb it; and surely there never was a day when it was more needed as a watchword in every section of the Christian church.

If, in the presence of the Canaanite and Perizzite, the herdmen of the patriarchs must not strive lest reproach come upon their fellowship as "brethren," how much less does it become the disciples of a Master who said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another," in the face of an infidel world and a false church to be casting out, rejecting, and even excommunicating one another! 'Tis sad enough to make our Father sorry, and angels weep, if they can, to see Christian men so unwise to themselves, so unfair to their fellows, and so little governed in their conduct toward each other by their text book, a code put into their hands with express warnings, solemn admonitions, and singularly minute direction in detail how to deal with an offending brother, how, that when common report (which is commonly a liar) assails a brother, we should exercise that love which thinketh no evil, but beareth all things patiently and hopefully, until the supposed offender be first proved, and when proved, and proved a heretic, then to receive a first and second admonition before being rejected.

Especially important is it in matters of doctrine to inquire and consider the number and power of those who sympathise with the offender, that he may not stand alone in his defence, but that the testimony of others also should be admitted in evidence, and after all has been heard that can be said in his favor, the evidence having been fully heard and fairly weighed, then we should be tardy in pronouncing a judgment which may possibly condemn ourselves. Is it so, that there are not wise men among us, none that are able to judge between brethren and brethren in matters of doctrine whereupon they honestly differ? or, must it be that when one or two differ from the main body of any one particular gathering, that might shall be reckoned right, and so the majority agree to brand and reject the honest objectors as heretics? Can this be done in face of the New Testament admonition—"In meekness" to instruct "those that oppose themselves?" Instead thereof, what do we see? Error is reported as broached in certain quarters, mis-statements are made, false premises are declared and equally false conclusions are deduced, the natural passion of preference to believe ill than well of our neighbor is indulged, and without inquiry or apparent disposition to distinguish between doctrines that essentially differ, opposing theories are confounded, and the worst imputed to the "heretic," whether rightly or wrongly it seems to matter not!

Alas! for the admonitions! "See that ye fall not out by the way;" "Be at peace among yourselves;" "Above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."

Brethren, beloved of God, called to be saints—for to such and such only we speak in loving earnestness and honest fidelity—bear with us while we utter our growing conviction concerning "this time!" The God of heaven, our loving Father, in strict accordance with his whole economy of revelation from the beginning, is at this time giving to many of his children in various sections of the church some further light upon the subject of the non-eternity of evil, as a test to prove us, whether our faith stands in the systems and creeds of men or in himself as perfect love, holiness, justice, equity, and truth, and whether our regard for each other is mere sympathy in doctrine and practice, or love in the Spirit as fellow partakers of the same grace. And how are we standing the test? What has it produced already? Are we walking in love as dear children? Are we noble as the Bereans of old, to search whether these things are so? Are we wise to hear that we may increase learning, and as men of understanding to attain unto wise counsels? Have we exhausted the treasury of wisdom in the written word, and learned therein all our Father's will? Have we so nearly attained infallibility, that as arbiters of right and wrong we may pronounce on this and that, in spirit like to her who saith, "I sit a queen?"

Or, is our faith so fickle, our confidence so weak, our judgment so unsound, that we fear to encounter honest inquiry, and tremble to prove whether rock or sand is beneath our feet?

There is much of truth in the following quotation from a daily journal of recent date, "when new opinions are broached, the church cares not to inquire, 'Are they true, false, or doubtful?' but 'Are they contrary to our creeds and formularies?' If they are, the teacher must leave the church or be silenced. And yet, beyond all question, the important matter in religion is to ascertain, 'What is true?' The church may answer this question simply by saying, 'Orthodoxy is true, heterodoxy is false,' but this reply is becoming daily more and more unsatisfactory. If orthodoxy be true, why does it shrink from examination? When arguments are brought forward against some old established belief, the way to serve the cause of truth is to answer them; if they cannot be answered the old belief is unsound, or at least doubtful, and we should not be ashamed to say so. In these days we must expect to have every possible question re-opened. Men have come at length to value truth for its own sake, and they perceive that this is the only way to obtain it, or such an approach to it as is possible. The church must therefore stand prepared to defend what she intends to keep, to surrender what proves untenable, and to hold as an open question what cannot be proven. This is the only impregnable position." Sadly true is that which a living authority of note has said of late, "Most men would rather die in error, than late in their day accept a truth which would disturb a lifelong faith."

But the age is upon us when time-honored doctrines as well as time-honored institutions will be put upon their trial, and for our individual security we shall need not "the law and testimony" alone, but that "unction of the Holy One which teacheth all things which is truth and no lie."—1 John ii. 20, 27. The fathers have eaten the sour grape, and the children's teeth have been set on edge too long, but now at length the children of wisdom are by her becoming stirred to inquire, "What hath the LORD answered? and what hath the LORD spoken?" and let all truth-loving and honest minds glory in the fact, that wherein our mother tongue fails to convey the sense of the original, scholars are at hand to interpret the spirit of the text which alone is binding upon the consciences of the faithful, ay, and better still, that with these children of wisdom abides the Spirit, the guide into all truth to make good their Father's promise, "The meek will he guide in judgment, and the meek will he teach his way."—Psalm xxv. 9.

In obedience to the exhortation to brotherly love, we shall do well to consider wherein our brotherhood consists! Have we one Father, one Saviour, one guide, one present joy in God through one Lord Jesus Christ, and one prospect of one home, one song, and many crowns from one hand, or, does our fellowship stand in creed, ceremony, and system, a subjection to ordinances after the doctrines and commandments of men calling again for the Master's reproof, "Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition, making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered."—Mark vii. 9, 13. But already our intended space is exceeded, yet is the matter grave, the argument weighty, the issues momentous, and our feeling upon it strong. The Master is at hand, his work must be done, and now seems to be the time of trial, whether, hand and heart united, we shall be "occupied till he come"—or whether, severed asunder and distracted, the servants in power, the overseers and office bearers shall be found beating the men servants and maidens, if not eating and drinking with the drunken. Assuredly the Lord of those vants shall come in a day when they look not for him, and—to say the least—they shall not be found ready.

May the God of all grace grant unto us that wisdom from above, which is first pure—or simple—then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy, that in anticipation of a returning Lord, we may be found of him in peace without spot and blameless.

Blackheath. N. STARKEY.

—The Rainbow.

WONDERS.

THE following was recently sent us by a friend; but we had seen it several weeks previous. We did not then, and do not now think it any thing reliable. We give it, however, to let our readers see how worldlings see, or fancy they see wonders. The true wonders of prophecy are not far away, and will fill their place in the appointed time:

WHAT WILL BECOME OF US?

The sun's atmosphere, say the scientific men, is in a highly excited condition. A column of magnetic light is shooting out further and further from the solar sphere, and it is now stretching out forty-five millions of miles. In other words, it has accomplished half the distance between us and the sun. The interesting question, and one on which, perhaps, we do not wish any more light of this character, is, how long will it be before it finishes the rest of the distance and bridges the gigantic chasm between the earth and the sun? Is it a messenger sent out to snatch us up as food for the insatiate monster that keeps himself warm by devouring planets, and whose fire-eating propensities this whole earth would satisfy for a few days only? If so, how long will this emissary be in reaching us, and carrying the globe away as if we were a gigantic lump of coal for a roaring furnace? The column of light at intervals indicates its approach by flashing and corruscating with fresh brilliancy. So decided are its effects that two astronomers, one at London, the other at Rockford, and neither knowing the experience of the other, and supposing that the dark glass of their telescopes had been broken or put out of range, so strong was the flash of golden light upon the vision. It is predicted that before the end of next year this magnificent light will have got near enough to us to make its immediate and actual influence upon the earth directly felt. It is announced that in consequence we may expect to see phenomena that have never been seen or known before by any human race. If any of our readers are, therefore, yet disposed to complain of the weather and the earthquakes, let them remember that by this time next year they may have an entire new line of experiences to explain and endure, in comparison with which the fitful winter and rough, rude autumn may seem like a June morning in paradise, and the earthquake's shock and lightning's storm, a placid rocking of the cradle, with a pleasant lullaby of thunder.—Buffalo Express.

RULES OY STUDY.

PROFESSOR DAVIES, the mathematician, gives the following rules of study: 1. Learn one thing at a time. 2. Learn that thing well. 3. Learn its connections, so far as possible, with all other things. 4. To know every thing about something, is better than to know something about everything.

Teachers, please ponder these, and then read them to your pupils, that they may consider them also. We are aware that it will take some courage to apply Rule 4, that is, to resolve to be ignorant of some things, that we may be profound in some others. But such is as inevitable as fate if profundity is gained. He who resolves to carry the whole cyclopedia of knowledge abreast of him will carry nothing very far.

PLEASURE is like a hornet—generally ends with a sting.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

ASTONISHING ACCURACY OF THE BIBLE.

AN astonishing feature of the Word of God is, that notwithstanding the time at which its compositions were written, and the multitudes of the topics to which it alludes, there is not one physical error—not one assertion or allusion disproved by the progress of modern science. None of those mistakes which the science of each succeeding age discovered in the books of the preceding; above all, none of those absurdities which modern astronomy indicates in such great numbers in the writings of the ancients—in their sacred codes in their philosophy, and even in the finest pages of the fathers of the church—not one of those errors is to be found in any of our sacred books. Nothing there will ever contradict that which, after so many ages, the investigations of the learned world have been able to reveal to us on the state of our globe, or on that of the heavens. Peruse with care our Scriptures from one end to the other, to find there such spots; and whilst you apply yourselves to this examination, remember that it is a book which speaks of everything, which describes nature, which recites its creation, which tells us of the water, of the atmosphere, of the mountains, of the animals, and of the plants. It is a book which teaches us the first revolutions of the world, and which also foretells its last. It recounts them in the circumstantial language of history, it extols them in the sublimest strains of poetry, and it chants them in the charms of glowing song. It is a book which is full of Oriental rapture, elevation, variety, and boldness. It is a book which speaks of the heavenly and invisible world, whilst it also speaks of the earth and things visible. It is a book which nearly fifty writers, of every degree of cultivation, of every state, of every condition, and living through the course of fifteen hundred years, have concurred to make. It is a book which was written in the centre of Asia, in the sands of Arabia, and in the desert of Judea; in the court of the temple of the Jews, in the music schools of the prophets of Bethel and Jericho, in the sumptuous palaces of Babylon, and on the idolatrous banks of Chebar; and finally, in the centre of the western civilisation, in the midst of the Jews and of their ignorance, in the midst of polytheism and its idols, as also in the bosom of pantheism and its sad philosophy. It is a book whose first writer had been forty years a pupil of the magicians of Egypt, in whose opinion the sun, the stars, and the elements, were endowed with intelligence, re-acted on the elements, and governed the world by a perpetual alluvium. It is a book whose first writer preceded by more than nine hundred years the most ancient philosophers of ancient Greece and Asia—the Thaleses, and Pythagorases, the Zalucuses, the Xenephons, and the Confuciuses. It is a book which carries its narrations even to the hierarchies of angels—even to the most distant epoch of the future, and the glorious scenes of the last days. Well, search among its 50 authors, search among its 66 books, its 1,189 chapters, and its 31,173 verses, search only for one of those thousand errors which the ancients and the moderns committed when they spoke of the heavens or of the earth—of their revolutions, of the elements; search—but you will find none.—The Rainbow.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL MAGAZINE, for June, is received. In July this sterling Juvenile is to be enlarged and improved. Those subscribing now receive one number free if they ask for it when they subscribe. One dollar a year. Published by SEWELL & MILLER, Chicago, Ill.

A CONSTITUTIONAL View of the late WAR BETWEEN THE STATES; its Causes, Character, Conduct and Results. Presented in a series of colloquies at Liberty Hall. By Alexander H. Stephens. In two volumes. National Publishing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; Cincinnati, Ohio; St. Louis, Mo.; Boston, Mass.; Atlanta, Ga.; Zeigler, McCurdy & Co., Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo.

We have received advance sheets of the Second Volume. The work is sold by Subscription only, and an Agent is wanted in every County.

LABOR is of noble birth, but Prayer is the daughter of Heaven. Labor has a place near the throne, but prayer touches the golden sceptre. Labor, Martha-like, is busy with much serving, but prayer sits with Mary at the feet of Jesus.

MASTERY over the minds of others is never obtained by those who do not know their own mind. But when a fixed end is kept distinctly in view, and steadily and firmly sought, this always gives confidence to weaker natures, and supplies direction to subordinate help.

ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

AFTER our paper had gone to press last week we received the following note. As we have heard nothing from him since, we trust Br. C. is recovering:

NEW HAVEN, Conn., June 13, 1870.

BR. STORRS: My father is still dangerously sick. We have despaired of his life, but to-day the doctor gives us a glimmering hope. Father wishes me to write you, and through your paper invites the church to beseech the Throne of the Heavenly Grace for a speedy delivery out of his great affliction if it so please Almighty God.

Very truly, yours,
FRED CAMPBELL.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 22, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE WICKED DEAD.

WE have been delayed in the issue of this "Campaign Document," numbered "18;" but it is now out, and those who have ordered it may look for it immediately. It contains the following articles, which appeared in the HERALD OF LIFE for May 25 and June 1, viz.,

No Life out of Christ. Acts xxiv. 15 considered. Objections urged and Answered. The Just Desert of Sin. Is the Judgment After Resurrection? What and Where is the Second Death? John v. 28, 29. Dying Twice: Is it a Bible Doctrine? The Symbols of Rev. xx.

All these important topics are now presented in a tract of 24 pages, at two cents per copy. See Campaign Documents, last page of this paper. Shall this tract not be sent out by thousands and tens of thousands? Give us the means to print them and it shall be done. Let us circulate ten thousand before our Anniversary in the last week of August, and have as many more to scatter then. All this can be done for $300, now that the stereotype plates are paid for. Only think—Twenty thousand of these little preachers in the field within ten weeks! and they will go where no other preacher of the Life views can go. Now is the time to send them on their mission. "Men and Brethren, help."

"THE FUTURE LIFE."

THIS is the name of another new tract soon to be issued as No. 19 of the Campaign Documents. It will contain the following articles which have appeared in the HERALD OF LIFE June 8 and 15, viz.,

Life from the Dead. Is Gehenna in a Future Life? The Resurrection: Anastasis. Meaning of Words and Phrases. The Hope of the Gospel. The Wicked Dead. "The Unsearchable Riches of Christ."

Our readers can all judge of the importance of this tract, as they have all seen the matter. Shall it go out by the thousand with the other? It is the same size and price We hope to have it ready within two weeks.

"THE RICH TRACT."

THIS tract was divided and issued in two separate parts, for the reason heretofore spoken of. As the names of the ministers, to whom BR. L. C. THORNE replies, do not appear in them, there does not now exist any reason for putting our friends to an extra expense by a separate issue. We shall, therefore, hereafter, issue both in one tract, as No 20 of the Campaign Documents, and to be known by the name of "The Rich Tract," and sold at two cents per copy, same as the other tracts of 24 page. For the present, till the edition on hand is exhausted, we shall send them in the separate form to those who order No. 20 of the Campaign Documents, but only two cents will be charged for both: postage extra, however, as on all other tracts.

GOOD ADVICE.

Let us beware how we rashly denounce others, because their views contradict what seems to us a "Thus saith the Lord," until we have examined the matter not traditionally but intelligently and candidly. It may be that our minds are running in some rut of false literalism, and that those we condemn do the Bible the truest honor.

THE above item we clipped from "The Advance." The advice is too good to be lost. Let us all lay it to heart, and act upon it. We would suggest one thought in addition. "It may be that our minds are," also, "running in some rut of false" spiritualism, as well as "false literalism." We believe those who appeal to the Bible are liable to go astray to both extremes. "Let us beware how we" turn aside to either, but keep the proper medium, looking constantly for "the Spirit of truth, to guide us into all truth."

CHARITY.

IF we believed to constitute a man a real Christian, he must be perfect in knowledge and judgment, we should never hope to find a Christian on earth, till the next age shall come. If men are sincerely inquiring after truth, and using the best light they have, and do fall into some error, they are no more blame-worthy than they would be for having a fever, or breaking their bones, or being destitute of daily food. We might just as well fall into a passion with our fellow-men for suffering with hunger, being sick, or breaking their bones, as to get out of humor with them for their errors in doctrine, if they manifest the spirit of Christ in their lives, and are using their best endeavors to inform themselves as to what is truth. To be sick or to be in error, are both misfortunes, and both cause loss or pain to a greater or less extent. The subject of these calamities is to be pitied, not abused. We would think him a tiger who would fall upon a man with a broken bone and abuse him. Surely error is worse to the individual than broken bones: and we all have more or less; let us never forget that.

MATERIALISM.

IN "The Rainbow," (England), for May, is an article by W. MAUDE, in reply to one from "W. Morris, of Philadelphia," Pa., which appeared in "The Rainbow" for March. The latter gentleman is taken very severely to task by the first named. But we do not design to speak of their controversy. Our object is to notice Mr. Maude's concluding remarks, which he calls "The Word of Warning," and run as follows:

"BEWARE OF MATERIALISM.—Beware of it whether it comes carping and quibbling under a mask, or whether throwing aside the mask, as in Christadelphianism or Thomasism, it reveals its naked repulsiveness. No one who has carefully and thoroughly studied the subject can be ignorant that this is the rock ahead of our doctrine [of Life only in Christ], on which, without the utmost caution and the utmost steady adherence to the whole teaching of Scripture in reference to man's nature and destiny, it will be wrecked in England, as it has been wrecked in America. Having carefully traced the history of the doctrine in the latter country, I see very plainly how disastrously it has been affected by its association with crude and unscriptural materialistic theories. And though it is early days with us here, I for one see also that the same conflict with this "monster of the ooze and mire" awaits us in England; and that, humanly speaking, on the issue of that conflict, depends the future success or speedy collapse of the movement.

We might ask Mr. Maude, if among Life believers in England the tendency is not somewhat to Universalism? and does that not arise from their strong adhesion to spiritualistic views of man's nature? We have had occasion to refer to this tendency in England before. Mr. Dunn is a notable example in the case.

The English Life believers, who are with us so far as literal death is the penalty of sin, all or nearly all hold to a universal resurrection; i. e., they hold to the idea of the re-living of the wicked dead; which, of course, must be a mortal resurrection, if they are to die again. Mr. Dunn differs somewhat from the body of Life believers in England, holding that the largest portion of the raised wicked will ultimately be saved. We cannot blame him for that conclusion, if he can do what we believe to be an impossibility, viz., prove from the Bible the revival into life of the wicked dead.

We know of but one agency in reviving dead men "at the last day." That agency is the same Spirit that raised up Christ from the dead, (Rom. viii. 11); so that if revived into life, they must have a spiritual nature, either by natural generation or of grace. If either way, their revival is a pledge of further good to them; and Mr. Dunn's view of an almost, if not quite universal salvation naturally follows.

We expect all the "mortal resurrectionists" in this country and England will abandon their theory or follow Mr. Dunn into the future salvation of all, or nearly all the raised wicked dead.

We wish not to make a wrong impression on the minds of our readers in regard to Mr. Maude's position. He is an opposer of Universalism, and holds mainly our views on the Life question, while he still admits the resurrection of the wicked, but is compelled to confess there are but very few texts that speak of such an event. We may ere long give an article from him on "The Resurrection of the Body." It has many interesting points, but shows embarrassment from the belief of a revival of the wicked dead. We may append a few notes to the article.

As to Mr. Maude's "warning;" we hardly know what "Thomasism" is doing, in these matters, in the United States, as we have no intercourse with that class of people—they are too exclusive for our views, and we keep aloof from each other. We leave them, however, to their own Master.

As to Mr. Maude's idea that the Life views, or the doctrine of "Life only in Christ," have "been wrecked in America" by our "Materialism," we presume it will be news to our readers, as it certainly is to us. We know of no such wreck as he speaks of.

There are two kinds of "materialism." There is a materialism which denies all spiritual existence. That materialism, of course, is highly fatal to any just views of God, and must reject the possibility of a future life to man; hence it rejects the resurrection altogether. With such materialism we have no sympathy. But, shall we therefore reject the Scripture doctrine that the Lord God formed man, and every other creature that lives by breathing, on earth, "out of the dust of the ground?" That is, he formed man of matter—made him a material being; and the apostle declares, "The first man is of the earth, earthy."—1 Cor. xv. 47. And Jesus our Lord declares in the most solemn manner, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh."—John iii. 6. Hence the necessity of being born again of the Spirit. Till that birth takes place—or, at least, till we are begotten again by the Spirit of God—men, any man, all men, are animal, material Admitting that a spiritual element exists in their nature, it is entirely inoperative till quickened by the life-giving Spirit of God. Till then, so far as spirituality is concerned, they are dead.

But every creature on earth, that lives by breathing, has sensation and various degrees of intelligence, according to the organism that God has seen fit to give them. It is the material organism which determines the degree of intelligence of which each creature is capable. If this is not so, let it be shown by reason, philosophy, or Scripture; especially the latter.

In order for a future life, a spiritual element must be brought into activity now. But it is at the resurrection, the followers of Christ become spiritual in the full Scripture sense of the term. But then they are not immaterial, but are in possession of "a spiritual body."—1 Cor. xv. 44. They are bodies, though spiritual. This fact, at least, demonstrates that immateriality is not essential to the spiritual. Hence a denial of immateriality is not a denial of Scripture spirituality, though it may be a denial of scholastic spirituality.

With these remarks, we leave our friend Maude, hoping our English friends may have every possible success in spreading the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" in that country, and trusting they will yet see that a future life is to the righteous only, and is a gift of God, and not a natural product of man's nature, nor a penal infliction on any man.

"THE BATTLE OF THAT GREAT DAY."

THE substance of the following remarks, on the above subject, we wrote and published twenty years ago; and we see no reason to change our views, materially, at the present time. We give them as our present position on the subject, hoping thereby to increase a knowledge of the Scripture testimony of present and coming events, and that we all may be led to a calm consideration of them, and so be better prepared for whatever is before us.

It will be our object to bring together the points in Revelation relating to that battle, with some remarks upon the events introduced. The first place where it is alluded to is in chap. xi., under the sounding of the seventh trumpet. That trumpet in our opinion commenced about 1789, at the convulsion in France, which was followed by the career of Napoleon Bonaparte, and has continued to the present time. It contained the seven last plagues, which constituted it a "woe" trumpet. The last verse of chap. xi. has these words, under this trumpet: "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament; and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and a great hail." This subject, though interrupted by the three following chapters, is resumed distinctly in chap. xv. 5, in these words, which show the connection: "I looked, and behold the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened." Then the seven angels were seen coming "out of the temple, having the seven last plagues," etc. These plagues were to "fill up the wrath of God" on the anti-christian powers; or, to "destroy them which destroy [corrupt] the earth," or land: that is, the inhabitants of those countries where the anti-christian powers, now to be destroyed, had carried on their abominations. Under the seventh trumpet, and during the time of the pouring out of the seven vials, "the nations were angry." This we regard as the first intimation of the battle of the great day. The next direct presentation of it is in chap. xvi. 13–16, or the work of the unclean spirits which go forth to gather the kings of the earth to the battle; and it is said, they are gathered together to a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

Here we may as well remark on the place before we pass to the other connecting points in the prophecy. "Armageddon," the mountain of Mageddon, or Megiddo, a city situated in a great plain at the foot of mount Carmel. Here king Josiah was slain in battle (see 2 Chron. xxxv. 22–25): here Barak and Deborah overcame Sisera and his great army, (Judges v. 19). It was a noted place for scenes of carnage; and hence is used, Rev. xvi., symbolically for the place of the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Europe and western Asia have been the places where the blood of Jews and Christians has been shed like water. Europe especially has been the Papal slaughter-house. Europe, then, is the place symbolized by Armageddon—that is the valley of slaughter and judgment.

Having now connected two points concerning this battle as presented in chapters xi. and xvi., we are again interrupted by a view of the judgment of the great whore on the scarlet colored beast; but in that description, chap. xvii., we are once more presented with some of the elements that go to make up the army of anti-christ, viz., the ten horns—or kingdoms under Papal influence—which gave their power and strength unto the beast, or civil power, for a time, "these," all combined, "shall make war on the Lamb," etc., v. 14. Then our direct view of the battle is again interrupted by a presentation in a separate form of the judgment of Babylon, or the great whore, and with the joy that arises to the holy ones at her fall. Passing all this we come once more to an open view of the gathering and battle field with its results.

The scene opens at chap. xix. 11, and continues to chap. xx. 3. The whole is a symbolical representation. Let none forget this fact. From verse 11 to 15, is a representation of "The Word of God;" or, in other words, Christ. It is our opinion that the armies opposed to Christ do not actually see him, or know that they are fighting against him. Here we call attention again to chapter xvi. where it is expressly said—"Behold I come as a thief." Come to what? Evidently, to the battle of that great day. Look at that text again in its connection. A description is given of the working of the unclean spirits, preparing the kings of the earth for that conflict. At this point the language, "behold I come as a thief," is uttered; showing that it is something connected with the battle, and is accompanied by a caution to saints not to be drawn into the corrupting influences which will be everywhere in operation to turn off men's minds from a constant preparation for the final result. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments" pure from the spirit of war, and the love of the world.

We now ask, how does a thief come? Not openly, but secretly; unseen and unsuspected by those who are to be the victims visited. So Christ will come to that battle, and cause these angry nations to be gathered to the terrible conflict which is to result in their overthrow and ruin. "In righteousness does he judge and make war." These anti-christian powers have made war on the saints and on the truth for centuries, and done it in a most unrighteous manner; but the Lamb, now King of kings, maketh war on them in righteousness, and in just judgment for their violence to his truth and his people. He now treadeth the wine press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God; a full description of which had been prophesied of (Isa. lxiii.—1 to 5) and now the time has come; but Christ comes to it as a thief—unseen—unknown by his enemies, while they will be made the instruments one upon another of executing the wrath.

We may illustrate this secret presence of Christ in this battle by the case recorded in 2 Kings, vi. 15–17. The king of Syria had sent an army to seize Elisha the prophet. They came, "horses and chariots, and a great host, by night, and encompassed the city about. And when the servant of the man of God was risen early and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, alas, my master! how shall we do? And he answered, Fear not; for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

Here we see a great army from heaven, even more for Elisha than they that were against him; but they were there as a thief—invisible to the opposing army—exerting an invincible power which made the victory sure. Thus we apprehend it will be in the battle of that great day. Christ, with the armies of heaven, will be there, though invisible; but the war, so far as physical power is brought into the conflict, will be that of the hand of every man against his neighbor; or, one nation will be the instrument in executing judgment against another; and so in turn destroying each other. The scenery of calling the fowls of heaven to "the supper of the great God" indicates the greatness of the slaughter of that awful period. Then the fact is stated of the actual gathering of the kings of the earth and their armies to make war against Christ and his army. Next, the "beast was taken;" by which we understand the scarlet colored beast, "which had the wound by the sword," chap. xiii.; being only another aspect of the same beast; or, the aspect given it a short time before it goes into perdition; and with him is taken the false prophet which wrought miracles, or wonders—"before"—or in the presence of—the beast.

Before proceeding, it will be necessary to inquire what power is symbolized by the false prophet? A false prophet is one who speaks in the name of the Lord, when God has not commissioned him; see Deut. xviii. 20-22. The character of a false prophet is accurately described in Acts xiii., in the case of Elymas the sorcerer. He is full of all subtilty—withstands the truth—seeks to turn men from the truth—full of all mischief—an enemy to all righteousness—a perverter of the right ways of the Lord, consequently, a child of the devil. See Acts xiii. 6–10. This power corresponds well to the two horned beast, Rev. xiii. 11–18. We regard this two horned beast and the false prophet as identically the same power under two aspects. They both wrought miracles or wonders before the beast. We are of the opinion that the Pope and Cardinals, in the exercise of civil power, are, or constitute the beast with its two horns like a lamb—a mild, Christlike power by profession, but speaking with its mouth like a dragon.

The time was when the clergy generally had a voice in the choice of the Popes, and the emperors confirmed the choice; but somewhere in the twelfth or thirteenth centuries the Cardinals assumed the sole power to elect and constitute the Pope, and have held that power to the present time, or over 600 years, how near "666" we do not know. This dragon-lamb, this Pope and Cardinal beast, has "exercised all the power of the beast before him;" and has had all the characteristics of the false prophet described Acts xiii. This power, we think, is the false prophet taken with the beast, in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty," and these both are cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone, corresponding with eating her flesh and burning her with fire, chap. xvii. and denotes their utter and irrevocable destruction, so that they shall never recover; it is a final overthrow of that anti-christian power, with all its abominable delusions and superstitions; and then it follows that "the remnant," viz., "the kings of the earth," etc., "were slain with the sword." etc. These were made instruments, first through hatred to the harlot, of destroying her with all her appendages, and then are the sword or agents in one another's destruction, till both the Papal power is ruined and those nations overthrown, and their governments destroyed, who had been corrupted by her sorceries and abominations.

The time for the culmination and completion of these events, we think, is now right at hand; the Papal Harlot is nearly ripe for the last judgment on her, and her fool-hardy project of infallibility is likely to bring down the wrath of European governments upon her, and God's time of visitation seems to be near. Let us wait, watch, and pray that we may be found with our garments pure from the spirit of the world, and ready to meet our Lord.

REFLECTIONS ON VARIOUS TESTIMONIES.

BY POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: I write at this time for the purpose of turning my thoughts from dwelling on wrong, envy and hatred. O may God fill my heart with pity for those that are despisers of those that are good. I wish to take the most encouraging view of God's dealings with his children, and that that shall give me joy; yes, overcoming joy. I will begin with the sayings of Jesus, "Let not your hearts be troubled. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. Marvel not if the world hate you; it hated me, before it hated you." I bless thy name, dear Saviour, for these comforting words; it shall turn to me for a testimony. O let me settle it in my heart, that if I was of the world, the world would love its own; but because thou hast chosen me out of the world, therefore the world hateth me. O how blessed to suffer for Thy sake; let it give me joy to be counted worthy to suffer for thee.

Then I will record the sayings of one that has suffered for righteousness sake: "Pere Hyacinthe on the Bible." "Israel is no longer the tents of Shem; no longer the tabernacles of the desert; no longer the temple of Solomon or Zerubbabel—all these have disappeared. Israel exists now, not by these—but by his God and by his Bible. Israel is embodied in his Bible; he has written the whole of it, and this is above all else, as St. Paul says, his greatest glory. The church of Jesus Christ, the Catholic church does not possess the gift of inspiration. We have not in the midst of us a single wise man, a single inspired pontiff capable, if he wished it, of writing one line which would be the word of God. We have pontiffs, doctors, councils assisted by God, but not inspired; assisted in order to study, to understand, to explain the inspired Word of the Jewish Church, the word written from the first chapter of Genesis to the last word of the New Testament by a Jewish pen! The Jewish church, from the prophets to the apostles, has been the only mouth inspired by Jehovah. And yet what do we do with the Bible? Is it the object of our study, of our sermons, of our instructions? Is it the light that shines upon our families, upon our souls? Reading of, the meditation on the Holy Scriptures—this will forever be the true mind of the church of Jesus Christ. Well, do we read the Bible? Do we not too often go to seek our knowledge exclusively, in purely profane authors, in the discoveries of man? And when we apply to the traditions of the Church, do we not practically give the first place to the simple doctors? No one venerates the doctors more than I do: Athanasius, Basil, Augustine, . . . the great scholars of the middle ages: Thomas. Agumas, etc., etc. But they are not the book! Give me the book, the inspired word, let me lean upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets; let me penetrate with my thirsty roots to the fatness of the fruitful olive tree. The Bible, the Holy Scriptures, the light of families, of nations, of souls—that is the book of the Church!"

Amen: so say I. Bless the Lord for the Bible; and can I murmur at the dealings of the God of the Bible? No, no; let me ever rejoice, and as one dear sleeping brother has said,

"Earth's scoffs and scorns, well pleased I'll bear,
Nor mourn though under foot I'm trod,
If day by day I may but share
Thine approbation, O my God."

And Pere H. goes on to say, "Our branches will be thin, and our leaves will be withered, and our flowers will fall before they bear their fruits, so long as we do not continually refresh them in the knowledge, in the light, in the practice of the Divine Book. Woe to him, who being able to read it, does not read it: but woe, too, to him who reads it only with the contemptuous regard of a proud intellect." May God bless Pere Hyacinthe; give him strength to obey the command, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, that ye receive not of her plagues." And may God pity many in our own enlightened land who are bound with creeds and traditions of men. May God break every yoke from off their necks, and set their feet in a large room.

I often think of what Beecher said in his sermon on "The Bible a sufficient creed." He says, when speaking of what the creed power requires of its members, "Take the Bible and this little book, and you may put your own private construction on them both, as every one does; but take the Bible alone as sufficient under God, for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, and the great paw of the beast is upon you. I know this is so by experience for years. I wrestled with organized power, but bless God, there is no organized body can call me to an account for holding up the Word of God as I believe it. As to the influence of these orthodox bodies to turn me from the Bible, the one Book, I can say as king David said, 'I am like a weaned child.'"

I am constrained to say, "How long, O Lord, how long?" O how long shall the great ones (so called) of the churches halt between two opinions, half persuaded to preach the gospel, and yet preach fables? How oft in their writings we see "No Life out of Christ" cropping out, and yet when pressed on the subject, turn and twist the Scriptures, I fear, to their own destruction.

Let us look at the utterance of E. O. Haven, D. D., in a sermon preached before the students of the University of Michigan in 1868. He says: "But who wishes to be the most miserable being possible in the universe of God? Who wishes to be in the lowest stratum that mercy will allow? Who would consort even in this life, with robbers, and those that abandon themselves to the vilest sins? Who in the next world desires the place of the spiritual pariahs—the lowest rank in the universe—whatever that may be? Especially, too, when we reflect that the modern notion of a gradual advance of the wicked upward, in the next life, is wholly a figment of the human understanding, unsupported by the Bible—which rather seems to indicate a sinking deeper into imbecility and death." He says again, "We grant that infinity cannot be grasped; but who wishes to reap corruption and death, simply because we do not know what these are? Alas! for this attempt to cover with doubt and uncertainty that which the infallible oracles of God's word have made so plain." (So I say; let us never do it more) "Admit the claimed limitation of our powers where 'infinity' is concerned. But it thence by no means follows that 'mortal man,' menaced with 'corruption and death' as the result of sowing to his flesh, cannot 'understand what these are.' Not to conceive of them as evil consequences, is to be without an inventive for shunning them 'by patient continuance in well doing.' To know them as evil, and yet not know them as certainly repugnant to the dogma of interminable anguish, is to be left with no avenue of rational escape from a mental conflict that makes a hell of probation itself."

Again he says, "The awfulness of eternity, without hope, has been presented, involving, it is said, the necessity of eternal sin, and hate and blasphemy—so that forever and forever there shall be one great unclean spot, a wretched world, an immense prison, a torture-house from which none are pardoned, in the universe of God. I have no sympathy with men who can talk flippantly about such a belief, and laugh and joke at the same time, without any appearance of ever giving to it protracted, earnest inquiry. For my own part, I have passed many a sleepless hour at night, meditating on the awful subject. I have sometimes heard it so proclaimed from the sacred desk as to thrill me with pain, and awaken the deepest indignation, when a fellow-man would so represent God that no being could be imagined more relentless and cruel. My soul has recoiled from such statements, and I have been inclined to exclaim, I would not believe them even though God should open the heavens and pronounce them true."

One more extract from Dr. Havens' sermon: "The language of the Bible is figurative and indefinite—clear only in the fact that consequences sufficiently awful to honor God, to show that life means something; that sin is more than a name, will follow wrong doing; but not affirming that sin itself must be eternal, or that blasphemy and hatred will exist forever. This is man's teaching, not God's teaching." [Amen, say I.] "Nor does the Bible say that the soul is to be eternally racked by remorse. Men have said so—God has not."

Here is an extract from Doctor Whedon, "Methodist Quarterly Review," Jan. 1869: "Now did we believe this, that annihilation is more terrible than eternal misery, we should consider the greatest difficulty in Christian theodicy to have attained a solution. The most terrible of all punishments for sin is attained without the slightest pretext for a charge of injustice upon the divine Inflictor. No one can claim a moment of future existence as a right, or its withdrawal as a wrong. God can justly, at his pleasure, drop any being into instant nothingness. And now, if this be the most terrible of dooms, then God can inflict it, or permit it, for sins great or small, and the most captious caviller can utter no complaint. Universalism could not charge this theory with injustice, nor orthodoxy charge it with immoral tendency in lightening the penalty of sin," etc.

Now when I look at these things I rejoice, because God is doing a great work. I remember my feelings thirty-six years ago, how I wrestled with, and strove to understand the penalty (as preached) of God's law, "eternal misery;" but my mind always fell back jaded. But I felt God was right; there I rested, hoping that he would make it plain. O how much I bless His holy name that He wrapped His sepals and petals of love around that germ, "God is right," and has watered and swelled the bud, and brought forth the flower and fruit for His own honor and glory, and for my everlasting good. And now I can say with T. Davis, M. A., in his sermon on "Endless Sufferings not the Doctrine of Scripture:" "Before I could believe the dogma of eternal misery, I must utterly distrust my best faculties, admit that I have no conception of what goodness is in my Creator, and feel that I am wholly incompetent to offer to His acceptance intelligent praise." My prayer is, May God bless his own truth, and every instrument he is using to spread it, and every one that is inquiring "What is Truth?" Your sister in the Lord.

FREDERICKSBURG, Iowa, June, 1870.

THE PERSONAL QUESTION.

"Lovest thou me?"—John xxi. 16.

GREAT and glorious things are promised to the Church of Christ, and every promise will be faithfully redeemed; for the God of truth means what he says, and will do as he has said. What we call difficulties in the way of accomplishing his purposes exist not to him; or, if they exist, his mode of conquering them will only more brightly illustrate the resources of his wisdom and the glory of his power. With equal ease he can make a world or a dew-drop; but in either case it is the ease of omnipotence, in the presence of which all that man can do is to uncover his head and adore. There are cases in which to stand still, and see the salvation of God is true Christian service, the noblest work of faith—cases in which to do nothing but simply and lovingly trust our Father is holy and acceptable obedience. And that such cases will increase in number as the day of terror and glory approaches, there can be no doubt. Events are ripening for that time when human power will be of no avail, and when all our boasted resources—ecclesiastical, secular, scientific—will be utterly worthless. All our swelling words about what we can do in the way of enlightening and saving universal humanity—or as a sermon before us puts it, "driving the devil out of the world"—if we had but men and money enough, must be silenced, that God may do the workof which he only is capable. "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day."

But if the gigantic evils that are to characterize the last days of this dispensation require an Almighty hand to crush them, it becomes us to enquire earnestly whether we are among the friends of God to who a glorious deliverance is guaranteed. In vain these brilliant promises of glory, honor, and immortality, that glitter on the page of inspiration, as stars in the firmament of heaven, so far as we are concerned, if we are unable to claim them for ourselves. The most exultant prospects to others can hardly be expected to thrill our hearts with gladness, especially if it is very certain that the time these prospects shall be realised is just the time when our death doom will be executed amidst circumstances of awful diimay and disgrace. This is probably the reason why men of the world and mere professors of religion cannot endure the doctrine of the Lord's second advent. The devil knows that his time will be short when the hour of the advent draws near. and his servants, both those whom openly wear his livery and those who have stolen Christ's to hide their moral deformity, instinctively know it too; hence the thought of the Lord's coming is to them simply one of confusion, terror, and despair. He comes to bring heaven to his friends; but as that is the same thing as hell to his foes, the idea of the King of Glory coming in his glory is to them intolerable. But as neither the hatred of the ungodly nor the sleep of the Christian will prevent that day bursting upon the world at the very moment pre-determined by the Father, let each listen to the personal question that comes from the lips of our adorable Lord: "Lovest thou me?"

He who can answer with a joyous and grateful "yes," is a truly happy man. He has entered into the holiest by the blood of Jesus. The very heart, and meaning, and essence of religion have entered into his heart. The life, the peace, the glow of holy confidence are there. He will trust, for he loves; and he will serve, for he loves; and he will follow, for he loves; and he will worship, for he loves. His friends may wax cold as icebergs, but the genial warmth of heaven is in his soul; they may cut him off from their fellowship but he has fellowship with Christ; and they may cast out his name as evil, but the name of his Redeemer is written on his heart in letters of love. There may be storm without, but there is blessed calm within; for his heart is at rest on the glorious Christ of God, the centre of the moral universe, the Divine Lover, the Light, and the Life everlasting. He may be poor, but he is rich; weak, but he is strong; unlearned, but he is wise; humble, but he is noble; and unknown to the mighty men of earth's kingdoms and empires, but his name is written in heaven as one of the sons of God, and one of the fellow heirs of the eternal inheritance with Christ, the heir of all things. His head may not be all that your wider wisdom admires, bnt his heart is right with God; and he may not belong to your church, but assuredly he belongs to the church, and when all the ecclesiastical systems of Christendom are hopelessly wrecked in the tempest that is coming, the body with which he is connected as a living member will shine out in unparalleled splendor as the richest gem in the universe of God.—The Rainbow: Editorial.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM W. H. H. MC ALLISTER.

BRO. STORRS: It seems almost impossible that I have let month after month pass till the first half of 1870 is almost gone, and this is only my second letter. It is not possible to give a reasonable excuse, so I will not attempt it. Some extenuating circumstances might be mentioned, but it is the same old story. The real difficulty is that I do not set myself about writing. I have time enough. Almost any day I might pen a line for you, but still I neglect it. Well I hope you will forgive me, but to tell the truth, I cannot forgive myself.

I hardly know what to report of myself. I am trying at a "poor dying rate," I fear, to serve my Master. I have been to Bethel once since I wrote in January. There was a good attendance and all seemed interested. I have now an appointment to go there again next Sunday. The brethren and sisters in Bethel at their society meeting passed a resolution inviting me to speak to them as often as possible. I am also making arrangements to go to Hinesburgh sometime in July. Will speak there if desired. It is my present intention to go West in August to be absent about three weeks. I shall go to Chicago first; then to New Albany, Ind.; then back to Chicago and as far north as Milwaukee. I have an aunt living in Woodstock, Ill., whom I must visit and shall be most happy to see any of our precious faith who live on the line of my proposed route. If it should be convenient and desirable, I will speak to the friends upon the life views. I hope my brothers and sisters will not think I have been entirely idle this winter and spring. My official labors have been more onerous than usual. My eyes have been quite troublesome, especially during the winter while the snow was on the ground; still I have found many occasions to preach the truth as it is in Jesus and "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints."

I have attended the Methodist meetings quite regular, and have been a teacher in the Sabbath School. When I accepted this position it was on the express condition that I should have perfect liberty to discuss any subject that might come up. My class is liberal and will stand any thing in the way of doctrine. They also like to have these things brought up. It has been the practice of the Superintendent and the Pastor to ask general questions on the lesson. Sometimes these are quite interesting. Thus far when any thing of a nature calculated to produce unpleasantness has come up I have avoided asking any general questions; but there are some in my class who do not feel at all bashful, and sometimes, our pastor has been a little puzzled to answerthese questions. For instance, awhile ago we had for our lesson the death of the son of the widow of Zarephath and his restoration by Elijah. This son was so sick that there was no breath left in him, and Elijah prayed that his soul might come into him again; and the soul of the child came into him again and he revived. Query: Are the breath and soul here mentioned, identical. Superintendent quoted Gen. ii. 7, as expressing all he knew about it; pastor stated that the original terms translated breath, spirit, and soul were variously used and sometimes meant one thing, sometimes another. Man is a compound being, composed of body, soul and spirit. His body and soul he has in common with the brute creation; his spirit is a higher gift, which he possessed in common with God. Here he left. The reply was so pointless that the Supt. said that he thought he had misunderstood the question. The pastor thereupon arose and repeated in substance his former explanation. The answer was so absurd that it was freely commented upon, and one young man asked the pastor, why he did not clear it up. Pastor said, that the least said the better, for they would soon get beyond their depth.

Last Sunday I took occasion in the class to express our views quite plainly on the nature of man and the adaptation of God's plan of redemption to that nature. Yesterday I had a two hours talk with a young minister, mainly on the trinity and divinity of Christ. He had studied divinty and talked with other pastors, but the more he studied the more he was befogged. He didn't take his examination last spring because he was not clear upon these points, and he has told his Presiding Elder that unless he is clear before another spring he shall not appear. He says there are ten young ministers in the Vermont conference laboring under the same difficulties. It was a glorious privilege to tell him how clear this so called mystery is to me. He is coming to stop with me Friday night, and if the Lord will I shall try to preach to him some thing which is not taught in the articles of faith of the M. E. Church, or preached in their pulpits, but which is to be found in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. He frankly admitted to me that he did not know any thing about the atonement, or God's plan of salvation. It is all mystery, and confusion worse confounded. He expresses the strongest desire to know more of these things and said he had learned much from me already. Here I will close, promising to write more soon.

Yours for the truth.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., June 15, 1870.

FROM ELD. S. L. WALTER.

BR. STORRS: After so long silence, I wish you and all God's dear children to know that my silence is not from want of love for, or interest in the cause of "Our Father in heaven." No, for my whole soul cries daily, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;" for then shall all be at home that are baptized of the one Spirit "into one body," because such "are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

Thank God, Christ is not divided. But the self-styled "Evangelical" churches are, because they are numbered by hundreds; but the Saviour's prayer is heard for them that believe on the LIFE-GIVER, through the word, "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." O that the nominal church may see that it is the oneness of the church in Christ, as the LIFE-GIVER, that proves that he is the sent of God; and then all would see that there is but one working principle in the religion of the Bible, which is love—not creeds or opinions. No: but love. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him." "Faith works by love, and purifies the heart." "Love is the bond of perfectness." It "gives boldness in the day of judgment." It "casteth out fear; because fear hath torment." By it, "we know that we have passed from death unto life." "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."

It is no wonder that Paul prayed that the church of the Thess. might "increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men . . . To the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." It is a glorious principle; it "fulfils the law." It works "no ill to his neighbor." It goes out to our enemies. He that loveth has God for his all, and can say, "Whom have I in heaven but Thee, and there is none upon earth that I desire besides Thee." I hope that LIFE believers will continue to work by this principle. I want to say a good many things, but can't now. I am laboring in the good cause about home, as opportunity offers. Some receive the truth, that the righteous only will live again.

I had a visit from a sister of the Advent faith from Cass county. I got her to take the HERALD, and sold her LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST and other works and tracts. I think she will be useful in scattering truth, as she travels much. Please send her some of the Campaign Documents, and if you can, let me have some. The tracts are doing a good work, and truth must and will triumph. I am sick of this vain philosophy and fable preaching, which dishonors God and ignores his word. O that they would preach the word. God bless you all. Yours, in hope of life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

BUNKER HILL, Ill., June 9, 1870.

FROM ELD. R. V. LYON.

I enclose $2. Take out what is due you for "Bible vs. Tradition," and give me credit for the rest on HERALD OF LIFE and of the Coming Kingdom: a paper that I have always loved from the commencement; because it advocated the truth on the great doctrine of a future state. And as to the kingdom of God, there is no paper as correct on that subject.

My interest in the cause of Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, is increasing. It is nearly forty-five years since I started for the Highlands of Glory! And twenty-seven years have rolled away since I first expected to see my dear Redeemer and be made like unto him.

But I have not grown weary in his service, nor lost any of my zeal to promote his cause.

My labors are abundant in preaching and writing. And there is no truth that should be left out of our message to our fellow men. Notwithstanding, there are some truths to be made more prominent than others.

Life only through Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, first; and Kingdom second.

And this embraces his second coming; for no man can preach life through Christ and the kingdom correctly, without preaching the personal coming of Jesus.

To secure life in Christ, a holy living must be maintained on our part. Hence, the importance of preaching it by precept and example, in connection with the all absorbing truths of "Life only in Christ, and the kingdom of God!"

I have a work of 333 pages, nicely printed and beautifully bound, which I have written and published. Price $1.10, free of postage. Those who wish for it, can have it by sending to me at SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y.

Yours, truly.

June 16, 1870.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

BR. STORRS: I would say to all of the dear brethren, that I feel truly thankful for all past favors, hoping they will not forget the poor old one-armed man. May the good Lord abundantly bless Br. W. of Keyport, N. J., for his liberality in sending me occasionally some of the Lord's money. It comes, like the dews of Hermon, when greatly needed. I am not preaching publicly at present, by reason of inability and means to travel. My daily prayer is, that the Lord, who doeth all things well, will order my footsteps in the path of duty; but here I am, harbor-bound by reason of contrary winds, and cry, How long, O Lord, how long shall this state of things last? O let thy kingdom come, and let thy will be done on the earth as it is in heaven.

Brethren and sisters in Christ our LIFE-GIVER, pray for poor unworthy me, that that which binds me may be speedily removed, and I may be set at liberty. O how I feel when thinking about the dear little ones in Fulton Co., and other places where I have preached the word of life. But, alas! feeling will not suffice. God requires effort; and what shall we do? is a question of deep interest with myself. May Heaven grant that the dark cloud may be removed soon. In conclusion, we would say, to all lovers of truth, stick to the life-boat, for the breakers are just ahead. Don't take fright and jump for the shore, for except ye abide in the ship all will perish.

GRAFTON, Ill., June 6, 1870.

FROM JANETT A. MAYO.

"Looking diligently lest any man fail of the grace of God: lest any root of bitterness springing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled."—Heb. xii. 15. "Lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood."—Deut. xxix. 18.

THERE have been many roots of bitterness among the professed people of God, but the bitter rod that troubles me, and I doubt not many of the children of God, is the mortal resurrection theology, taught by our Advent papers and preachers. I feel grieved and sad at heart, and yet astonished. O where can they find it in the word of God? Like the immortality of the soul, nowhere. I testify against it every opportunity. I cannot take a paper that advocates it. God help us in these last days to watch, and not put trust in man. Thus saith the Lord, "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm; and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh." —Jer. xvii. 5, 6. God keep us from such blindness, as not to be looking to the right light.

I wish to record the loving kindness of God, in so controlling the disease of my husband as to cause him to be quiet, and has enabled me to come back to our home. In this he has made a way of escape, so that I am able to bear it. Thank God: trust Him, all ye his people.

I can truly say, I am blessed and comforted in reading our paper more than I can express. Thank God for it, and for men and women that see truth and write it. I love the gospel of the kingdom, and want light on its coming. Many different opinions are advanced to give light. But I read and think, and look to God. May all the children of God be baptized into one spirit. Amen.

NORTH AMHERST, Mass., June 14, 1870.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BR. STORRS; I seldom get my HERALD till after Sunday; but this week have been more fortunate than usual. It came Friday eve. I don't know that it ever seemed so good to me as it does now. It breathes the same spirit that my precious Bible does, and that is the right spirit. I have just been reading one article after another, and have a feeling that only the isolated ones know. They are so good, and O, how I want to talk to some one about them: some one who would appreciate Christ as the only great LIFE-GIVER. I have last read that article by the Editor of "The Rainbow," on "The Conqueror's Reward." What will it be to sit down with Jesus on his throne? He had to overcome before he could sit down with his Father on his throne. So we will; will have to overcome in the position where God places us. He knows the discipline, the schooling we need. He knows our weak points, and treats us accordingly. He once was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief; had not where to lay his weary head; but in meekly submitting to it all he won a crown and will soon come to enter upon possession of his kingdom. Others who choose to follow him through evil, as well as good report, who meekly submit to their Father's will, as he did; who continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and are not moved away from the hope of the Gospel; will share in that kingdom.

Peter speaks of the lively hope, or hope of life, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ, being begotten to it. Also the inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time. That incorruptible inheritance will be glorious. O how glorious! But it will be only for those who are kept by the power of God; not for those who are kept by church organizations, or any power of man; but, "by the power of God."

If we ever sing the conqueror's song, we will have to overcome by single combat, having on the whole armor of God; but trusting to him alone for strength and wisdom. Yea, for all we need.

May God grant us all, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man.

RACINE, Wis, June 12, 1870.

FROM BENJAMIN MELLOR.

BR. STORRS: I send the inclosed five dollars to help you in publishing that "Rich Tract." I would not dictate to you how you shall apply it, but if I might have my choice would say, Send the amount in that "Rich Tract" to England; either to the office of "The Rainbow," or wherever you may think advisable.

I would feel obliged if you could give the address of Joseph Barker. I feel a kind of yearning after him. His case is an exceedingly singular one. It is thirty years since my first acquaintance with him. Would God his last twenty-four years could be buried in oblivion. Of course we except the time since his return to Christ. Yours, in gospel hope.

ROCKDALE MILLS, Pa., June 15, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

We have no knowledge of the location of Joseph Barker. We have tried to find it out, but in vain.

JOHN PASSMORE, Almira, Mich., makes a remittance to the HERALD OF LIFE, and writes: I have been fearful the paper would be stopped, which would be a calamity to me after taking it and the Bible Examiner over twenty years. I feel as lively an interest in it as ever, especially in the prospect of its doing service against the array of "orthodox" weapons (though they are not "mighty") that may be brought against it. But truth, the strongest principle, is mighty and will prevail. I wish never to have my paper discontinued. I shall pay up as soon as I am able. I have paid sometimes $5 a year. I wish you and all the lovers of Jesus a smooth passage to the kingdom.

J. P. BITNER, Sevrance, Kansas, writes: Send on the paper. I think you will not have long to continue the good work. The signs of our Lord's coming are growing brighter. We are living in the times of the scoffers, and in the "peace and safety" times, when "men will not endure sound doctrine, but heap to themselves teachers." May we all who love the Lord study closely the Scriptures, so that day come not on us unawares. Yours, in hope of a speedy return of the Master, when peace shall flow like a river.

OBITUARY.

STOWELL.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at Granby, Mass., June 17, ELLA JANE, daughter of Lewis and Elizabeth D. STOWELL, aged eighteen years. Her sickness was consumption. This is the second time death has entered our family circle since the first of this year and borne away our treasures; yet we mourn not without hope. Ella was a true Bible Christian. The love of God was her constant theme. The grave had no terrors for her; for she said, it could not hold her when our LIFE-GIVER should call her from its embrace. May we be prepared to meet her on the resurrection morn.

E. D. STOWELL.

APPOINTMENTS.

KENDUSKEAG, June 26.

L. WETHERBEE.

PROVIDENCE, June 26.
NEW YORK (Cooper Institute), July 3.
NEW BRITAIN, July 10.
TERRYVILLE (Br. Yale's neighborhood), July 17.
WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., July 24.

CHAS. C. BARKER.

PROSPECT, Conn., Sunday, June 26.
TERRYVILLE, Conn., Sunday, July 3, in Br. O. F. Yale's neighborhood, or where he may appoint.

The above came to us without a signature. We presume WM. STUART is the preacher.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—William Watson, H. Young, John Passmore, J. P. Bitner, Mrs. N. B. Smith, Wm. Dickinson.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Eld. R. V. Lyon, Mrs. M. A. Battersby, Geo, W. Bennett.

VARIOUS SUMS—Mrs. E. A Lewis, $1 75; Elizabeth Mahan, $1 50; Jacob L. Thompson, $2 20; John Kemp, $25 on pledge.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

H. Young, Pittsfield, N. H., $1; "A Friend," $8; Benj. Mellor, Rockdale Mills, Pa., $5.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Mrs. E. A. Lewis, Eld. S. L. Walter, Joshua Roberts, Ira Fancher, Gee Simpson, Abel Larkin (6 cop. Her. May 25), De Bart Sullivan (2 parcels), A. Boynton, Daniel Hawks, Abel Larkin, D. B. Salter, Robert Fowler, H. Young, Benj. Mellor, Thos. McClary: (Shall we send more?) Helen Robertson, J. W. Stokes, Eld. Samuel Bragg (3 parcels), F. I. Sheldon.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DANIEL CLOW.—There is $1 50 due on the present volume.

The One Talent.

"To every man according to his several ability."

Hide not thy talent in the earth;—
However small it be,
Its faithful use, its utmost worth,
God will require of thee.

The humblest service rendered here
He will as truly own,
As Paul's in his exalted sphere,
Or Gabriel's, near the throne.

The cup of water kindly given,
The widow's cheerful mites,
Are worthier in the eye of heaven,
Than pride's most costly rites.

His own, which he hath lent on trust,
He asks of thee again;
Little or much, the claim is just,
And thine excuses vain.

Go then and strive to do thy part
Though humble it may be,
The ready hand the willing heart,
Are all heaven asks of thee.

—"Gift book of Gems," composed by William Cutter.

Cleansing the Sanctuary.

BY WILLIAM CHERRY.

In Dan. viii. 13, we have a very important question asked, "How long the vision concerning the daily and the transgression of desolation to give both the Sanctuary and the Host to be trodden under foot?" To which an answer is given in the verse following: "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

It is not the object of the writer of this article to give a chronological argument showing the termination of the days connected with this prophecy, but to speak with special reference to the cleansing of the Sanctuary, the event to transpire at the end of the days.

At the outset, an inquiry arises: What is the sanctuary spoken of? Some tell us that it is the earth polluted by sin and which is to be cleansed by the fires of the last day. To this view we object, for the reason that the Lord in no part of his word calls the earth his sanctuary or a sanctuary. The position is an assumed one, wanting proof from the word of God.

Another view is that the sanctuary to be cleansed is the one that Daniel prayed about, as brought to view in Dan. ix. 17, "Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate." From this view we dissent also, for a very important reason. In the same chapter in which this prayer occurs is the cutting off, or crucifixion of Messiah, and following this "The people of the Prince that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." This part of the prophecy was fulfilled by the Romans in the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70; it was also the fulfilment of what our Lord told his disciples on Mount Olivet, Matt. xxiv. 2: And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? Verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

The Romans made clean work of it, the very foundations of the sanctuary being destroyed, and so it remains until now. This sanctuary has ceased to exist, and a sanctuary that does not exist can neither be polluted or cleansed.

But it devolves upon us to find a sanctuary that does exist, and must exist until the 2300 days of this prophecy expire, and one also which is polluted. Let it be borne in mind, that in Daniel ix. 26, a proper distinction is made between the city and the sanctuary; the word sanctuary referring to the temple alone. This fact furnishes us with a true definition of the term sanctuary. Scripturally defined, It is the temple of God. The temple or sanctuary which was destroyed belonged to the old Tabernacle arrangement under the law, and was necessary to the Jews in their form of worship. When it was destroyed, "Their House was left unto them desolate," and that tabernacle arrangement had forever ended.

We must find then the Temple of God, or sanctuary under a new tabernacle arrangement, and one that will continue until the 2,300 days end; and such a one, Paul brings to view in Heb. viii. 1, 2, "Now of things of which we have spoken this is the sum, We have such a High Priest who is set on the right hand of the Majesty in the heavens. A minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabnacle which the Lord pitched and not man." The sanctuary that was destroyed was pitched by man, as it is written, "But Solomon built him (the Lord) a house," or a temple, or a sanctuary, if you please; for the words are used interchangeably to express the same meaning. Now the Apostle informs us that our High Priest (Jesus) is a minister of the sanctuary and of the true tabernacle, which He himself has pitched. Hence the sanctuary is established under the new tabernacle arrangement: The Gospel of Christ.

In the first sanctuary or temple, the divine presence rested between the cherubims that overshadowed the mercy-seat, as it is written, "What is the house that ye will build me, and where is the place of my rest?" But says the Apostle, "Howbeit the Most High dwelleth not (present tense) in temples made with hands." This expression is equivalent to saying that He does dwell in another kind of temple; and in Paul's letter to the Ephesians, chap. ii. 19, 22, he plainly declares that fact. Paul says to the Ephesians, who were converted Gentiles, "Now therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth (present tense) unto a holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye are also builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit."

Here we find God's dwelling place in the new temple or sanctuary, which is built of lively stones (all believers) a spiritual house.

And now we think we have found a temple or sanctuary that will continue until the 2,300 days end.

The church of God under the Gospel is clearly seen to be the temple or sanctuary, pure and holy at the beginning of the dispensation, but not always to be so. And let me remark just here, that in order to fulfil the prophecy under consideration, two conditions of the temple or sanctuary are necessary: first, The sanctuary must be pure, before it can be polluted or defiled. Second: It must be polluted or defiled, before it can be cleansed.

Now the first condition of the church or sanctuary was pure and holy, as declared by the Apostle to the Ephesians in speaking of the church in the present tense, "Groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord." Let it be observed here that the Apostle does not in this place even hint that this condition of the church or sanctuary will ever be changed. But we will follow him a little further, and in his letter to the Corinthians we will find a very important hint concerning the future of the Church. In addressing the Corinthians He says, 1 Cor. iii. 16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that God dwelleth in you by his Spirit. If any man defile the temple or sanctuary of God, him will God destroy; for the temple of God is holy (present tense) which temple ye are." Here the Apostle lets us into important facts concerning what may happen to the church in the future; First, that the temple of God although then pure and holy might be defiled. Second: that it is in the power of man to defile it; and the reader will agree with me, that if man should defile it, there will be some need as well as opportunity for cleansing it. But let us follow the Apostle a little further, and in his letter to the Thessalonians that which is now only hinted at is positively declared.

In 2 Thess. ii., the Apostle writes to them for the purpose of correcting a false impression which they had received from a former epistle on the coming of the Lord, in which he says, "Then we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord," etc. The Thessalonians seem to have got it into their heads, from this expression of the Apostle, that they were all to be alive and remain unto his coming, and became quite excited about the matter. Paul corrects this error by telling them, "That day cannot come except there be a falling away first." Here Paul plainly declares what the future of the Church will be. The Temple of God, pure and holy at the beginning, will fall away and become defiled. He also gives the cause of this defilement: "And that Man of sin be revealed, the Son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4. Here the Man of sin takes his seat in the temple of God to defile it. And now, says the Apostle, "Ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now letteth will let (or hinder) until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

We can now see the force of the Apostle's language, "If any man defile the temple of God him will God destroy." The Man of sin defiles the temple of God by taking his seat in it, and showing himself that he is God; and him will God destroy by the brightness of Christ's coming.

The two conditions of the Church necessary to the fulfilment of this prophecy are symbolized in Revelation xii. and xvii. In the first, we see "A woman clothed with the sun; the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." Here we see the Church as she was at the beginning, clothed in glorious apparel in her purity and in her strength. But follow her down the stream of time into the wilderness, where John saw her, and the only symbol that will fitly represent her is that of a besotted harlot, drunken with the blood of saints and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus. "An enemy hath done this."

Gibbon says, in his history of Rome, "That through ten centuries of blindness and servitude, all Europe received their law of faith and doctrine from the Vatican." And out from this Stygian pool of Roman abominations has arisen all those foul and pestilential theological vapors that have penetrated and permeated the whole professed Church of God world wide, defiling the sanctuary from one end to the other.

How then shall the sanctuary be cleansed? Can it be by the operation of moral forces? We think not. Popery is a system that knows no change and which defies all human progress. "I gave her space to repent, saith the Lord, but she repented not. Behold I will cast her into a bed and them that commit adultery with her; and I will kill her children with death."—Rev. ii. 21, 23.

This places the Papacy beyond the hope of reformation, and reveals the fact that nothing but destruction and death can remove the cause of defilement. "Our Bane and Antidote are both before us."

This power is to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming; therefore, the cleansing of the sanctuary involves, as a necessity, the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by consequence the 2,300 days of this prophecy reach to that event. As it is written, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

It is my belief that this period terminates in the present year; and this position is sustained by the present attitude of the Papacy. That power has met in Council. And for what? The Editor of the "New York Herald" says, "Its chief object is to make a new God; a God upon earth, visible and tangible." And this is the simple truth of the matter. The vaulting ambition of the Man of sin will culminate in the declaration of his Infallibility. What a spectacle! A man whose breath is in his nostrils, rushes as it were upon the thick bosses of Jehovah's buckler, and would wrest that power and that attribute of infallibility which belongs to God alone! Could any man of sin do more than this? or, let me ask, could human presumption ever any further go than this?

The Papacy is the little horn of Daniel vii. whom the prophet follows in vision down to the end, where the judgment is set and the books are opened. He says, "I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame."—Dan. vii. 10, 11.

What greater words can be uttered than a public declaration of Infallibility? When the Papacy takes this position the top round of the ladder is reached; and from this giddy height her final fall will come; fitly described in Rev. xviii. 21, "And a mighty angel took up a stone, like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that Great City Babylon be thrown down, and be found no more at all."

If these things be so, a word to the wise is sufficient; and the counsel of our blessed Lord is appropriate to the present hour—"What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch!"

New York, June, 1870.

Paul's House, or Tabernacle.

REMARKS BY EBEN HESTER.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens."—2 Cor. v. 1–10.

This part of Paul's second letter to his "spiritual children" at Corinth, has been lightly passed over by "orthodox preachers," and yet by them often quoted to sustain their creed. They select one verse or a mere fraction of a verse to sustain their popular views, filling in with their own words, what they think, the right construction.

A Congregational minister, in a very kind letter in answer to some queries of mine, referred me to a number of texts of Scripture; one of them was 2 Cor. v. 8. These are his words, "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord." Now let us go back to the first verse and see if we may not, by the aid of the good Spirit, get somewhere near the Apostle's meaning. If we turn for a moment to Paul's epistle, Heb. iii. 5, 6, we may understand what kind of a "house" Paul evidently alluded to. In this place Paul says, "Moses was faithful in all his house. But Christ as a Son over his own house; whose house are we if we hold fast," etc. Also Prov. xii. 7, "The wicked are overthrown and are not; but the house of the righteous shall stand." I now give Walker's definition of house. "A place wherein a man lives, a place of human abode, any place of abode, kindred of race, shelter," etc. I am aware that some Christians think "house and tabernacle one and the same;" if I mistake not, Paul in speaking of "our earthly house of this tabernacle" had reference to the "new heavens;" more particularly the "new earth;" "future abode of the saints;" "household of faith." "For we know that if 'our earthly house' . . . were dissolved." If we turn to 2 Pet. iii. 11, we find that apostle using almost the same illustration. "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved," etc.

So Paul, to make it still more plain, makes allusion to the houses of poor brethren; the material of which was clay or mud hardened in the sun. I here give Dr. Shaw's account of them. He says—"The common material for building the best oriental houses is stone. Brick is also used. But the houses of the people in the East in general, are very bad constructions, consisting of mud walls, reeds, and rushes; whence they become apt illustrations of the fragility of human life." So we can easily understand the apostle's use of the word "dissolved;" because when the rainy season came on, the mud walls would be soaked with the soft water, and of course would dissolve, or slack.

If we turn to Ezekiel xiii. 10–16 we shall find that even in the prophet's time, the same kind of houses were in use. Also Job iv. 19, 20. So our home in the future, is to be eternal, and in the heavens, or atmosphere. In the book of Job we are told that, "He hangeth the earth upon nothing:" that is, our globe floats in space. Now a tabernacle or tent is a very different arrangement from a house.

Paul we know, was a tent maker. He also made good use of his secular calling to help sustain life with the common necessaries, so that he might not be thought burdensome. What an aptness in the comparison Paul makes use of; comparing his body to a "shifting tent." His life was one of constant exposure, day after day, through floods and storms, on land as on the sea; methinks, in looking back to the times of the "Great Apostle," I see Paul reclining in his tent, listening to the moaning wind and the beating of heavy drops of rain upon the canvass, whose every thread, as it became saturated, grew still heavier every moment. Well might he say, "being burdened." "For in this we groan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon" with his house, or hiding place, "his covert from the storm," and find a secure "shelter" in the "Rock of Ages," whose return from heaven Paul anxiously, though patiently, waited for. O, how pathetic, how touching, are the apostle's letters. "If so being clothed, we shall not be found naked." Evidently alluding to Adam in "Paradise." Nakedness also denotes shame. Matthew xxii. 11-12. "Friend how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment? And he was speechless." Oh, let us, as did Paul, earnestly long, for that best of all robes, "Christ's Righteousness" so that when the King comes we may not be unclothed. "For we that are in this tabernacle do groan not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." This verse does not require much explaining, as I think Paul here means, he did not wish to lie in the grave, so as to be away from his trials. His language, "mortality might be swallowed up of life," indicates his desire.

In the next verse, Paul tells us of the "agreement" as being ratified; the seal of which was the "Spirit;" which denotes, also, warmth, affection, eagerness, solicitude. Therefore we are always confident, (assured), knowing, that whilst we are at home in the body, "we are absent from the Lord;" for we walk by faith; not by sight. This verse seemed to me at first, to teach Paul's attempt to cheer his fellow laborers onward by the glories that awaited them. But after reading the ninth verse carefully, I came to a different conclusion.

This is where so many "orthodox" believers stumble, making Paul to mean that he wished, or was willing for his "immortal soul" to be "absent from his body," etc. It seems to me, to have the meaning, that if this body felt at home, or at ease, or contented itself with this present abode, or wished to be inactive while, professedly a soldier in the "army of the Lord"—in anticipation, such an one would be absent from "the Lord." We are confident, and willing rather to forget our bodies, "these light afflictions which are but for a moment," so that we may anticipate that "auspicious morn" when we shall really and truly "be present with the Lord." "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." Hebrews xi. 3. "I was a stranger and ye took me in;" Mat. xxv. 35.

So we see by texts here referred to that this is not our home or resting place. "Foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." "Wherefore we labor," we will still "endure hardness as good soldiers," knowing we shall reap if we faint not; for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ.

Was not this a strong inducement for Paul to labor that he might "give up his account with joy, not with grief?"

Jesus came to preach the Gospel; "good news;" so did Paul. Jesus is the "Good Shepherd." His "sheep follow him; they know his voice." They are not frightened into the fold. Jesus gives unto them "Eternal Life." "They shall never perish." Blessed thought. Precious Saviour. "Come Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Suffield, Conn. Feb. 18, 1870.

Catholic View of the Bible.

John Henry Newman, a leading Roman Catholic, has thus expressed himself on the English Bible: "Who will not say that the uncommon beauty and marvelous English of the Protestant Bible is not one of the great strongholds of heresy in this country? It lives on the ear like a music that can never be forgotten; like the sound of church bells which the convert hardly knows how he can forego. Its felicities often seem to be almost things rather than mere words. It is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness. The memory of the dead passes into it. The potent traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses. The power of all the griefs and trials of man is hidden beneath its words. It is the representative of his best moments, and all that has been about him of soft, and gentle, and pure, and penitent, and good, speaks to him out of his English Bible. It is his sacred thing, which doubt has never dimmed, and controversy never soiled. In the length and breadth of the land there is not a Protestant with one spark of religiousness about him whose spiritual biography is not in the Saxon Bible."

Children's Department.

Truth Getting his Boots On.

BY PAULINA.

"So the decree hath gone forth, and I'm to be a tailor; is it so mother?"

"Your uncle thinks it best, Freddie."

"And what do you think about it, mother?"

"I would like you to choose your occupation, if it were possible; but this seems the only door open."

"Then I'll open the door."

"Where?"

"Anywhere but into a tailor's shop. To sit crossed legged on a work-bench doing what pale sewing-girls are hungry for, does not seem to be the right sort of business for a boy who has any 'get up and go 'long' in him."

"You do women's work very nicely, my son," and the fond mother laid her hands soothingly on the thick short curls that, like their owner, had each a way of their own.

"I feel proud to do your work, mother; but if you were like uncle, I couldn't keep the fifth commandment. He's talked so much about 'breaking my spirit,' that I think he'd like to take the job."

"What will you do, Freddie?"

"Rush around in all directions till I find something more to my mind, 'where there's a will there's a way,' you know, mother."

Mrs. Somers was a soldier's widow, Fred her only son. A small cottage, garden and pension was their sole wealth, and with the tidings of his father's death, the boy awoke from his dream of academic honors, to consider how he might best earn a livelihood. His maternal uncle, a thrifty tailor, who had long deprecated what he termed the lad's bookish propensities, was now determined to bind him as his apprentice.

"I've found a place! hurrah, mother! I shan't have to make the acquaintance of uncle's goose;" and Fred tossed his cap to the ceiling. "I'm to be boy of all work at the great bookstore of Phelps & Co., with wages—better than you thought, mother—five dollars a week."

"But what of the future, Freddie? This will do very well now, as you are only fifteen; but when you are older, what then?"

"I don't know, mother; but please trust me for an effort, and God for the blessing, and all will be right. Anyway, I went to school and asked Mr. Anson for a certificate of character, and this won me the place, before a dozen applicants."

Months passed, and busy ones they were to Fred Somers. Scrupulous in the performance of every duty, he became a favorite with his employers, and was allowed the use of books and all the leisure that stormy days afforded.

"Studying book-keeping, eh, Fred?" and Mr. Phelps glanced down on the fairly written page before him. "What's your object, boy?"

"More knowledge and more money, sir."

"Humph! let me see you make an entry."

The entry was readily made, and the gentleman expressed great satisfaction.

"You'll have to work pretty hard, Dalton," he remarked to his bookeeper, in passing, "or you'll have a rival over there."

Unwise words, and how prolific of crime and misery. All that rainy afternoon Fred wrote steadily, happily unconscious that the glance so often resting upon him was dark with envy and hatred.

"We've lost another gold pencil, sir; this time the finest in the case," were the words that greeted Mr. Phelps, as he entered the next morning.

"It was in the show case last evening, sir, and this morning it is gone," remarked the book-keeper carelessly turning the ledger leaves. I move that we have a general search of persons and premises."

The search was made, and the lost pencil found in the pocket of Fred's overcoat. The boy turned deathly pale, but quailed not under the stern gaze of his employer.

"Frederick Somers, leave this house. I would have you arrested, were it not for the memory of the brave soldier whose blood you are disgracing. Begone sir."

Silently, as if walking in a dream, the boy went forth, bearing the earth's heaviest burden, a blasted name.

From the store the news spread, and before night it was generally known that Fred Somers was a reputed thief. The next day the principal of the academy called on Mr. Phelps.

"I wish," said he, "to know all the particulars of this unhappy affair." They were briefly related.

"The case seems clear enough; yet I do not believe him guilty," said the good man thoughtfully. "For twenty years I have been a teacher of youth, and if ever I saw true nobleness of character, it was there." Acting from his advice, Mr. Phelps quietly placed the matter in the hands of a detective.

"Keep up a brave heart, my boy, and stick to your book-keeping," said Mr. Anson. "You know the old saying, 'Falsehood will travel a thousand miles while Truth is pulling on his boots but Truth is sure to overtake him at last."

"I'm afraid, sir," said the boy sadly, "that in this case Truth will never get his boots on."

And so, indeed, it seemed; for spring blossomed into summer, summer laughed along into woodland, and sobered into autumn, and yet the stain was not effaced. It was not easy for Fred to find work; the bad name seemed to fly before him, and he was often tempted to be the boy they took him for. But this was but for a moment. A clear conscience, a living faith in God, a living trust in his mercy and goodness, was the secret strength that bore him on. The day before Thanksgiving, a note and the morning paper were left for him. The note ran thus:

My Dear Boy: Charles Dalton has this day been arrested on the charge of theft and forgery. One of the junior clerks was his accomplice, and confesses to having dropped the pencil in your pocket. In this issue of the Gazette you will read the particulars, which clear your name from every aspersion. I sincerely regret what has occurred, and am anxious to receive you again into my employ. The book-keeper's place and salary are at your acceptance. Let me hear from you before the day passes.

Yours, truly,

J. Phelps.

"Truth has his boots on at last, mother," and the boy drew his coat-sleeve across his eyes.

"Bless the Lord! O, my soul!" was the almost rapturous response, "and all that is within me, bless his holy name."—Presbyterian.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works mus be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1870. | VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 37. WHOLE NUMBER 323.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,) NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THE LIFE VIEWS IN ENGLAND.

WE suggested last week that we might soon give an article from Mr. W. MAUDE, which appeared in "The Rainbow" for April, on this subject, and we present it now to our readers, believing they will all feel interested in it. In addition to the Author's notes, we have appended a few of our own. We are pleased to find Mr. Maude runs so near our views on the resurrection question, and trust there may yet be an advance, by one or the other of us, so that we may be quite one. The remarks on 1 Cor. xv. 22 are in perfect harmony with our views, and ought to satisfy any reasonable man that the "all in Christ" has no reference to the wicked dead:

THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.*

The most popular of living preachers—the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon—in a sermon preached and published some years ago, has expressed his astonishment and regret that our English theology, rich as it is in most departments, actually does not contain a single standard and satisfactory work on the great Christian doctrine of the Resurrection. This fact—for that it is a fact the reader may satisfy himself by referring to the wonderfully complete Bibliography of Eschatology appended to Alger's "Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life"—is certainly a very remarkable as well as instructive one. It is true, indeed, that in many works of systematic theology, the doctrine of Resurrection is treated of, though generally very partially and superficially; but beside this we possess really very little save Drew's "Essay on the Identity and General Resurrection of the Human Body;" which, though an able work, is mainly a defence of a special theory; the Bampton Lectures, by Mr. (now Dean) Goulbourn; the Hulsean Lectures for 1854, by Mr. Cowie;† and a few small works, such as Gipps', Sirr's, and Noble's, on the special subject of the First Resurrection, viewing the doctrine prophetically rather than eschatologically. While on the Fifteenth of First Corinthians we have Dr. John Brown's "Resurrection of Life," and Dr. Candlish's "Life in a Risen Saviour." Even during the last few years, though increased attention has happily been directed to kindred subjects, little or nothing has been done to supply this deficiency; we can only at this moment mention one small volume, not without value, entitled, "A Treatise on the Resurrection," by the Rev. Paten Gloag. Within the last few months, however, two volumes of some pretensions have issued almost simultaneously from the press, the titles of which are given below, and in connection with which we propose to make some remarks on this important doctrine of the Christian Faith.

The circumstances pointed out by Mr. Spurgeon, strange as it may at first sight appear, is not, we venture to think, by any means inexplicable. The fact, the grave significance of which will immediately be considered, that the Resurrection of the Body holds a very different and a very inferior position in our modern theology to that which it undoubtedly held in apostolic Christianity, will go far to explain it. In the teaching of the apostles, the fact of Christ's resurrection, which may be said to contain potentially the resurrection of all believers, even as the seed contains the perfect flower, the acorn the mighty oak, occupies a position and is invested with an importance equalled only by one other fact, namely, the death of Christ—the latter being, so to say, its starting-point and the former its goal. Hence when Paul would give a brief but comprehensive outline of the gospel which he preached, and by which alone his hearers could be "saved," he does so in these words: "Brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I have preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures."—1 Cor. xv. 1–4. The burial being here mentioned, not so much as the enunciation of a third fundamental fact, as being itself the proof and attestation of the other two. Christ must really have died, for he was buried for three days; he must really have risen from the dead, for he was committed to the sealed and guarded tomb. And how truly this was the scope and character of the apostle's preaching is incidentally but strikingly confirmed by the fact, recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Acts, that the philosophic Athenians were disposed to regard him as "a setter forth of strange gods," "because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection."—Acts xvii. 18. Neither was it simply as an historical fact, nor solely in its vital bearing on the question of justification, but equally as the source and security of our own resurrection, that the apostles thus proclaimed and magnified the resurrection of Christ; as, for instance, when Paul bursts forth into the triumphant chant: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead; for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. xv. 20–22. Indeed it is not too much to say that, in the New Testament, the human intuition of a future life is embodied and concentrated in the doctrine of a bodily resurrection; for while a disembodied state is neither denied nor ignored, it is yet practically regarded as of comparatively so little importance that it sometimes seems altogether lost sight of; as when Paul again, in the chapter just quoted, inquires: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die" (1 Cor. xv. 32)—words which involve a palpable non sequitur on the theory of a future life apart from resurrection, such as every merely human system of philosophy has conceived of, unless we admit the supposition that in the apostle's mind a future life, and a bodily resurrection were so inseparably connected that he cared not to contemplate the one apart from the other; in the enthusiasm of his faith the pale and sickly shimmer of the former being, for the time, eclipsed and lost in the bright and steady splendor of the latter.

When, moreover, we proceed to inquire how it has come to pass that this great doctrine of the Resurrection has lost its primitive position and power in the scheme of Christianity, the general answer which must be returned is undoubtedly this—that it is as the inevitable consequence of its dissociation from the Person of the Risen Saviour; since of every doctrine, however Scriptural and important, no less than its personal application to the members of Christ's mystical body, is that word of the Lord true: "Without me—severed from me—ye can do nothing;" for "if any man (or any truth) abide not in me, he—it—is cast forth as a branch and is withered."—John xv. 5, 6. O that men would learn to try every dogma presented for their acceptance, as from the word of God, by this unfailing test—Has it a living root in Christ? Does it spring out of the great central fact of His Divine Personality, as the branches of a tree spring from the parent trunk? Does it manifest the attractive power of the great Spiritual Sun, as the planets do that of the solar orb? This general answer may, however, be exemplified in three particulars.

In the first place, the Resurrection has come to be regarded as an isolated fact, the result of an arbitrary exercise of the divine power, rather than as the natural—if the word may be used in reference to spiritual things—outgrowth and consummation of that divine life which is conferred only in regeneration. Is it not the fact, the melancholy fact, that it is apprehended in popular theology as depending much more on the trumpet of the archangel than on the germinal fact of Christ's resurrection? As a violent intervention, rather than an orderly progression? Yet how distinctly is the truth set forth by the apostle Paul in the eighth chapter of Romans: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall quicken even your mortal bodies by means of his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 9–11. As Mr. Perowne has said so admirably, that its value may atone for the length of the quotation: "Christianity establishes our hopes, not only by pointing to an outward fact (the resurrection of Christ), but by the experience of an inward fact, the communication of the life of Christ to all who believe in him. Jesus Christ is the Resurrection because he is the Life, and he imparts that life to us. "Because I live, ye shall live also." There is a sense in which it may almost be said, that the resurrection is begun here, because the germ of it is to be found in every renewed and sanctified nature. A power has been put forth upon the man, which must issue in his final and complete glorification. A life has begun, which in its very nature can never end, because it is the life of God himself. The resurrection to life, though it is sometimes described as a gift, is also to be regarded as the natural development of the work of grace. Both truths are stated by our Lord in his discourse with the Jews, recorded in the fifth chapter of St. John's gospel. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man." Here, as in many other places of the New Testament, we are taught that eternal life is not merely to be looked for beyond the grave, but as a present reality. There is a quickening of the spirit to newness of life here, as well as a quickening of the body hereafter. Of this twofold life Christ is the source. Christ gives eternal life to all who believe in him; Christ raises the dead; and he does both the one and the other by virtue of that divine life which he receives from the Father and yet has in himself (John v. 26; comp. vii. 57), of which he is at once the Author and the Giver. It was to give this life that he came into the world.—John x. 17. It is from him that this life is derived; it is only by communion with him that this life can be sustained. So he declares.—John vi. 51. And again: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John vi. 53, 54. Here likewise there is a reiteration of the same truths; here there is the same intimate connection between the present gift of eternal life, the present partaking of Christ, and the future resurrection to glory. You cannot separate these things. That which is *divine is in its very nature eternal. Death is but as the episode of a sleep; it has no power to touch the heart of that life which is "hid with Christ in God." That life given here in the body imparts to the body a share in its triumph over death, is the seal and the pledge, that even though the body fall into dust, it shall be raised again from the dust, incorruptible. So essential indeed is this connection between the life eternal and the resurrection of the body, that it is almost the only view of the resurrection which is presented to us in Scripture. There are, I believe, but two passages in the New Testament in which the resurrection of the wicked is so much as mentioned; once by our Lord when he speaks of a resurrection of damnation, to which they that have done evil shall come forth from their graves (John v. 29); and once by St. Paul, when he acknowledges as a truth, common to himself with his Jewish opponents, a resurrection both of the just and the unjust.—Acts xxiv. 15.)† But with these exceptions, the other view of the resurrection is exclusively presented; it is invariably spoken of as the fruit and result of a spiritual life, of Christ as the fountain and source. The one, as it were, by a moral and spiritual necessity, implies the other." ‡

But, secondly, the great doctrine of the Resurrection has, in the hands of modern theologians, suffered a violent dislocation, whereby its attractive power has been fatally impaired, and the harmony of divine truth utterly broken. For second only to the intrinsic value of any revealed truth, is the importance of its being assigned its legitimate position in relation to other truths. In a chain which is the same throughout its entire length, a link may, indeed, be of equal value wherever it is placed, but a wrought stone can fitly occupy only the exact position in the building which it was intended to fill; and if placed elsewhere it will mar the whole design, if it does not even endanger the stability of the structure by leaving its own place unoccupied. Even so is it with the doctrines of revelation; their practical power depends, in a degree seldom suspected, on their right collocation. A misplaced truth is generally little more than half a truth; nay, it sometimes becomes an utter falsehood. Now, everywhere in the New Testament the resurrection, properly so called, the resurrection of life, is inseparably connected with the Second Premillennial Advent of Christ. These two grand events are united by a golden link of divine forging, and to break that link is to put asunder what God has joined together for power and blessing. Thus in the fifteenth chapter of his first epistle to the Corinthians, that wondrous chapter to which we must again and again refer, Paul says: "Since by man came death by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But each in his own order: Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." And again: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—1 Cor. xv. 21–23, 51, 52. So to the Thessalonians the same apostle writes: "This we say unto you in the word of the Lord, that we which are living, who remain behind unto the coming of the Lord, shall in nowise gain an advantage over them which fell asleep. Because the Lord himself shall come down from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are living, who remain behind, shall be caught up all together, with them, in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we be always with the Lord."—1 Thess. iv. 15–17; Alford's reading.

And once more to the Phillippians: "Our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed unto the body of his glory, according to the working of his power, whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. iii. 20, 21.

But what has modern popular theology done? It has not only ignored and made of none effect these grand and explicit statements of Scripture; but the Resurrection itself, instead of being regarded, as it is in the New Testament, as ever close at hand—not a single mundane event necessarily interposing at this moment between us and its actual occurrence—is postponed to a period indefinitely remote, an interval of more than a thousand years at the least intervening; while, moreover, in place of being associated with thoughts of the coming glory, the revealed presence of the Lord, and all the bright and joyous anticipations which cluster so lovingly around "the blessed hope," the resurrection of the saints is viewed almost exclusively in connection with the revelation of the great white throne, the "great assize," and a tremendous scene of final and universal judgment which poets have described and painters have depicted, in terms and colors borrowed not from the Bible but from their own too exuberant imaginations. And thus the resurrection, as we have seen, was in the first instance dissociated from Christ's immediate power; so, in this case also, is it in like manner dissociated from his personal presence as the King and Bridegroom of his church.

Nay, thirdly, as the necessary result of this twofold dissociation, the Resurrection, as it affects the redeemed, in which aspect, as before said, it is all but exclusively presented in the New Testament, has almost ceased to be regarded as a special and wondrous privilege—the very crown and consummation of the great work of salvation; and has become, comparatively speaking, a thing "common and unclean." All men, it is said, are to rise from the dead; all men are to be raised by Christ; all men are to be raised incorruptible and deathless. For it is written: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Cor. xv. 22. (2.) It is at once sad and strange to see how even the best expositors here go astray. Upon these words Mr. Cox says: "He (Paul) affirms the work of Christ to be co-extensive and co-efficient with the work of Adam. If all men died in Adam, all men live, or will live in Christ: 'By man came also the resurrection of the dead;' 'in the Christ shall all be made alive.' If words have meaning, if the parallel between the Adam and the Christ is not illusory and misleading, St. Paul here affirms that the redemption of Christ is of as wide a scope, and of as potent an efficacy, as the sin of Adam; while, in the epistle to the Romans (chap. iv. 12–21) he just as plainly affirms the results of Christ's redemption to be, if not of wider scope, at least of deeper efficacy than the sin which brought death into the world and all our woe. And, therefore, unless we choose to palter with words in a double sense, it is not enough to say that, through the grace of Christ, life is offered to all men and pressed upon them. . . . The sin of Adam did more than offer death to men; it brought death upon them, and made it the common inevitable lot. If the grace of Christ is of an equal range and potency with the sin of Adam, that also must do more than offer its results to men; it must give them life—life in Christ must become their common inevitable lot."—Pp. 64, 65. To the same effect Mr. Cochrane remarks: "The coming restoration to life is affirmed to be co-extensive with the death; 'Even so, in Christ, shall all be made alive.' The Redeemer, in short, is declared to hold toward the entire human species a relation which is the exact counterpart of our first father Adam; only the influence which will emanate from him is life, not death. When the day arrives he will restore to corporeal existence every individual that ever lived and died. This is the plain, undeniable meaning of the words before us."—P. 137. In still stronger terms the same view was expressed some years ago by the present distinguished Dean of Canterbury: "'In Christ shall ALL be made alive.' There shall be 'a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust.' In this lowest, but evident sense, 'because he lives we shall live also.' Every body of man shall one day be reanimated; known as his body was known, by its distinguishing marks and features; built up again by him who built it up at first, and reunited to the human soul, which has been waiting for it in the abode of the departed, the fulness of the Father's time. . . . Such is the result of Christ's resurrection on all—on, as I said, the godly and ungodly, the converted and the unconverted—the real Christian and the heathen Christian alike. . . . All are united to Christ in the flesh. His Body was our body; and the unbeliever, as well as the believer, is one flesh with Christ. All have the same animal and intellectual soul which Christ took upon him; all, unbeliever as well as believer, are sharers in the immortality which he conferred upon our nature by his resurrection, as far as this is concerned in it.'" *

The correctness of this interpretation of the apostle's language we cannot, however, possibly accept; for it appears to us to controvert some of the most fundamental truths of the gospel. The New Testament writers clearly recognise a deep and essential distinction between the resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection from the dead; between a resurrection effected by Christ's sovereign power as a judge, and a resurrection effected by the outworking of Christ's indwelling energy as a life-giving spirit: between a resurrection in incorruption and glory unto eternal life, and a resurrection in corruption and shame unto the second death. (3.) We unduly strain the apostle's words when we insist on giving them an individual application to every member of Adam's race; for this, like all other isolated statements, must be interpreted according to the analogy of the faith. And we are in no degree "paltering with words in a double sense," when we submit to the contrast in the mind of the apostle, yea, and in the mind of the inspiring Spirit, is one between totals and not between integrants; indeed, that is in both cases, the same total, though in excessive conditions—THE HUMAN RACE as lost in Adam and as redeemed in Christ. It is in this tense alone that the parallel passage (Rom. iv. 12–19) can be interpreted without involving Universalism as the logical sequence. And, in fact, as Canon Westcott has truly said: "Christianity addresses not the individual only, but the race: its effects are declared to extend not to man only, but 'to all things which are in heaven and which are on earth.' It is universal before it is particular. Just as Aristotle taught that the state is prior to the man, so Christianity claims to address the world before it addresses the individual." † For even as the harvest which in autumn covers the fields as with a sea of rippling gold is the same wheat which months before the sower cast into the ground, though not every grain there represented, some having fallen by the wayside, some having perished for lack of moisture, and some having been devoured by the birds of the air; and as the army returning from the long and bloody campaign, is the same army that a while before went forth to fight its country's battles, though to many a name there is none to answer when the muster-roll is called; even so the race, the "all" of humanity, to be made alive in Christ is the same race, the same "all" who died in Adam, though certain individuals may not be included in both categories. (4.)

For, let it be further noticed, that the resurrection, or making alive, of which the apostle speaks, however universal or however restricted we may choose to regard it, is unquestionably defined by the expressive and technical phrase, "in Christ." It is "in Christ that all shall be made alive."* Can it then be said, in accordance with the usage of the New Testament, that all men are "in Christ?" Mr. Cox, we regret to observe, asserts that they are: "Both the Adam and the Christ are in you and in all men. . . . In us, and in all men, there are two natures, two 'laws' two 'men' at strife—the one tending to evil, the other protesting against evil and citing to good—we derive the former from Adam, the latter from Christ."—Pp. 82, 68. But this statement we are constrained to regard as utterly unscriptural, and in fact subversive of the whole scheme of redemption. We ask any reader at all acquainted with theology, as a science, to trace out and weigh carefully the logical results of its admission, and then say if this language is too strong. Let us at present, however, turn to a few passages in the New Testament and see if this phrase, "in Christ," as used in them, can possibly be held to have any such universal application. In the first place, then, to be "in Christ," is to be included in the number of God's elect people; for "He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love" (Eph. i. 4); but all men are not elected, or else election is no more election. Again, to be "in Christ" is to be in possession, personally, of the blessings of redemption; for God "hath made us accepted in the Beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of his grace;" (but all men have not the forgiveness of their sins, else all men must be saved. For again, to be "in Christ" is to be freed from all condemnation; since "There is now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus" (Rom. viii. 1); but all men are not freed from condemnation, else how could any rise, as they will do, at the resurrection of condemnation?—John v. 29. So also to be "in Christ" is to be a new creature by regeneration of the spirit; for "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things are passed away, behold all things are become new" (2 Cor. v. 17); but all men are not new creatures, else Universalism must needs be true. And once more, to be "in Christ" is to be sealed by the Holy Spirit; for it is written, "In whom (i. e., Christ) after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. i. 13, 14); but all men

[For Conclusion see inside.]

* "The Resurrection: Twelve Expository Essays on the Fifteenth Chapter of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians." By Samuel Cox. London: Strahan.

"The Resurrection of the Dead: its Design, Manner, and Results. In an Exposition of the Fifteenth of First Corinthians." By Rev. James Cochrane, A. M. Edinburgh and London: Blackwood & Sons.

† The first three lectures are devoted to the difficulties connected with the Doctrine of the Resurrection.

* I have here substituted the word "divine" for the word "spiritual," as I cannot admit that whatever "is spiritual is in its very nature eternal" in form, if I may use the expression, whatever it may be in essence.

† The Scriptural evidence of the resurrection of the lost is indeed small; yet two other passages may, I think, be added to those referred to by Mr. Perowne; Matt. x. 28, inasmuch as if the body and soul are to be destroyed in gehenna, there must needs be some body to be destroyed; and Rev. xx. 13, which indeed so far as the bodily nature of their resurrection is concerned—for the Greek word "resurrection" (anastasis) does not necessarily refer to the body—is perhaps the strongest passage of the four. (1.)

‡ Immortality. (Hulsean Lectures, 1868, pp. 100–103.)

(1.) NOTE BY EDITOR OF HER. OF LIFE.—If that is "the strongest passage of the four," we do not hazard much in saying, There is no proof of the revival of the wicked dead. Only think of it! a doctrine of such tremendous importance, if true, not "so much as mentioned" but in "two passages," says Mr. Perowne! And Mr. Maude can find only "two other passages," which he says, "I think may be added to those referred to by Mr. Perowne;" and the symbolical one of Rev. xx. 13, "is perhaps the strongest passage of the four!" If Mr. Maude or any other Life believer had only "four" passages, which they "think" sustain the Life views, or the revival into life of the righteous dead, might not our opposers laugh us to scorn, and call us fanatics, or something worse? Not "so much as mentioned but" in "two passages," or, at most but "four," and "the strongest" one of those a symbol! Should we not blush to ask thinking men to believe our statements on such evidence?

(2.) In this country some Adventists preach this same doctrine; only they say, "All men, saints and sinners, will be raised mortal," instead of "incorruptible." This they do to sustain them in the judgment after resurrection, and to avoid the conclusion that the wicked dead live not again.—ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.

* Dean Alford: "Quebec Chapel Sermons," First Series, pp. 156–162.

(3.) "The correctness of this" statement "we cannot possibly accept." We think it straining a point to sustain the theory of the resurrection of the wicked dead, very much after the manner of the "mortal" resurrectionists in this country; which we desire may not be resorted to in England.—ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.

† "The Gospel of the Resurrection," pp. 44.

(4.) We like this illustration. "To many a name there is none to answer when the muster-roll is called." The wicked dead are like the dead soldiers of the army when it returns from war: they are heard from no more: "They are dead; they shall not live. They are deceased; they shall not rise." They "shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Isa. xxvi. 14; Prov. xxi. 16, and a multitude of like texts.—ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.

* "In order that the similarity, pointed out by the particles, may find a place, the clause, 'in Christ' (en to Christo), will not signify 'through Christ,' that it is he who awakens all; but that, by virtue of the connection in which they stand to Christ, so far as they are spiritual (and no other relation with Christ can be thought of), they belong to his race or generation, they must with him, also live as he himself does; they must return to life in the same way that he did. Thus, as Paul finds the grounds of all the happiness which comes to man only in communion with Christ, so he places hope of a future life in Christ alone; and thus, what he here asserts is in full agreement with Rom. viii. 10, seq. But what follows from it? That the resurrection which he expects, can refer only to those who stand in such union with him as that is upon which he enlarges in verse 35 seq., where he speaks of the mode of the resurrection; it can refer only to those. Thereby he has settled, as it seems to me the controversy, not yet decided, respecting the meaning of 'all' (pantes) in this passage. Those who are not united to Christ can expect no resurrection. Paul does not mention such in his epistles. They belong only to the race of Adam; as such they are obnoxious to death; as sinners they go to destruction. An existence after this life he may have assigned to them, also a kind of resurrection in Acts xxiv. 15, where nothing depends on an accurate definition; not using the term there in the special and higher sense in which he has employed it in his epistles. Here the 'all' are certainly believers only."—DR. RUCKERT; The Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Dead," pp. 22–26.

[Concluded from first page.]

have not the earnest of the Spirit, else all men must finally attain to the inheritance. In fine, to be "in Christ" is to be the possessor of eternal life; for "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life" (1 John v. 11, 12); but all men have not this eternal life, for it is added: "He that hath not the Son of God hath not life."* Plainly, therefore, if the words "in Christ" in 1 Cor. xv. 22, include every individual of the human race, they are used in a sense not only differing from, but opposed to, that which they are obviously intended to convey in every other instance of their use in the New Testament.

Equally definite and restricted are the words "made alive," which occur in immediate connection with the clause we have considered: "In Christ shall all be made alive." Nowhere in the New Testament do we find restoration to life, or possession of life, in a future state, predicated of those finally lost. On the contrary, the contrast is ever between the life of the righteous, and the death, corruption, and excision of the wicked.—See Rom. vi. 23; Gal. vi. 8; Matt. xxv. 46. Thus in the twentieth chapter of the Revelation, at the fourth verse, we read concerning those who form, apparently, the last band of the partakers in the first resurrection: "And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years;" but it is added, "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Nor do they even then "live" in any true and proper sense. They abide in death as their natural element, and accordingly, as we find it subsequently stated, it is as "the dead" that they stand at last before the great white throne; it is as "the dead" that they are judged out of the open books; and it is, finally, as those whose names are not found written in the book of life that they are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death.—Ver. 12–15. And all this is in exact accordance with the last recorded words of the Baptist, preserved by the same apostle John in the third chapter of his gospel: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God (which ever finally takes the form of death) abideth on him."

In conclusion we must observe, that there is to our mind something absolutely appalling in the language used by Dean Alford, as above quoted, in reference to this subject. "The unbeliever," he tells us, "as well as the believer, is one flesh with Christ;" "all, unbeliever as well as believer, are sharers in the immortality which he conferred upon our nature by his resurrection;" "of all it may be said, in a low but evident sense, 'because I live, ye shall live also.'" But what, we ask, in wonder and dismay, will be the nature of that flesh in which, according to the learned Dean, the lost shall in resurrection life be one with Christ? Shall the pure, incorruptible, Spirit-quickened flesh of the risen Saviour clothe souls foul with sin and doomed to the fire of gehenna; changing even their vile bodies into the likeness of his glorious body? Perish the thought of such dishonor being done to our adorable Redeemer. Perish, also, the thought of such a violation of justice by the God of holiness and love, as is involved in the idea of conferring immortality on beings otherwise mortal, when that immortality must be an eternal curse. Yet, on the other hand, if raised in bodies of merely Adamic mould—as doubtless they will be—if we regard such a resurrection as the result of union with Christ, as being a making alive in him; shall we not have, not only without warrant, but in defiance of express Scripture testimony (see 1 Cor. xv. 47–49), conformity to the "earthy" made an effect of Christ's resurrection as the "heavenly?" Nay, will not this in truth be to make Christ the minister of sin, inasmuch as the restoration of the old Adamic body, sown in corruption and raised in corruption, sown in dishonor and raised in dishonor, must needs be the restitution of that which is sinful; and thus the prostitution of Christ's resurrection-power to give renewed existence to that which he hates and to abolish which he died? (5.) Think of Christ's flesh polluted as man's body is often polluted, and "he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption!" Think of Christ's flesh in gehenna! Think of Christ's flesh the prey of the undying worm—the object of shame and everlasting contempt—the subject of the second death! and say if we do not stand here on the verge of hideous blasphemy! No; there shall indeed be a "a resurrection of the unjust" as well as "a resurrection of the just;" but while the latter is the sublime consummation of a divine spiritual process, and can no more take effect apart from the initial stages of that process, than a harvest can be reaped before the seed is sown; the latter is a purely judicial act, of a temporary character, like all the resurrections mentioned in Scripture previous to the resurrection of Christ, and for governmental purposes alone; (6.) the true type of which is to be found, not in the glory of Christ's risen body, but in the loathsomeness and putridity of the charnel-house were its contents cast forth to disgust and appal the living. (7.)

In view, then, of such misrepresentations and perversions as these, it is surely small matter of surprise that the great doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body should have fallen from the prominent position, and lost the attractive power, which it occupied and possessed in apostolic teaching. For apart from all such obscurations of its primitive glory, and when presented in its most Scriptural form, it is confessedly attended with difficulties of no ordinary magnitude. Some of these we had intended briefly to examine, but the limits assigned to this article are overpassed, and we must therefore reserve them for consideration on a future occasion.

BIRKENHEAD. W. MAUDE.

—The Rainbow for April.

* What was the apostle's own personal conviction of the vital necessity of being "in Christ," in order to the attainment of the resurrection from the dead, may be learned from his language in his epistle to the Philippians: "That I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection from the dead."—Chap. iii. 8–11. Clearly, from this, there was in Paul's estimation no attaining the resurrection from among the dead, save by being found "in Christ;" and just as clearly he recognized the possibility of a man not being "found in him."

(5.) We wish our friend Maude could see, also, that any revival into living existence of the wicked dead, makes "Christ the minister of sin;" for it clearly is "the restoration of that which is sinful," and makes Christ's resurrection work "the prostitution of His resurrection power to give renewed existence to that which He hates, and to abolish which He died." We beseech our English brethren to think again on this question.—ED. HER. OF LIFE.

(6.) Where do we find the idea of a "temporary" resurrection "for governmental purposes alone?" We know of no such statement in the Bible; and think it is wholly of human invention. Let us abide by "the law and the testimony." Then only are we safe.—ED. HER. OF LIFE.

(7.) Just so, Br. Maude; the resurrection of the wicked dead must be disgusting and appalling to the holy and redeemed ones; and most of all to the holy REDEEMER; and as He is "the Resurrection and the life," we may rest assured He will not "disgust and appal the living" saints with such a sight.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JUNE 29, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE ARTICLE ON FIRST PAGE.

"A LONG article," some will say. True, in one sense; but it is not the multitude of words that really makes an article long. Many that are called "short articles" are truly long, for they are made up of words not worth remembering, and of course not worth reading.

While the article commencing on the first page, and ending inside, this week, is, in words, long, it will well pay the thoughtful reader for a careful study of its contents. As we do not issue a paper the "Fourth of July" week, our readers will find food in said article for two weeks, and we trust they will read and digest it well. One thing is clearly settled in it, viz: that 1 Cor. xv. 22, "all in Christ," can by no possible means be made to include the wicked dead. The English Life believers are sound on that subject, and also on the saints being made alive from the dead immortal and incorruptible. So far they agree with us perfectly.

On the subject of the resurrection of the wicked dead, they seem to admit the evidence is very limited; yet they accept it. We think they will come to see that the evidence of eternal torments has full as much claim on their acceptance as the mortal resurrection of the wicked, to die again. If these two theories are those between which we are to choose, we have no hope of inducing eternal torment believers to abandon their theory for the other; of the two, their theory has the strongest claim to faith, from Scripture language or expressions.

But we are content to let our English friends work out the problem. We travelled the same road they are travelling for near twenty years, but saw, at length, the principles of interpretation we had adopted to disprove eternal torments would compel us, if we were consistent, to reject future, hopeless torments in a life hereafter. Our friends on the other side of the Atlantic, we doubt not, will yet come to the same conclusion, if the age in which we now live lasts a few years longer. We rejoice that they have advanced as far as they have, and trust they will not fence themselves around in such a manner as to prove a stereotyped sect, which refuses to alter its creed. Let "infallibility" live and die at Rome, and go to its merited perdition; but let our path be that of the just, that "shineth more and more to the perfect day;" and let us heed the apostolic injunction to "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ." Then, we trust, we shall all learn, it was no part of His mission into the world to give life to dead men, only to inflict torment on them, and then to deprive them of a life thus forced on them. To our mind such a process has all the essential features of eternal torments, only lacking its eternity. Indeed, the torture itself is worse than if eternal; for it wrings the life out of them, and they cannot survive it; while eternal torture is endurable; evident from the fact it does not deprive the victims, of life.

"CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

WILL our friends look at our list of these as they stand in our "CATALOGUE?" It will be seen they now number twenty. Can we spend a few hundred dollars better, just now, than to send them forth on their mission of love to dying men?

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

THE anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 26, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the HERALD OF LIFE and the TRACT cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

ZION'S HERALD.

THE above-named paper has for some cause, unknown to us, ceased to visit our sanctum of late. We hope that we have given it no just cause to hide itself from us. True, we have occasionally criticised some of its sentiments; but we have tried to do so kindly. We clipped the following from the "Advent Christian Times" of the 21st instant, which may explain its non-arrival at our office of late:

Our readers will be astonished to hear that "Annihilationism" is "annihilated." The event occurred at a late session of the New Hampshire Conference of the M. E. Church, and the work was performed by the "Rev. J. W. Adams." The fact is announced in Zion's Herald. We would say, however, that THE TIMES, and the other advocates of what the Herald calls "foolish heresy," will continue to be published as usual. We shall also soon make room for the report of Mr. Adams' effort. We fear, however, that he is destined to disappointment, if he shares the Herald's view of its crushing effects.

The N. H. Conference of the M. E. Church is our old home; in it we spent about a dozen years, and toward it we still feel kindly, though but few ministers remain there who were our former associates. It seems enough of the leaven of "Life only in Christ" had found its way into that region to make an effort to arrest its progress important, and so "Rev. J. W. Adams" is set to work to arrest the "foolish heresy." We are glad the effort has been made, because it will call the attention of Methodists, in that region, to the subject; and reflection will bring conviction of the absurdity and unscriptural character of the doctrine of inherent immortality and eternal torture.

"Life future and eternal only in Christ" is a "foolish heresy," is it, Br. "Zion's Herald?" Well, "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise;" 1 Corth. i. 27. That the theology of this age, based on inherent immortality, is founded in "the wisdom of men," and not in the wisdom or truth of God, does not admit of a doubt in our mind. No wonder those who uphold it should call the truth a "foolish heresy;" it is far easier to call opprobrious names than to answer scriptural arguments.

If our old friend, "Zion's Herald," has dropped the HERALD OF LIFE from its list of exchanges, we shall not complain on that account; we shall part with our good will following it, trusting the day will come when it will "preach the faith which" it may now try in vain to "destroy"—"annihilate."

By the way, "Br. Zion's Herald," how about "Rev. N. D. George's Book" against us? No one has sent us a copy of that work, which was to do such good service for inherent immortality. It is true, we have not sent money to the author or publisher for a copy; but it is customary to send a copy for notice to papers; especially where the matter concerns an Editor, as we are told that work does us, by name. But we are not anxious about the matter, fully assured the more our opposers call attention to our views, though it be in a perverted manner, the more rapidly will the truths we advocate spread, because men will be led to see, by the contrast, the reasonableness and scriptural grounds of our position, that "Life future and eternal is only to be had by a union with Christ," and that all others will "utterly perish in their own corruption:" 2 Pet. ii. 12.

MAINTAIN CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

THE substance of the following remarks we gave our readers several years ago; but at a time when popes, councils, or conferences, seem bent on usurping authority over the human mind, and dictating what we shall, and what we shall not believe and practice—in short, are claiming "infallibility," and promulgating their anathamas in some form, it is time that all living Christians should be awake to the fact that such submission, as is demanded by these would-be infallibles, is nothing but idolatry, and no better than doing homage to the "golden calf" that Israel set up just after they came out of Egypt.

A christian is a disciple, a learner of Christ, a person who receives Jesus as his divine teacher and guide, and who studies to understand on purpose that he may obey his teachings. The very idea of a christian implies that he is free from all men, that he acknowledges the authority of no man under heaven, either as teacher or Lord; that Christ is his all; that his principles and conduct are regulated solely by a regard to the will of God as revealed and exemplified by Christ; that other teachers or Lords are nothing in his view; that he rejects what he believes to be contrary to the teachings of Jesus, though taught as essentials by the whole world; that he receives the plain doctrines of Christ, though denounced as heretical or infidel; that he does what he believes to be required of him by Christ, though all others should pronounce it rebellion; that he refuses to do what he believes to be at variance with the doctrine of Christ, though enacted by the greatest authority on earth, and declared to be essential to the order and peace of the church. In short, the idea of a christian implies, that he stands, as it were, alone in the universe, without any one in the capacity of Master, but Jesus, without any one in the relation of father, but God. The relation in which he stands to men is that of a brother. He can neither be a master nor a slave, a ruler nor a subject, without inconsistency. He can be a servant, a minister, a helper, a benefactor; but he cannot be a slave, he cannot be a master. He cannot acknowledge the authority even of a church, much less of a body or corporation outside the church. He cannot acknowledge the authority of a teacher. He must try the teachers whether they be of God, and he must prove or test the teaching even of the best of teachers. He is, under God and Christ, his own sole ruler, his own sole master, his own sole judge, his own sole guide. The will of God, as recognized and understood by himself, is his own sole rule. It is not the will of man, it is not the will of popes, it is not the will of conferences, it is not the will of churches or of pastors that is his rule; it is the will of God. It is not the will of God as understood by others; but the will of God as understood by himself. To his own master he stands or falls; and by his own conscience, as enlightened by the revelation of God he must be guided in all things. Such is the christian, free from all men, free in all things, perfectly free, free in all circumstances, "free indeed." Free in thought, free in action, free in speech.

Free, not to do wrong, but to do right only; but still free to judge for himself what is wrong and what is not. Bound in all things to obey the law of God, but perfectly at liberty to judge what is God's law as well as to judge what God's law means. Men may teach us, but not dictate to us; they may help us to think and understand, but not to think or understand in our stead; they may help us to a knowledge of God's will, but not impose on us their own interpretations or inventions. Such is the christian. He is very teachable; but his teacher is Christ: he is very submissive; but his Lord is in heaven: he is very peaceful; but it is in the enjoyment and use of his liberty.

A christian church is a company, or assembly, or an association of such persons. It is a company or association of persons who will not be lords, and who will not be slaves; who will neither give commands themselves, nor receive commands from others: who will neither rule their brethren, nor allow their brethren to rule them; who think and act and speak with liberty themselves, and who respect and encourage and love liberty in all their brethren. The greatest of them are servants, the highest are helpers. They all are servants and helpers; servants and helpers to each other. And when this state of things does not exist in a church, the church is no longer a christian church.

The Jews did not more certainly cut themselves off from God when they acknowledged the godhead of the golden calf, than christians cut themselves off from Christ when they acknowledge the authority of conferences or popes. Whether the authority acknowledged be in one or many; whether it be the authority of laymen or clergy (if we may use such words), it is still the same; it cannot be acknowledged in the church of Christ, without utterly changing its character—without changing it from a church of Christ into an essentially different thing. We cannot serve two masters; we cannot be ruled by two wills. If we become the servants of men, we cease to be the servants of God; if we are resolved to be the servants of God, we must cease to be the servants of men. The doctrine of christianity annihilates the authority of man, and acknowledges only the authority of God. You will see therefore, that we consider it not only dangerous but fatal to the church, when it places itself under any authority but that of Christ. You will also see, that we consider most, if not all the churches in our land, as in a wrong position; as churches of some one else, and not of Christ. The Methodist churches are all bound by the laws and doctrines of Wesley, or by the authority of their preachers or conferences. The independent churches are in subjection to their pastors, as well as to creeds and regulations. The papists are in subjection to the Pope; and all, we fear, to something or other. Now to us there appears to be no essential difference between the Protestants and Papists, so long as they both are in subjection to the authority of man. The position of both is antichristian. We meet with some who say it is impossible for churches to exist on the principle of unrestrained christian liberty; who tell us that churches must either have some human authority or crumble to pieces. We reply, if we must either give up church organization or sacrifice individual liberty, let church organization be given up. If we must either be in subjection to men or cease to be churches, let us cease to be churches. It is essential to our divine life that we act freely; but it is not essential to it to be organized churches. Our plan is this: endeavor to know what is the will of God, and act accordingly. Endeavor to learn the truth and to spread it; to detect error, and to expose it. We believe it our duty to live for the good of our fellowmen, and labor to serve them in just such ways as seem best to us. Let us acknowledge no one's authority either in matters of truth or duty. Let us believe in God, and love him; and labor so to act that we may always please him. Let us believe in Jesus as God's appointed teacher, example and guide; and let us study his doctrine, and labor to drink in his spirit, and to walk as he also walked. Let us accept help or instruction from any one; but acknowledge no man as our Lord. Popes, priests, conferences, and yearly meetings, are alike. Let us pay no more regard to their authority than to the will of a wayward child; no more regard to their creeds and laws, than to the talk of a stranger in the street. Let us feel it essential to peace of conscience: essential to confidence in God, and to our eternal life, to be free from all authority but the authority of God. We could no more join a church that would expect to rule us, than we could join a press-gang; no more tie ourself with creeds or laws of man's making, than sell ourself to the sultan, or hire ourself to a pirate. Let us meet with any church or with any single christian that can receive us as a brother and a friend; but let us meet with none that cannot leave us free. Let us make no confession of faith or opinion to any one, except in the way of free conversation, or for purposes of instruction; and ask no confession of faith or opinion from others. If we find out men to be profligate or faithless, cease all fellowship with them, though still endeavor to serve them, and reclaim them from their errors. Speak, print, and publish with perfect liberty, respecting no dictation but that of God and our own conscience. Be a slave to none; a lord to none; draw up no creeds; make no laws; establish no governments. We are in favor of christian union; in favor of association and co-operation, so far as they are consistent with perfect, individual christian liberty. Some co-operate with us, but they would never dream of our requesting them to obey us. Many are associated or united with us, but none regard us otherwise than a friend, a brother, or a helper. All we care for is the spread of truth and righteousness, and the welfare of mankind; and we take such steps and use such means, as appear to us the most likely to accomplish this great object.

THE flower of Christian graces grows only under the shade of the cross, and the root of them all is humility.

1 COR. XV. 18, 20 AND 22.

SOME years since Prof. HODGE, D. D., of the Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J., published an Exposition 1 Cor. On chap. xv. are some things of much interest to us. After noticing the "consequences of denying the resurrection of Christ," as indicated in the apostle's argument, he speaks as follows:

Verse 18. "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

"This is the fourth disastrous consequence of the denial of the doctrine in question. All the dead in Christ are lost. To fall asleep in Christ is to die in faith, or in communion with Christ for salvation.—See 1 Thess. iv. 14; Rev. xiv. 13. Are perished; rather, they perished. 'They perished when they died.'"

Verse 20. "But now is Christ risen from the dead (and) become the first-fruits of them that slept."

"Christ has not only risen but he has risen in a representative character. His resurrection is the pledge of the resurrection of his people. He rose as the first-fruits of them that slept, and not of them only, but as the first-fruits of all who are ever to sleep in Jesus." . . . "As he rose, so all his people must; as certainly and as gloriously."—Phil. iii. 21.

Verse 22. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"This is the reason why Adam was the cause of death, and why Christ is the cause of life. We die by means of Adam, because we were in Adam; and we live by means of Christ because we are in Christ. Union with Adam is the cause of death; union with Christ is the cause of life. The nature of this union and its consequences are more fully explained in Rom. v. 12–21. In both cases it is a representative and vital union. We are in Adam because he is our head and representative, and because we partake of his nature. And we are in Christ because he is our head and representative, and because we partake of his nature through the indwelling of his Spirit." . . . "That the word all in the latter part of this verse is to be restricted to all believers (or rather, to all the people of Christ, as infants are included) is plain, 1. Because the word in both clauses is limited. It is all who are in Adam that die; and it is the all who are in Christ who are made alive. As union with Christ is made the ground of the communication of life here spoken of, it can be extended only to those who are in him. But according to the constant representation of the Scripture, none are in him but his own people. 'If any man be in Christ he is a new creature.'—2 Cor. v. 17. 2. Because the verb (zoopoieo) here found is never used of the wicked. Whenever employed in reference to the work of Christ it always means to communicate to them that life of which he is the source.—John v. 21, vi. 63; Rom. viii. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 45; Gal. iii. 21. The real meaning, therefore, is, 'As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made partakers of a glorious and everlasting life.' Unless, therefore, the Bible teaches that all men are in Christ, and that all through him partake of eternal life, the passage must be restricted to his own people."

TRUTH WILL TRIUMPH.

Now that the great question of future existence is being accorded a more liberal degree of consideration by the various religionists of the day than it has been wont to receive, and now that in the Methodist church especially, as we believe, ignorance and prejudice are somewhat notably yielding to the power of truth, it can hardly fail to be both interesting and instructive to recur to the observations of some of those faithful soldiers of the cross who, loving truth, and absorbed in its study, have been favored, logically, with visions of its success in uprooting some of the error with which theology is burdened. We not unfrequently hear it asked, in discussing the nature and destiny of the race, "Were our eminently learned and pious predecessors in error respecting these things? Are we now to condemn as error what they so fondly cherished as truth?" Let us give an extract from a work written some twenty years since. On pages 289, 290 of Isaac Taylor's "Wesley and Methodism" occurs the following:

"When once this weighty question of the after life has been opened, and when it shall have come into the hands of well-informed biblical interpreters, a controversy will ensue, in the progress of which it will be discovered that, with unobservant eyes, we and our predecessors have been so walking up and down, and running hither and thither, among dim notices and indications of the future destinies of the human family, as to have failed to gather up or to regard much that has lain upon the pages of the Bible, open and free to our use. Those who, through a course of years, have been used to read the Scriptures unshackled by systems, and bound to no conventional modes of belief, such readers must have felt an impatience in waiting—not for the arrival of a new revelation from heaven, but of an ample and unfettered interpretation of that which has so long been in our hands.

"Thus the future Methodism, as we assume, will feel the need of, and will acquire for itself, under pressure of most urgent motives, an incontrovertible exposition of the Scripture doctrine of the future administration of justice; but then it will not make this acquisition as if it could be held as an insulated dogma; for whatever is further ascertained on this ground will come to stand in its true relationship to much beside, which in the course of the same argument, will have started to view, as the genuine sense of the inspired books. The doctrine of future punishment, as a belief drawn from Scripture, and so drawn as to dissipate prevalent illusions, and to spread on all sides a salutary and effective alarm—such a belief will take its place in the midst of an expanded prospect of the compass and intention of the Christian system.

"The past Methodism was far from being a message of wrath, proclaimed by men of fierce and fanatical tempers:—it was a message of joy, hope and love; and it made its conquests as such, notwithstanding those bold and unmeasured denunciations against sin which it so often uttered. And so it will be with the future Methodism; and although it will rest itself upon a laboriously obtained belief concerning the 'wrath to come'—a belief that will heave the human mind with a deep convulsive dread, yet, and notwithstanding this preliminary, the renovation which we look for will come in as the splendor of day comes in the tropics—it will be a sudden brightness that makes all things glad!"

Prevalent illusions are being dissipated more rapidly, perhaps, in the Methodist church than in any other claiming to be what are popularly termed orthodox, and this reform will spread in an increasing ratio. Rapid indeed will be its flight through the Methodist and all other churches, and an "incontrovertible exposition of the Scripture doctrine of the future administration of justice" will obtain if Christian men and women will cease "running hither and thither" with "unobservant eyes," and determine to enter upon a prayerful and, as nearly as is possible, an unprejudiced examination of the word of God. A real hindrance to growth in the knowledge of the truth is the feeling that it is presumptuous and even dangerous to step beyond the position occupied by some eminent and trusted leader when death overtook him. The fact is overlooked that those eminent men, raised up of God, we may believe, for the accomplishment of some great work, grew in the knowledge of gospel truth; and doubtless if they were now suddenly to appear upon the stage of action, they would say to their followers, "Why stand ye here all the day idle?" They would say, "Forget me, a weak instrument, and follow Christ." "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The diligent lover of truth progresses from faith to faith, ever increasing in the knowledge of the truth, until the dawn of that "perfect day" when all will see eye to eye. Let us mind the light.

L. C. T.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

THE JUDGMENT MESSAGE.

A SERMON BY WM. H. SPENCER.

"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."—Rev. xiv. 6, 7.

[Continued from No. 35.]

IN our examination of the light drawn from God's dealings with man in the past, we have found abundant proof of our position that, according to the immutable principles upon which God deals with man, a judgment message always precedes the execution of the judgment—that it is always confined to the generation upon whom the judgment is executed, and presents the nature of the danger and the only means of escape.

AN INEVITABLE CONCLUSION.

Now, what is the conclusion which we must necessarily draw from these facts? According to the principles upon which God deals with man—and which are fully manifested in the history of the past—a judgment message must precede the close of this dispensation. This is the important fact presented in our text, and the thrilling truth so fully taught by our Saviour.

John, in his exile condition on the Isle of Patmos, had painted to him by the Holy Spirit the fearful history of mighty enemies of Christ, and their bloody persecution of His church; and in vision, being carried down the stream of time, he saw divinely-commissioned messengers going forth into all parts of the world—flying swiftly with the judgment message—proclaiming with a loud voice that "the hour of his judgment is at hand."

Looking at the whole history of divine providence we cannot possibly conclude that this judgment message will not be followed by the same results as all instances in the past when a judgment message has been proclaimed. Has God changed? Are not the attributes of His character the same to-day that they ever were? Would He send Noah to preach a judgment message to the antediluvians; or would He tell Abraham of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and deliver Lot from the fearful tempest of fire, and yet destroy this world unwarned? God warned Babylon of its overthrow and Jerusalem of its destruction, and his people were not in darkness regarding the danger, and were saved in the hour of his indignation. Can we believe that God would thus deal in the past, warning his people of the destruction of cities and nations, and that this world, groaning as it is, under the mighty burden of sin, will sink down in the darkness of destruction without one word of warning? Such a conclusion is not in harmony with his word; for the prophet declares, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."—Amos iii. 7.

My beloved friends, look out upon the world in all its pride, selfishness and fancied security, and tell me what means this message which has penetrated all the north and north-eastern nations of Europe, and has followed the track of the Anglo-Saxon over the known world? "The hour of His judgment is at hand," is the thrilling message which is heard above the roll of the war-drum and the cannons' awful roar.

THE TOKENS OF SPEEDY REDEMPTION.

From the teachings of Christ we learn that the moral condition of the world in the days of Noah and Lot was a type of the generation upon whom the last judgment should be visited, when the Son of man shall be revealed from heaven "in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.' In the days of Noah and Lot they did everything in utter disregard of God's warning; every imagination of the heart was only evil continually; "they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. xxiv. 38, 39. They chose darkness; the warning fell unheeded upon their ears, and when the flood burst forth in its mighty power, it found them in their fancied security wholly unprepared, and they perished. No generation ever existed which so completely fills the type, as given by Christ, like the present. The corruption of mankind is of a universal nature, and pervading all climes and classes to such an extent that mere men of the world are becoming alarmed, and significantly inquire, "What are we coming to?"

But Peter particularly speaks of these times, when the judgment message should be sounded forth to a godless world, as a period when scoffers should abound; for it was this very message of the speedy return of the Lord of Life and glory at which they were to scoff. And it is a fact too apparent to be denied that no message has ever developed scoffers like this; and they will continue to scoff until they share the fate of the antediluvian world.

Many are the signs and tokens which assure us that we are not mistaken in regard to our conclusion that the speedy consummation of all things is at hand. Not only in human language is the warning found, but nature herself gives signs of a speedy change. In the air and skies, on sea and land, there is a remarkable fitness to the prophetic word.

In viewing the day of the Lord as at hand, what is our duty? "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" Shall we sow and reap, marry and give in marriage, and hoard up the corruptible wealth of this world, in fancied security, when the day of the Lord is hastening greatly? There is no sin incurred in sowing, reaping, marrying or giving in marriage, only when done in utter disregard of God's warning, as the antediluvians did. In these hours of awful responsibility shall we join the scoffing multitude, who gloat in their iniquity, and raise the popular inquiry —"Where is the promise of His coming?" Or shall we join those backslidden ranks who say in their hearts, "My Lord delayeth his coming?" Nay! "Let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober."—1 Thess. v. 7. "Now, little children, abide in Him, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming."—1 John ii. 28. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as He is pure."—1 John iii. 2, 3. "Blessed is he that watcheth." Amen.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June, 1870.

WHAT DID STEPHEN SAY?

BR. STORRS: Having some time ago prepared the following comment upon the answer of Bro. Grant to an inquirer in the "Crisis," as to the dying declaration of Stephen (and being refused) I send it to you.

It has been a question for some time, in my mind, as to the correctness of ascribing to Stephen a certain expression connected with his martyrdom. While my mind is open to conviction, desiring to know the exact truth, I will give my views and best understanding of the matter.

In the 57th verse, after Stephen had declared, "I see the heavens open, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God," It is said, "They cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears, and ran upon him, with one accord," &c., . . . "And they stoned Stephen, calling upon (God) and saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit." Now, what does the phrase "ran upon him," signify? I know not what the words may mean in the original, but I shall ask, may it not be used in the sense in which it is used in our day, viz., "to ridicule." When we say, a person has been running upon us, i. e., ridiculing us.

"And they stoned Stephen;" and what else did they do? "calling upon (God)," (I find this word supplied by the translators,) "saying, Lord Jesus receive my spirit." And what did Stephen do? "He kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to thir charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep."

What seems clear to my mind is, that the expression, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit," was used, by those who stoned Stephen, as ridicule; as though they would expect to hear such an expression from him.

As this text is claimed as a stronghold by those who believe that man goes to heaven at death, they will find, by a little study, that the Stephen that was carried to his burial, was the Stephen that was stoned, and that this same Stephen will only attain to eternal life by a resurrection at the last day.

The above is submitted in love, for the candid consideration of all who seek for truth.

Yours, D. J. ELLSWORTH.

WINDSOR, Conn., June 18, 1870

NO FUTURE LIFE FOR THE WICKED.

BR. STORRS: I desire to state, through the columns of your excellent paper, that I have been led, (by the Spirit, I trust,) to see the beauty and glory there is in the Gospel plan of "No Life out of Christ," and wish to say, publicly, that I have renounced the old tradition of the elders that there is to be a re-living of the wicked dead. I have been a firm believer heretofore in the resurrection of both classes; yet there has always been a great deal of darkness brooding over my mind in regard to it. But I have been praying for sometime that the good Lord would show me the true light on the subject. The good Book teaches us that "the path of the just is a shining light, that shineth more and more to the perfect day; and furthermore, we are admonished that "if we are led by the Spirit of God it will lead us into all truth, and show us things to come." John xvi. 13. Now, if we are taught by the Spirit of truth that there is no resurrection of the unjust, (and the Spirit and the word agrees,) then we cannot be honest with ourselves unless we receive this testimony. To those of my Advent brethren and all others, who believe the wicked will live again, I have no hard words to say, but refer them to the word of God as the foundation of my belief and not to popular theology.

Br. Paul's argument in 1 Cor. xv. should be evidence conclusive that the wicked "remain in the congregation of the dead; for he plainly declares that when the last trump shall sound, the dead are "raised incorruptible;" v. 52; so that mortal resurrectionists have no foundation to stand on, and must admit the universal salvation of mankind, if their theory of a universal resurrection be true.

But Paul is not alone as regards this matter. He who is declared to be the Son of God with power, has also said, in language that cannot be mistaken, that "they which shall be accounted worthy to attain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given marriage; neither can they die any more; for they are equal unto the angels; and are children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Luke xx. 35, 36.

The same is brought to view by all of the Gospel writers; and inasmuch as the whole Book of God abounds in the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked, I for one say, "Thy will, not mine, O God, be done." And God grant that the people may be enlightened more and more on this important question, and the truth as it is in Jesus, be spread over all of God's vast domain, is the prayer of your brother in Christ.

LEANDER H. ROWE.

LEWISTON, Me., June, 1870.

BR. W. S. CAMPBELL VERY SICK.

DR. LUDINGTON, New Britain, Conn., under date of June 23, writes us as follows:

BR. STORRS: I have visited Br. W. S. Campbell at the house of his son-in-law, Mr. Nelson Ives, Meriden, and found him in a very critical state of health, or rather, disease. I have much reason for fearing that when the crisis is reached it may prove fatal. Or if it should not result in death, it will be a long time before Br. C. will be able to labor, if he ever is.

Gangrene has already appeared in the hand, and caused much anxiety. Inflammation has entered the body, and is doing great mischief to important organs.

Br. C. is a great sufferer, and is much of the time quite delirious. In a lucid interval, he said to me that, all had appeared dark to him for a time, but that he had come out of it, and felt more freedom. Still, he is extremely weak, and needs to be aided by the prayers and sympathies of the faithful.

Allow me also to say, that he needs material sympathy, as the current expenses attending his sickness are unavoidably large, not less than seven or eight dollars a day. It requires a male nurse to take charge of him night and day. Physicians have to ride three or four miles or more, daily, to visit him. Let him be remembered, in this sore extremity.

Yours, in the "blessed hope."

Remark by the Editor.

Let all of us remember our brother and his afflicted family. Those who send material aid should address,

MRS. W. S. CAMPBELL,
Meriden, Conn.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

BR. STORRS: I owe an apology for not advising you of the Advertisement I had inserted in the "Christian Standard" of this city, a short time ago, headed, "The divinity that is not sick and needs no doctoring," to which you adverted in the last number of the HERALD OF LIFE. I had intended to do so, but by some means neglected it. I shall be very sorry if I have caused you any annoyance by the calls that are made for samples of the HERALD. My object in advertising our paper in the "Standard" was to call the attention of a professedly Bible loving people to the glorious truth of "Life only in Christ," which the HERALD OF LIFE advocates; and it is this truth, this "divinity," which I fearlessly claim "is not sick and needs no doctoring," because it emanates from heaven, and not from men, and therefore does not need any doctors to prop it up.

Nothing was further from my thoughts than to intimate by the heading of the Advertisement that the HERALD, in the advocacy of this truth, is past perfection or that it has attained to the fullest light upon this glorious theme. On the contrary, I believe that as yet much thatis beyond conception grand and glorious is hidden from our mental vision, and that the full sunlight of its splendor will not burst upon our sight until that which is perfect is come, and we shall no longer see through a glass darkly, as we necessarily must in our imperfect state.

Waiting and looking for that blessed time, the glorious realization of all our hopes, when He who is our Life shall appear and usher us into the glorious liberty of the children of God, I am, as ever,

Yours affectionately.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, June 21, 1870.

P. S.—Enclosed please find $2, to pay for samples of the HERALD OF LIFE that have been, or may yet be sent for. C. F.

Remarks by the Editor.

OUR friends have a perfect right to their opinions of this paper, and also to advertise it as much as they please; yet we would regret to have those who read their advertisements get the impression that we claim a perfection for it which we know exists in no human production. It is true, we believe, on the Life question, this paper is far in advance of all others, and yet we may have many things yet to learn, even on this glorious topic.

While we therefore give thanks and take courage for what God hath wrought for us and by us, let us cultivate a spirit of Christ-likeness which shall tend to win others to the faith we so highly prize, and which affords us so much consolation and joy.

We have no fault to find with Br. Franke for his kind effort to increase the circulation of this paper; but we wished applicants to know that the advertisement was not ours. Much good may be accomplished by advertising, but try to choose words which will not seem to be boasting.

We shall be glad to furnish any one, not only with a sample of the HERALD OF LIFE but also with samples of our Tracts, provided they will send Post Office stamps to pre-pay the postage.

Br. Franke's advertisement has brought us several applications; but, in only one instance, nothing for postage; but of this we do not complain; we are glad to have any stranger to the paper see it, free. In all cases we have sent with it one or more tracts. We thank Br. F. for the remittance to help meet this expense.

FROM W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

BRO. STORRS: I met with the friends in Bethel last Sunday and had a truly precious season. In the forenoon I spoke from John xv. 1–8, the parable of the vine, in which I presented the various phases of the parable, and showed the great importance of being a living, faithful branch of the true vine. In the afternoon I spoke from 1 Cor. i. 30. "But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." The ideas presented were first, God as the great author of salvation carrying on his work through the agency of his Son, whom he had constituted wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption to us. The fulness of Christ was briefly noticed and these four principles were discussed as containing a concise statement of the practical workings of God's plan of salvation.

First, wisdom: Jesus Christ came into the world "to bring life and immortality to light through the gospel." He must announce the way in which this was to be done. This way is the wisdom of Christ presented to us for our eternal good. The leading principles of his gospel were presented.

Second, righteousness: If we listen to the teachings of Jesus and have faith in them and desire to be benefitted by them, we shall attain the only righteousness which we can know, the righteousness which is of God by faith, and Christ has been constituted this righteousness to us; he is the great object of faith. Righteousness by the law and that were contrasted, and it was shown that the latter only was attainable by sinful man.

Third, sanctification. As righteousness by faith has been made to follow an acceptance of the teachings of Jesus, so sanctification or a holy life follows as a necessary consequence in a man who has been justified by faith, and Jesus is the great source of spiritual living.

Fourth, redemption: This is the crowning work of God's plan of salvation. Man may be brought thus far and not be freed from sin and its consequence. Redemption in its full and complete sense was defined to be that act which transfers us from this sinful state to the immortal state; and hence must take place at the coming of Jesus, who is our redemption, which draweth nigh, and consists of a resurrection of the dead and a translation of the living.

In the evening, Rev. Mr. Hopkins, Methodist, had an appointment, but he was informed of my being there and withdrew, much to my regret. This necessitated my speaking again, and I chose that fruitful and ever new topic, "God is love."

The Lord gave me great liberty, and I tried to speak the truth as it is contained in his word. The attendance was fair but the interest did not seem as good as it was last winter. Some little unpleasantnesses have arisen, and some have kept away from us.

I wish to say through the paper that I have arranged to go to Hinesburgh, July 1st, nothing in providence preventing.

Yours in the vineyard.

ST. ALBANS, Vt., June 24, 1870.

FROM S. AND L. W. BRAGG.

BELOVED PILGRIMS IN THE LORD: In peace and love we are seated to inform you that we are of good courage in the Lord; feeling salvation is sweetly flowing in Jesus' worthy name. We never felt more like enduring than now. Jesus truly lives to intercede in our behalf; and because he lives we shall live also. Thank his dear name evermore. Nothing in this mortal state can equal the joy of the Lord. Here is rest in the present tense, by faith; and we can nearly anticipate the joys eternal in glory, beyond sorrow, care, fear, and the tempter's power. And our longing hearts cry out, O, come; bring immortality and eternal life, and let these poor pilgrims go home, and gain the conqueror's reward, as it is, in part, brought to view in the HERALD OF LIFE under the heading of "The Conqueror's Reward." If no more than this is at last realized, it will be blessed indeed. But O, what a transporting thought that every desire of the immortalised saints will be fully satisfied with fuluess of joy and pleasures forevermore. This does truly ravish our moral vision and blinds us to all the glories of this present evil world, just as gazing upon the literal sun will blind us to all things else. The good Lord help us so to live that we by faith may keep in view the heavenly prize of immortality and eternal life, soon to be given to all the humble, faithful, waiting ones, who are sighing for home, and rest eternal upon the new earth paradise. No marvel that Br. Paul called it "the blessed hope," and Peter "A lively hope;" and John, "A purifying hope," which fits us to appear with him in glory, to die no more. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. It saves us in the present tense, in Jesus' worthy name. Now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation (with the Lord;) and just as soon as we fully submit and believe, that moment we are saved in the Lord, free from every sinful stain; and all is well in the Lord for time and unending eternity. O thank his dear name forever and evermore.

Of late we have had a refreshing time with the dear saints here in Albany, N. H. Here is quite a company looking for the blessed hope; have had meetings in the grove on Sundays for the most part. On the third and fourth of July next we shall meet again in Br. Piper's grove, if the Lord will. Pilgrims pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified. From pilgrims in the gospel hope, and love of eternal glories.

ALBANY, N. H., June 15, 1870.

FROM HERBERT L. PATTERSON.

DEAR PILGRIMS IN THE LORD: May the good Lord bless you all, and may we soon meet at home with Jesus and angels and kindred so dear. Truly the Lord is good to us, poor pilgrims, as we journey on amid the perils of these last days; and I do feel to praise him. O bless the Lord for salvation, full and free in Jesus' worthy name. O how it cheers my poor heart to read the dear HERALD. Never did the truth of Life only in Christ seem so precious as now. I am glad we can have life, eternal life, through Jesus, the holy Son of God. O, how blessed it is to know our life is hid with Christ in God; and when Jesus appears we shall appear with him in glory; never more to be sad. I do feel I am willing to suffer with him here, if I may be accounted worthy to reign with him when he comes. I do believe he is soon coming to claim his own. Signs on every hand proclaim his coming near; and my weary heart cries out, Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly. We long to see thy glorious face, and in thine image shine. Here, all over this earth, is nought but sin and suffering. But over there, no sleepless eyes, no night of death, no farewell tears, no loved ones parted, no anxious fear. O, glory to God and the Lamb forevermore. I sigh, I long to be there. Dear ones, do pray for me. Your brother hoping for eternal life in a little while.

BANGOR Me., June 17, 1870.

J. W. STOKES, Lisbon Falls, Me., writes: I love the HERALD OF LIFE and the Bible doctrine it advocates, viz., "No future life only to those in Christ, the LIFE-GIVER." I long for the paper to come every week, for it is about all the Life preaching we have, as we are the only ones in this place of this faith. We are distributing tracts, to see if any will see the truth of "No Life out of Christ." May God give you health and much of His Spirit to enable you to spread this glorious truth.

ONE half of mankind are not born with saddles on their backs, to be ridden by the other half.—Jefferson.

WORSHIP God in "the beauty of holiness," and let thy soul delight itself in Jesus. Drink long and deep from the Fountain of Love, and satisfy the thirst of thy soul. Feed richly upon the heavenly manna, till thou hunger no more. Let thy joy be full, for so is the will of thy Master.

OBITUARY.

BURGES.—Died, in Livermore, Me., Jan. 29th, 1870, HERBERT B. aged one year and seven months; son of Lafayette and Hannah BURGES.

The tie of affection is broken, but not forever; Herbert will live again. May God grant to give the afflicted ones a full appreciation of the promise. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

J. C. WHEELER.

GOOD HEALTH for July is received. A valuable magazine.

CONTENTS.—Health and Occupation; Chinese Method of Breeding and Fattening Fish; The Circulation of the Blood, by Robert White, Jr., M. D.; On Poison, by F. S. Barff, M. A.; Near Sightedness, by Henry Hurd; Presence of Mind; On Assimilation, A Reply to Prof. Horsford, by Dr. Carl Both; Tea and Coffee; Vegetables Better than Nothing; Snake Bites and their Antidotes; Swimming; Treatment of the apparently Drowned; Instinct and Reason, with a variety of short articles.

Published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield st., Boston, Mass., at $2 per year.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH and Journal of Physical Culture, for July is received.

CONTENTS.—The Two Wives. By Mrs. E. Oakes Smith. One of our literary lady friends says: "The Two Wives is full of inspiration to those who are looking upward and onward." Disinterested Benevolence, Beecher; "Cleanse your Hands, ye Sinners," Rev. Chas. H. Brigham; Training of Children, Mrs. H. C. Birdsall; Hines (a Poem), Annie Chambers Ketchum; Medical Education of Women, Mrs. R. B. Gleason, M. D.; Growth and Development, Prof. Archibald McLaren; Health and Prosperity as Affected by Religion, Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D. D.; Our Studies in Physiology, Prof. T. H. Huxley; Culture, Rev. J. B. Beach; Longevity of Dry Goods Clerks; How to Accomplish a Great Deal; A Sound Mind in a Sound Body; How to Procure Sleep, an Important Discovery.

Two dollars per year; 20 cents per number. Published by WOOD & HOLBROOK, 13 & 15 Laight st., New York.

THE LITTLE CORPORAL MAGAZINE.—The July number of this beautiful juvenile comes to us greatly enlarged and improved, as well as finely illustrated. The wonderful growth of this young Napoleon of the juveniles has been as surprising as it is interesting. Its circulation has shot far ahead of that of any of its competitors. Its matter is entirely original and of a very high order. In its new, improved form it is one of the handsomest, as it is the cheapest, magazine we have seen. Childlike but not child*ish*, it rejoices the hearts of both parents and children alike. This number begins a new volume; now is a good time to subscribe. One dollar a year; sample copy, 12 cents. Published by SEWELL & MILLER, Chicago, Ill.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEW YORK (Cooper Institute), July 3.
NEW BRITAIN, July 10.
TERRYVILLE (Br. Yale's neighborhood), July 17.
WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., July 24.

CHAS. C. BARKER.

TERRYVILLE, Conn., Sunday, July 3, in Br. O. F. Yale's neighborhood, or where he may appoint.

The above came to us without a signature. We presume WM. STUART is the preacher.

OCEANPORT and EATONTOWN, Sunday, July 3.

S. W. BISHOP.

TERRYVILLE, Conn., Sunday, July 10, in Br. O. F. Yale's neighborhood.
CHESHIRE STREET, Conn., Sund., July 17.
NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Sunday, July 24.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, July 31.

WM. STUART.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—L. F. Moore, D. H. Tichenor.

VARIOUS SUMS—D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; Mrs. D. B. Strope, $2 50; Loman Upson, $5 on pledge (all paid.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Erastus Clark, Grand Rapids, Mich., $1; D. B. Salter, $5.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Mrs. Helen M. Wood, Erastus Clark, Miss Isabel Clark, A. C. McCollum, Jno. Aug. Williams, Paul D. Salter, D. G. Combs, Henry Lees, Mrs. D. B. Strope, Jas. N. Gladding.

Beautiful Mansions.

Beautiful Mansions; home of the blest,
Land of the faithful, there shall I rest;
There is my treasure, there shall I be:
Lord I am weary, take me to thee.

Chorus.
Saviour be near me:
Thy gentle voice can cheer me,
O Jesus my Saviour,
Take me to thee.

Here in a desert sadly I roam,
Laden with sorrow, far from my home;
Clouds on my pathway darkly I see;
Lord I am weary, take me to thee.

Thou wilt not leave me comfortless here;
Why should I doubt thee? what do I fear?
Light in the distance breaking I see,
Yet I am weary, take me to thee.

Jesus I love; dwell in my heart,
Never, no never, from me depart;
Hope like a rainbow shining I see,
Still I am weary; take me to thee.

Selected by H. L. Patterson.
Bangor, Me.

The Papacy: Its Destruction.

A SERMON BY ELD. WM. LANGARL.

Subject.—The Ecumenical Council of Rome, as connected with the destruction of the Papacy; and the coming and kingdom of our Lord.

"That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first: and that Man of Sin be revealed . . . whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming!" etc. 2 Thess. ii. 3-13.

The day of the Lord is not, as is supposed by many, a brief period of a few hours; revealing a God in grandeur and a world on fire. It is as described by the apostle Paul, "The dispensation of the fulness of times," when "The Lord shall gather into one, all things in Christ" that then exist; the time when he shall take to himself his great power and reign; and subject to himself all rule; and all authority and power; destroying the last enemy, which is death, and establishing his kingdom and dominion on the earth. "The kingdom of God is like unto leaven, hid in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened." This is descriptive of the three dispensations in the Mediatorial reign of Christ: 1st. the Law given by Moses: 2nd. The Gospel instituted by Christ; and 3rd. The Kingdom to be established by "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour." The revelation, and not the personal appearing of our Lord, introduces the day of the Lord. In his divine nature he is revealed as a thief in judgments upon the world, and as a Bridegroom in salvation to his Church. His appearing in the clouds of heaven to the world, and in his personal glory to his people are subsequent events. The fatal error of Christendom is, that the subjugation and conversion of the world, is in the second or Christian dispensation, and before the coming of the Lord in his kingdom. They ignore the third dispensation, or age of glory, as did the Jews the second, or age of suffering; and the world to come promises to be as great a stumbling stone to this generation as was the second, or christian age to the Pharisees and Sadducees: erroneous views of the day of the Lord is the reason why it comes as a snare on all the world.

The former ages, or dispensations overlapped: and so with the future. One increases, while the other decreases. While many are looking for a physical conflagration, the political heavens will pass away with confused noise, and revolutionary commotion; and the events which they will consider as signs of its approach, will be the events of that day fully inaugurated. The Lord will be King over all the earth in that day; his throne will be one of mediation, established in mercy, as well as judgment; and he "shall sit upon it judging, seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness, nor shall he fail, or be discouraged until he has set righteousness in the earth, and the Isles shall wait for his Law."

The events of this day will be progressive in their development. First, the shaking of the heavens, or political governments and organizations: and second, the removal of iniquitous systems, one by one, until the final crash shall involve them all in universal ruin. The abolishment of slavery is one of the events of judgment, and an indication that the day of the Lord is already initiated.

The great event which will more than any other demonstrate the judgment age, and convince the world that the day of his wrath is come, will be the destruction of the Papal Power; all Protestants admit that the Scriptures fully delineate the rise, progress, and downfall of this power. They also admit that the Roman Catholic Church is the power referred to in our text, as the apostacy which was to come, and the Man of sin which was to be destroyed by the brightness of his coming. And we think all honest Catholics must admit that the apostacy could not proceed from an impure church, nor yet from one of modern organization. When they, therefore, prove the antiquity of their church, and its original purity, both from apostolic rule and teaching, they thereby demonstrate her identity as the body in which the apostacy must arise, and the power from whence the Man of sin must proceed.

The declaration of our Saviour, that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against his Church" does not contradict the apostle, or intimate that the Church would not apostatize; but simply, that the gates of hades or the grave should not forever hold captive his people; for he has by his death and resurrection obtained the keys of death and hades, and will by his power raise them from the dead, and deliver them forever from its dominion at his second coming in glory. The apostle declares that this apostacy was working in his day and would continue until the hindering cause should be removed. This hindering cause was the Pagan constitution and laws of the Cæsars. These were abolished, and the Papal constitution and laws of Justinian instituted in the year of our Lord 532 or 33. Then was the Pope constituted head of the Christian Church, and thus the Man of sin was fully revealed. So long as the Church assumed simply ecclesiastical authority, she was denominated feminine; but when she assumed civil rule and authority, she became masculine, and was declared the Man of sin. The period allotted for the rule of this power is twelve hundred and sixty years; reaching from Justinian to the French revolution in 1792, or 3. And as it required seventy-five years from Justinian to Phoaecus, fully to confirm this civil rule, so it required the same period, from the French revolution until the reoccupation of Rome by the French troops in the year 1868, to complete the consumption of the civil rule, bringing it to the period when she is to be destroyed by the brightness of the coming of the Lord. This brings the ending of the longest prophetic period, the 1335 years, the destruction of this power must be imminent.

The Ecumenical Council is admitted by all, especially by the Catholic Church, to be an event of great importance. It is evidently an effort on the part of the Church of Rome to glorify herself; and brings forcibly to the mind the expression of the Revelator, "How much she hath glorified herself, so much torment give her:" "for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen I am no widow, and shall see no sorrow; therefore shall her plagues come upon her in one day, death, mourning and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire; for strong is the Lord God which judgeth her."—Rev. xviii.

It is admitted, by eminent Catholics, that this is an effort at display on the part of Rome. Separated as she has become from the union and support of the nations of Europe, she now boldly assumes to be superior to them all: and although bereft of her estates, and thrown upon the charitable resources of her subjects for support, she boldly asserts that she is no widow and shall see no sorrow; for "the church," says the Pope, "is stronger than heaven."

As a simple ecclesiastical power, Rome is putting forth giant efforts and inspiring wonderful expectations of universal conquest; particularly in Great Britain and our own nation. The present Council is intended to strengthen her arm, and increase her efficiency for the purposed mission of the world's subjugation.

One important means for the accomplishment of this object, is the centralization of her power by establishing the Ultramontane dogma of the papal infallibility. This blasphemous assumption will be the filling up of the cup of her iniquity; and then in addition to this, she aims to glorify herself by gathering together the distinguished dignitaries of her communion from all parts of the world; that she may thereby astonish the world and dazzle the eyes of her votaries by this display of her greatness; and by such means seek to regain, by one great ecclesiastical display, what she has lost by her civil deprivations.

It is at such a juncture the judgment comes upon her in one hour. But by what agencies is this judgment inflicted? In Rev. xvii. we have a clear description of this power and her destroyers. A woman seated upon a scarlet colored beast, which has seven heads and ten horns. Of these heads it is said, they are mountains and kings, and are explained by Barnes and other eminent expounders of prophecy, as forms of Government or dynasties through which the empire passes from its origin to its downfall. In the day of John, five of these dynasties had passed away, these were the kingly, under Romulus; then the Tribunes; then the Decemviral; then Dictators; then the Consullar, and the sixth, the Imperial Pagan, under the Cæsars; succeeding this was the Papal Imperial of Justinian; and finally, the eighth, or Infidel imperial of Napoleon. Of this it is said. "It was," in the first; "is not," in the second; "and yet is" renewed in the third Napoleon; it ascended from the Pit and goes into perdition.

Of the ten horns it is said, "they are ten kings . . . who agree to give their power unto the beast," or the eighth head, or Napoleonic dynasty, "until the words of God be fulfilled." They then "hate the woman; make her naked and desolate; eat her flesh and burn her with fire." After this, they, the ten horns, make war with the Lamb, but he shall overcome them; because he is now manifested as the King of kings and Lord of lords. This shows their Infidel proclivities, and clearly refers to the ten states of Italy, who are the only powers that have ever submitted to the Imperial authority of Napoleon the third; or ever will; for it must be recollected that this final head of the Empire is the most insignificant of either of the Imperial heads. The first, that of the Cæsars, had crowns on the heads. The second had crowns on the horns; but the last, was crownless. The expectation of the future greatness of Napoleon has no authority from the symbol of the word of God. This last dynasty, symbolized by the eighth head, goes into perdition; and we may say, has already gone into perdition; or ceased to exist; for, the "Plebiscitum" ends the Imperial headship of Rome, and secures to France a constitutional kingdom and monarch. For the purpose of securing to his son and family a throne and kingdom, Napoleon abandons an empty title to an empire, over which he found it an impossibility to establish his authority, and becomes a constitutional monarch. The Empire sinks into perdition.

Thus ends the last dynasty of the fourth and last universal government of the Prophetic word. Then comes the deluge, or time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation.

It is a most singular coincidence that this event of a peaceful revolution should occur during the session of the Council. The interposition of Napoleon has twice saved the Vatican from destruction; and now the Republican leaders are waiting with intense interest the opening of further events.

This leads us in the next place to notice that the destruction of the Papal power is in a time of violent revolutionary action. This is referred to in Revelation xviii. 21—"And a mighty angel took up a stone, like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." This symbol represents the destruction of the Papacy by the uprising of this revolutionary element, which will swallow it up, as the sea asorbs the millstone. Angels symbolize men and companies of men; and here, evidently, is descriptive of the Red Republicans now pervading Europe, and particularly the Italian States. The people of Italy have been long preparing for this work through the teaching of Mazzini and Garibaldi: and in consequence of repeated repulses have become filled with bitter hatred to the Papal government and priesthood, and stand ready whenever an opportunity offers to execute the judgment written. The way is now prepared. Napoleon, abandoning his purpose of empire, must yield to the demands of the nation and the legislature, and withdraw his army from Rome, and abandon her to her fate. This will be the signal for the uprising of the Italian people. The Council, dragging its slow length along, will be overtaken and surrounded by this revolutionary fire; then, "there will be no way for the shepherds to flee, or the principal of the flock to escape." Thus a universal slaughter will ensue; for it is not by volcanic eruption she is destroyed, but by the ten horns, who "eat her flesh and burn her with fire."

Surely if these foolish shepherds "had known the hour the thief would come, they would have watched, and not have suffered their house to be broken up." For it must be recollected that this great Ecclesiastical body, consisting of the Pope, Cardinals and Bishops, is the representative woman of the apocalypse, whose judgment is, that "she shall be utterly burned with fire." In such an event her devotees who have committed fornication with her and lived deliciously, would lament and bewail her, the world over, when they saw "the smoke of her burning; standing afar off for fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city; for in one hour is her judgment come."

By such a catastrophe the church of Rome would be utterly incapacitated for any future organization; the scattered congregations would be like a tree separated from its roots, whose trunk and branches would be left to wither and die in scattered fragments. Thus in one hour her great riches, such as apostolic succession, etc., would come to nought; and no man would buy her merchandise any more.

Moses said, "If the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open and swallow up Korah, and all his company, then they might know that these men had provoked the Lord;" but an event such as we have described would hardly be a new thing. In the history of Israel we read of Jehu gathering all the Priests and worshippers of Baal, leaving none wanting, throughout all Israel; and after separating from them the servants of the true God, he commanded his soldiers to "slay them utterly, leaving none alive." For this service God rewarded him by confirming him on the throne with his descendants until the fourth generation.

As was Baal to Israel, so is Rome to the church of God. The entire system stands between Christ and the world as a dark incubus between the sun and the earth, shutting out completely the saving rays of the Sun of righteousness. Instead of the one glorious High Priest ever living to make intercession and the pure word of God as the bread of eternal life, she substitutes her own priestly interposition, and the dogmas of her own corrupted traditions. The blood of millions of God's saints cry for vengeance upon the power represented by the priesthood now assembled at Rome. And the infidel populace, which has been corrupted by the wine of her fornication, will be the fit instrumentality in the hand of the Almighty for her overthrow and destruction; causing the exclamation, "True and righteous are his judgments; for he has judged the great whore, which has corrupted the earth with her fornication, and has avenged the blood of his servants at her hand." "And again they said, Alleluia, and her smoke ascended forever and ever."

In delightful contrast with the judgments inflicted on the enemies of God, by the brightness of his coming, is the glory to be confirmed to his waiting people. For "He comes to be glorified in his saints." Voices are heard "like the noise of many waters, and mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia, the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; let us be glad and rejoice, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and His wife has made herself ready; and to her was granted to be arrayed in fine linen; for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints."

This is descriptive of the fullness of Christ, even his righteousness, sanctification and redemption; for "this is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our righteousness." Hitherto the Lord has been revealed to his people experimentally only as righteousness and sanctification, by forgiving their sins and cleansing them from all unrighteousness. But in this day of redemption, now dawning upon the world, he imparts to them the additional grace of redemption; which is the crown of righteousness, by quickening their mortal bodies, by his Spirit which dwelleth in them; thus imparting to them an immortal and incorruptible life. This is the leaven of the third dispensation: the grace to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ. Thus they who are ready go in with him into the marriage; which is oneness with Christ, even as the oneness of Christ is with the Father; the fulness of him who filleth all in all.

By the inspiration of the divine Spirit we are made partakers of the divine nature in sanctification. By the respiration of this divine Spirit, in this grace of redemption we are filled with all the fulness of God, and of the Spirit, and of Christ; from thenceforth the tabernacle of God is with men; and he will dwell with them and be their God. Thus, attaining an endless life in Christ, they become qualified to reign with him as kings and priests on the earth when the coming shall be fully established; the dominion of which shall include all nations, languages, and peoples; and the effects of which will by the establishment in the earth of righteousness and glory of God.

"Are There Few that be Saved?"

This was a pertinent question asked by one of the disciples of our Lord, and the answer is one that ought to awaken anxiety in the mind of every one: "Strive to enter in at the straight gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in and shall not be able."—Luke xiii, 23, 24.

Jesus had previously given a decided expression on this point, in his famous sermon on the mount: "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matt. vii. 14.

If it were necessary to add to this testimony, we might refer to that great judgment upon the "world of ungodly men," the Flood, when only eight souls were saved, although Noah preached righteousness to them, telling them of their doom, for a full century after their destruction had been announced. We might also refer to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, which, according to Jude, was "set forth an ensample," from which only Lot and his two daughters were saved. And we might further add this prophecy: "Though the number of the sons of Israel be as the sand of the sea, the remnant shall be saved."

Here is the sad evidence that comparatively few are willing to be saved; for it is written: "Whosoever will, may come." Why is it, that for a few short years men will cling so tenaciously to a life of sin and vexation, shrinking even from the thought of death; yet for eternity, they choose death rather than a life of peace and joy?

"Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?"—The Nazarene.

Progression the only Safety.

There is no such thing in Christianity as standing still. There is no such thing as the winter freshet when business is dull and the evenings long and nothing else to do, and then the corresponding drouth in the summer, when too many other things are to be attended to. This man-invented system has proved a decided failure. Christianity is not like vegetation that it must needs die at a certain season, but it does require a daily onward movement. The divine injunction is, "Sow thy seed in the morning, and in the evening withhold not thy hand." "Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." The Christian life is a continual warfare with the natural desires of the heart and the lusts of the flesh; and every moment the Christian allows himself to lay aside his armor or to weary in well doing, he is in danger of being overcome by temptation. The final reward (being "accounted worthy to attain that world and the resurrection from the dead," Luke xx. 35) is "to him that overcometh." "He that endureth to the end, the same shall be saved" We who "seek for glory and honor and immortality" have a starting point; that point is faith (believing on the Lord Jesus Christ). "By grace are ye saved, through faith," says Paul; and Peter adds the following system of progression, as security against falling into temptation, and as a means of convincing others of the reality of that which we profess:

"Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall. For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—The Nazarene.

If you have great talents, industry will improve them; if moderate abilities, industry will supply their deficiencies. Nothing is denied to well-directed labor; nothing is ever to be attained without it.

Where God loves he affords love-tokens, and such are only his soul-enriching graces. If our heart moves toward him, certainly his goeth out toward us. The shadow on the dial moves according to the sun in the heavens.

They who doubt the blessing of religion because they can find no Christian who is perfect might as well deny the existence of the sun because it is not always noonday.

Truly is life akin to grief and how necessary it is to our nature! As the light consumes the inanimate substance it rests upon, so that it requires the night to restore what is lost during the day, thus does prosperity fatten upon what is best within us, only to be restored by the dark blessing of sorrow.

"If ever Christianity," says Robert Hall, "appears in its power, it is when it takes up its votaries where the world leaves them, and fills the breast with immortal hope in dying moments."

Children's Department.

Black-eyed Ellen:

OR THE LITTLE GIRL THAT WOULD NOT ACT A LIE.

In the little town of F——, not many miles from the brow of "Old Graylock," there is situated a little schoolhouse, in which the writer has spent many happy moments, and in this house the incident I am about to relate happened.

The teacher that had been engaged to take charge of the school was mild and pleasant to his scholars; but still the lessons had to be learned; which, I am sorry to say, the pupils thought very hard. After a while the lessons dragged so much that the teacher found it necessary to do something besides coaxing and hiring.

On the following Monday morning this rule was laid before the school; all those that missed in their study would receive one stroke of the ruler for every word missed, telling them at the time that he hoped that he would not have to punish any one. One pleasant afternoon, as I was about my duty, I noticed that little Ellen D. or black-eyed Ellen as we often called her, did not tend to her studies very well.

Time rolled until time for recitation came and the class were called out to recite; when it came Ellen's turn to answer, she missed; after trying three times, the teacher, being called away to help a scholar for a few moments about his lesson, forgot that any of the class had missed. After finishing the recitation, dismissed the class, when to his surprise little Ellen D. came up to him and with tears in her eyes and trembling lips said, "Sir, I missed."

Noble girl, when nobody accused her of missing, and when the teacher had forgotten it too, she came up and frankly told that she had missed, rather than to act out a lie. The teacher was so much pleased with the little girl for telling the truth when nobody accused her, that he forgave her for that time, and addressing the school, he said, "I hope you will all follow little Ellen D.'s example and when you have broken a rule of the school you will always find it the best way to tell the truth."

Moral.—I hope all little girls and boys that read this simple story will always tell the truth. Remember that God is always watching you, sees all you do and hears all you say. Try and be good; learn to love God who first loved you, is the wish of your friend, A. B. C.

If I Could Only See My Mother.

"If I could only see my mother!"

Again and again was that yearning cry repeated,—

"If I could only see my mother."

The vessel rocked, the waters, chased by a fresh wind played musically against the side of the ship. The sailor, a second mate, quite youthful, lay in his narrow bed, his eye glazing, his limbs stiffening, his breath failing. It was not pleasant to die thus in this shaking, plunging ship; but he seemed not to mind his bodily comfort; his eye looked far away, and ever and anon broke forth that grieving cry,—

"If I could only see my mother!"

An old sailor sat by, the Bible in his hand, from which he had been reading. He bent above the young man, and asked him why he was so anxious to see the mother he had wilfully left.

"Oh, that's the reason!" he cried in anguish; "I've nearly broke her heart, and I can't die in peace. She was a good mother to me—Oh, so good a mother, she bore everything from her wild boy, and once she said, 'My son when you come to die you will remember this. Oh, if I could only see my mother!"

He never saw his mother. He died with that cry upon his lips, as many a one has died who has slighted the mother who loved him.

We put this in the paper, as a word of warning to boys. You must love mother, and kindly do as she says, and help her all you can. If you have sisters you must be kind to them, and then they will love you dearly; thus you will make home pleasant. And then you wont have to feel as the youth in the story you have just read.—Selected.

Remember God is Every Where.

Who has not heard of the gentleman who said to a boy, "I will give you an orange if you will tell me where God is,"—and that the boy replied "I will give you two, if you will tell me where he is not?" You all know that some children act worse when the teacher does not see them, than they do when he is looking at them; so when we forget the great truth—"Thou, God, seest me," (Gen. xvi. 13,) we act worse than we would if we remembered it. "God is a spirit," and heaven is his throne, but as he has made everything by his great power, he knows all things that are done on earth, and sees the thoughts and intentions of every heart. Let us never forget this, but by our behavior show our love to the Saviour, and that we intend, till life's journey shall end, to make him our Friend.—Selected.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	The Rich Tract,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works mus be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 13, 1870. VOLUME VII.--NUMBER 38. WHOLE NUMBER 324.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
Wm. H. Thorne, New York, Vice President.
Wm. H. H. McAllister, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
Leonard C. Thorne, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

Geo. K. Carroll, New York.
John Kemp, New York, | Wm. Roworth, New York,
Richard Martin, New York, | T. M. Redhead, Brooklyn, N.Y.

The Object of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

A Voice from California.

One of our brethren on the Pacific coast has issued several numbers of an octavo magazine of 4 pages; but it is too small for the noble purpose intended. That vast region ought to have a "Herald of Life" paper, the size of our own. Br. Glenn, publisher of the "Nazarene," has sent us a note accompanied with a communication intended for his magazine. They are herewith placed before our readers:

Stockton, Cal., June 12, 1870.

Br. Storrs: I would like to see the accompanying article in print, but am unable to publish it myself, as it is too long for my little paper, and I have already published a partial answer to the article in question. I send it to you on the same terms that the author sent it to me, "for your perusal, to use as you may see fit."

Yours, in hope of the resurrection,
Wm. N. Glenn.

Dear Br. Glenn: Your little "Nazarine" for June has been given to me. I am right glad that there is at last a publication on this coast that sounds out the word of the Lord faithfully. "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith Jehovah." I hope that the "Nazarine" will grow and increase, not only in size but in the number of its readers, from month to month, and that it may be the means, with God's blessing, of leading many on this coast to look for "that blessed hope, the bright appearing of our Lord," and the resurrection to a never-ending life.

I found much interest in reading the article headed "Soul naturally immortal." I met with Dr. Arnold's article in the Chicago "Standard," and wrote an answer to it intending to send it to the editor, but concluded not to do so since it would be more likely to find a place in the waste basket than in the columns of that paper. I send herewith a copy of it for your perusal, to use as you may see fit.

In the issue of the "Standard" for April 14, one of the "Trifles light as air" has this on Heresy Hunting:

Persons who have a keen scent for heresy, and love to let loose the dogs of orthodoxy at the faintest shadow, should "be sure of their own theological soundness."

It seems to me that this applies very well to the article of Dr. Arnold entitled, "The Soul naturally Immortal" in the same number of the "Standard." There is no necessity for meeting the first part of his argument (which is philosophical, so-called), since he leaves the whole question to be submitted to the test of the Scripture. It may be well, however, to mention the names of some of the masters of human thought who failed to believe in such a thing as an immortal soul. Here they are, a goodly list:

Martin Luther, John Milton, Tyndale, Nemesius, Lactantius, Ireneus, Justin Martyr, Theophilus of Antioch, the Pastor of Hermas, Ignatius, Polycarp, Clement of Rome, Barnabas, and the apostles of our Lord.

The Doctor quotes from the Wisdom of Solomon, "God created man to be immortal and made him to be an image of his own eternity."

True, he was created to be immortal; that is, capable of receiving immortality; but it is not written that he was immortal at his creation. There is, undoubtedly, a difference between being created for a certain quality and being created with that quality in possession. Really it is easy to apprehend this.

In his first appeal to the Scriptures the Dr. goes astray. How a D. D. who is supposed to be posted in Hebrew (I mean the Hebrew Bible), can make such a statement as the following, I am at a loss to determine. He quotes Genesis ii. 7, and adds:

As if on purpose to intimate to us that this breath of life, the direct inspiration of the Eternal, partook of the immortality of its divine original, the Spirit prompted the sacred penman to employ a word, which is never applied to the breath of the brutes that perish, but only to rational an immortal beings; to God, to angels, and to men.

He refers here to the Hebrew word neshamah. Now, when I open my Hebrew Bible to the 22d verse of seventh chapter of Genesis, I find that the compound word neshamah-ruach is used in application to the destruction of "all flesh that moved upon the earth, of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creeps upon the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of a spirit of life (neshama-ruach), of all that was on the dry land died."

This translation is that of Dr. Conant, who adds, in a foot note to verse 22, "A spirit of life. The word rendered spirit is literally breath (like our word spirit), and with or without the word life (ch. vi. 17), means breath of life, the vital breath, on which life is made dependent. Hence it comes to mean, as here, the principle of life, the vital spirit, whether in man or other animals. Compare Eccl. iii. 19, 21."

It will be noticed here that Dr. Conant, in corroboration of his note refers to Dr. Arnold's second reference to the Scriptures, thus indicating that his idea of the spirit is, that it is common to all, man and beasts, as is also shown by his foot note to Gen. ii. 7, where he remarks in reference to Isaiah ii. 22, "Cease ye from man in whose nostrils is breath"—"only breath, so frail a principle of life, and so easily extinguished!" In reference to a living soul, Dr. C. has—"The Hebrew word (nephesh) here rendered soul includes all beings that have animal life; and hence it is applied to animals of the sea and land in ch. i. 20, 21, 24, 30." This translation of the word does not appear in these verses, either in the Bible Union version by Dr. C., or in King James' version; but there it is in the original, nevertheless, and cannot be avoided, even if theology has adulterated the meaning of the old word soul (as Dr. C. himself admits has been done), and made it to mean other than it did in old times. In view of this, therefore, there is no distinction between the "spirit of man" and the "spirit of the beast," (Eccl. iii. 19, 20, 21), "for that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, yea, they have all one breath (spirit); so that a man has no pre-eminence above a beast." "Who knoweth (therefore) a difference between the spirit of man that it goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that it goeth downward?"

Dr. Arnold would have us believe that man at his creation had a soul added to his bodily organization. The Scripture does not warrant this. It says plainly that man became a living soul (or as literally translated a breath breathing). It indicates a change in the organization, it does not indicate an addition thereto.

As to the Lord Jesus' taking part with the Pharisees against the Sadducees concerning a doctrine of the immortality of the soul, it is enough to know that any person of average intelligence cannot help but notice, in reading the twentieth chapter of Luke, that such a doctrine was not in debate. It was with them a question of resurrection of dead ones; and the Lord showed plainly that their views on the subject were erroneous. There is a typographical error in the Dr.'s reference to Luke. It should be Luke xx. 27, 38, instead of Luke xv. 27, 38. He refers here, particularly, to verse 38—"For all live unto him"—as though showing that those spoken of were alive; but Paul in the Epistle to the Romans makes this passage clear in writing—"God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." There is that in the reply of the Lord to the Sadducees that is full of meaning. He indicates plainly two classes of persons; those who are accounted worthy to attain unto the resurrection from the dead, and those who are not worthy; those who can die no more (being therefore immortal), children of the resurrection, and those who are not children of the resurrection. If the resurrection, as Jesus has said, confers immortality and equality with the angels upon its subjects, does it not follow that if wicked ones are raised these same qualities will inhere to them? But the Bible does not raise them. As David says, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them." "The grave is their dwelling place through all generations." "Man, that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish."

This brings me to another point in the Dr.'s appeal to the Scripture. He admits that beasts perish; that is, that there is nothing for them beyond death; but he will not admit that the same word perish applied to men means the same thing. He instances the perishing of the old world as an argument against annihilation. The old world was annihilated. Everything in Scripture and in science goes to prove it. Peter does not write that the earth, the ground, was destroyed, but the cosmos, the order, arrangement. Who will say that that order exists even in the merest fragment? As to the perishing of the heavens utterly, to make way for new heavens, we have the record that the heavens being on fire will be dissolved; that is, there will be a dissolution of our atmosphere that it may be newly created, fitted for the use of the children of the resurrection, who shall possess a never-ending life, priests after the order of Melchisedec. The heavens that we now breathe are not those of Adam. There was then no rain on all the face of the earth. consider the change that must necessarily have been made in the atmosphere in order that the bow should be set in the cloud and that rain should fall on all the face of the earth. Reflect, too, upon the results of this change in the heavens and the earth as affecting the human race, making it necessary that God should change their diet from vegetable to a mixture of vegetable and animal food. See God's charges concerning food to Adam and to Noah. Job xxi. 20 is quoted in order to prove that the wicked shall be witnesses of their own destruction. A careful reading of the verse and the one which precedes it will show that God is the witness, and not the wicked.

The spirits of just men made perfect inhabit, we are told by the Dr., the heavenly Jerusalem.—Heb. xii. 23. There is nothing in the reference to indicate that they inhabit any such place. We may with as much truth say that we already inhabit it; for the 22d verse reads, "but ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem." Do we inhabit this city? If not, why shall we say that the spirits of just men made perfect inhabit it? Besides, these just men are not yet made perfect. Jesus must first come and clothe them with their house from heaven, which he went to prepare for them and for us; that new and glorious body of the resurrection. David was a just man, but is not yet made perfect, for we have the testimony of Peter in Acts ii. 34, that David did not ascend to heaven, showing by his argument that in order to reach that place, it is necessary to be raised from the dead as was the Son of God.

As to the conception of annihilation being foreign to all Jewish thought, I quote David's curses on the wicked: Psa. lviii., "Like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun." Job iii. 16, "As a hidden and untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light." Prov. x. 25, "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more." Surely no stronger images of non-existence can be given than these; and they are all Jewish. How then can the Dr. say that annihilation is an idea "foreign to all Jewish thoughts, whether inspired or uninspired," when we have it here in the inspired word?

In conclusion, I think from what I have cited, that I may take upon me to say, that "the soul of man is not of such a nature that it will as a matter of course live on forever." I may also add the words of Paul to the Corinthians, "If dead men are not raised, not even Christ has been raised . . . then also those having fallen asleep in Christ perished." (Griesbach). Imagine the result if Christ had remained in the tomb of Joseph and had seen corruption. What hope then for man above that of a beast?

Space will not admit that I write more here on this subject. It is one that every intelligent person should examine for themselves, accepting no man's statement; calling no man master; but in simple faith in the truth and wisdom of God searching His word which he has given us, being prepared to receive whatever truth he may present therein to our minds, no matter how much it may conflict with the ideas or opinions of ourselves or of great men so-called. Let God be true, though every man be made thereby to be a liar.

Yours, in hope of the resurrection,
Samuel H. Wheeler.

San Francisco, Cal., June 5, 1870.

Life Only in Christ: England.

The following communication is from Br. Thomas Johnson, Newark, N. J. He visited his native country, England, two years since, and took out a quantity of our works on the Life theme. He now writes us as follows:

Newark, N. J., June 26, 1870.

Br. Storrs: In my last communication I informed you that the seeds of truth (in the shape of some of your tracts), which I scattered two years ago in England, were beginning to spring up, and I am now happy to inform you there is a good prospect of abundant fruitage. I promised you that if any thing interesting to you or the readers of the Herald of Life should eventuate therefrom, that I would duly inform you of the same. I have now the pleasure to remit to you transcripts of correspondence from my old friend and schoolmate, Rowland Kelvey, of Sheffield, England, who has fully received the evidences of the Life views, and, after duly weighing them, and comparing them with the Scriptures, to "see whether these things were so," has fully committed himself to their advocacy, and to-day rejoices in the simplicity and fulness of the Gospel of the Kingdom, and in the expectation of eternal life, "when Christ who is our life shall appear." Under date of March 8 he writes:

"Since I last wrote you my mind has been constantly exercised with the books you so kindly gave me, and my mind is fully made up, that the doctrines they teach are in accordance with the Scriptures of truth. The prejudices of early teaching have been somewhat difficult to erase, but I have made up my mind to follow the Scripture teachings, God helping me, wherever they may lead me. I had abandoned the eternal punishment doctrine ten years ago, believing it to be unscriptural; but then I went to the other extreme of universal restoration, believing at the same time that man was dual—composed of two distinct natures, a mortal body and an immortal soul; and taking such passages as these, 'If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me.' 'For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.' 'And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son himself be subject unto him that puts all things under him, that God may be all in all.' And thus I thought, that as Christ was lifted up, he would ultimately, according to his word, draw all men unto himself; and as all die in Adam, it required the same all to be made alive again—and that he would reign until he had subdued all unto himself, and ultimately God would be all in all. But, my dear Tom, when I read those blessed works by Br. Storrs (which I prize next my Bible), 'Life only in Christ,' 'Life from the Dead, and Man's Destiny,' what a fresh light my poor mind received! When I saw that man was mortal, and was not made with an immortal soul, and that immortality was attainable as a gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and that all may have it that will, my soul does rejoice that those blessed truths have been searched out of the Scriptures in opposition to the Pagan views of eternal torment that we have constantly preached unto us.

"I have been delighted in the perusal of the Herald of Life, and have read them over and over again. I am sorry the parcel of pamphlets have not come to hand. How it is I cannot tell. In respect to the books you left me, they are numbered in the Herald of Life as follows: 1, 2, 6, 11, 13, 15, and several slips each of 'Can You Believe?' and questions on immortality."

In a letter dated June 5, and just received, he further writes:

"I should like to hear more of your personal experience; you know, my dear Tom, if we have more light, we ought to have more love and gratitude to our dear Lord for the light he has given us. I hope we shall always keep our dear Saviour's words in remembrance, 'If ye love me keep my commandments: by this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one toward another;' for the more love we have, the more like our dear Lord we become. I am sure the great change in our views ought to have a corresponding effect on our love to God. I can say, it has had this effect on me. I never saw the Scriptures in the light I now see them; I never saw the love and mercy of God as I now see it. My mind always revolted at endless misery. I could never see what it was to accomplish; for I always thought correction was for our good, and that God had a wise end in view in our trials and troubles; and is it not so? Was it not so with the Psalmist, who said, 'Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now keep I thy laws?'

"I must now tell you in a few words my own experience. I feel that I love Jesus; he is the fairest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. I never saw his loveliness as I do now. I think it is perfectly right that the wages of sin should be death; but Oh the gift of God which is eternal life through Jesus Christ is my portion. Is it yours, my dear Tom? The Spirit itself beareth witness with my spirit that I am his and he is mine; though poor, weak and worthless, I have a rich, Almighty friend; one who knoweth the weakness and frailty of human nature. He remembers that we are but dust, but hath promised if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him. Then let us be up and doing, and as far as we can proclaim the blessed truth of the Bible, 'Life only in Christ;' and when He who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory, for if we have fallen asleep before he comes, the sleep of death shall no longer hold us; for we shall rise in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.

"I have received the Herald of Life up to the 27th of April. I hope to get them regular, for there is nothing, apart from the Scriptures, that I so much delight in; and though I could like to save them, they contain so much precious matter, that I keep lending them about; so that you see the truth gets spread. As for those other books you gave me, I have not got them back yet, nor have I received those pamphlets you mailed me. I have sent you the 'Rainbow' for this year, as fast as it is published. The June number comes with this letter.

"I did not hear Mr. Stainton's lecture on the Devil, nor have I heard of its being in print. I have not believed in a personal devil for some years, now. I believe, as you say, his name is 'Legion.' I think that every man carries his own devil with him. I heard Mr. Stainton last night on the words 'To be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord.' Oh how unscriptural his language was. Speaking of the soul as separate and distinct from the body, he said, 'The souls of all men were immortal; the body was only the house or tenement for the soul to live in for a short time, then it took its flight either to eternal bliss or endless misery.' He never quoted one passage of Scripture to prove the immortality of the soul; but he did quote one to show that the wicked at death went to hell; the rich man and Lazarus, 'And in hell he lifted up his eyes being in torment.' I keep talking to the members of our church as opportunity occurs. I hope good will come out of it."

In closing this communication I will say that Br. Kelvey has for many years been a member of Rev. Mr. Stainton's church, and has many warm friends in the congregation, which I believe is an independent Methodist.

In future communications I may have reason to refer to this Mr. Stainton, for I am in expectation of a letter from him through the influence of my beloved sister, who is terribly afraid that the new views I have adopted are subversive of the right ways of the Lord, and she has obtained a promise from her pastor that he will write me about those pamphlets of yours, which have been put into his hands. I have been waiting many months for his promised letter, and am so far disappointed. My last letter to my sister, of last week, I hope will have the desired effect of stirring him up to an immediate fulfilment of his promise.

I will write you again next week (D. V.,) in which I may show you that your pamphlets meet with much opposition from some of my dear relatives, who are wonderfully afraid that I am leaving the good old paths in which they fancy they are walking, for some new and untried ones to them entirely unknown, but which I trust is the straight and narrow way that leadeth unto eternal life. Yours, in hope,

Thomas Johnson.

Roman Catholicism.

It seems, not long since, a paper was started in our vicinity, called the "Brooklyn Register," by a talented young clergyman of the Catholic church, by the name of "E. G. Fitzpatrick." It gave promise of being a tolerant and free medium, and spoke out plainly the views of its editor, which seem to have been favorably received by many in that church in various parts of this country. After living from April 30 to June 18 it came to its end by authority or by the imposition of the "Vicar General Turner," for the publication of the following article, which Mr. Fitzpatrick was required to recant; but he declined to do so, and his paper ceased to live.

We give the article which brought about this result, that our readers may see there are signs that some will yet "come out of Babylon;" or that there are a few in that church who see and feel its abominations:

COLLECTIONS FOR THE POPE.

On last Sunday there were collections taken up in all the Catholic churches for the benefit of the Roman Pontiff, and we might safely venture to say that the amount realized in the two dioceses of New York and Brooklyn is more than would be required to erect a handsome and spacious temple of worship, in which the neglected poor in a densely populated district of either city might be assembled to have the gospel preached to them, and to receive the consolations of their almost abandoned religion. As the head of the Catholic church, the Roman Pontiff has a claim upon our sympathy in all his necessities, and in our filial devotion to him, personally and officially, we would willingly deprive ourselves of any thing we have in order to spare him the worriment that is consequent on an exhausted treasury; but we do not think that it is just the thing to tax us in our property for the maintenance of a temporal and political system in Rome with which the Catholics of these United States have nothing at all to do. To the successor of St. Peter and to the Head of the Catholic church we will give generously and willingly as long as we have any thing to give, but to the King of the Papal States we owe neither allegiance nor one dollar.

Reared, as we have been, under the influence of Republican institutions, all our sympathies are republican and for free governments, and our regard for the Roman Pontiff in his regal and monarchical character is precisely the same as it is for the monarch of France or Austria, and we feel ourselves no more obliged to maintain monarchy in Rome than we do to maintain the despotism of the Czar in Poland. If the Pope deems it expedient to enrol under his regal flag mercenaries from Switzerland, France, and Belgium for the purpose of holding Rome against the Romans, we know of nothing in our religion that authorizes him to levy on us to pay his motly legions. In a few weeks he will be the recipient of some hundreds of thousands of dollars, the offering of the mistaken zeal and generosity of his children on this side of the Atlantic; and while we shall receive in return for it his paternal benediction, many of his brave and enlightened subjects will kindly extend their forgiveness to us on the ground that we know not what we do.

We feel pretty sure that every one who handed in his offering on last Sunday, did so with the belief that it was for the purpose of maintaining our Holy Father in his ecclesiastical dignity; the idea of supporting a band of mercenaries never entered into the heads of any of them. But the maintenance of the Roman Pontiff in his ecclesiastical dignity is not dependent on the charity of Catholics in America; the revenue from the church property in Rome and its vicinity is more than sufficient to support the local churches and the Pope in a style compatible with his position as Supreme Pontiff. It may, indeed, be a sense of momentary gratification to our bishops in Rome to carry a well-filled purse up the Scala Regia, and to pour into the State Treasury in the Vatican the hard-earned offerings of poor Catholics in their missionary dioceses, but in more than one instance that momentary pleasure will be marred by the remembrance of their destitute people at home, who have no church of their own, and who die by thousands in ignorance and without the comforts of religion. It is no gain to the Catholic church to maintain an army in Rome while her members are daily falling away in missionary countries for the want of churches, in which the sublime truths of revelation might be made known to them. If the collections that were taken up on last Sunday were used for the purpose of erecting churches and chapels where they are most needed, in the over-populated districts of our large cities, or in those country villages where the cross has not yet appeared, how many thousands of noble souls would be rescued from a course of crime to become worthy members of society, and from ignorance and irreligion to be deserving members of the church! But as it is, the money will go to Rome; the mercenary legions will be engaged for another year, and as each pay-day comes around, they will remember us kindly over a basket-bottle of Orvieto, and they will address us in the words of Rip Van Winkle: "Your very good health, and your family; may they live long and prosper."

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York: for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

A Ghost Story.

BY MRS. ELIZA A. HARRIMAN.

About a century ago, in that region of country noted for the tragedy of the Salem witchcraft, ghosts, like witches, were common stock, not hidden in some indefinable nook under the leaves of a table, knocking out answers to impertinent questioners, but honest, unflinching, puritanic ghosts, who were not ashamed to let their real personality be known, gliding, it is true, noiselessly, but wearing ever the pure, emblematic robe of white, as if to signal their presence out upon the darkness.

"Once upon a time," old Mr. Smithers became weary of the world, and laid him down and died, and, as all supposed, had found quiet and rest in the grave, but ere long it began to be whispered mysteriously around that the old man was astir, and every night might be seen in unsoiled shroud, lying at full length, outside his narrow bed of clay.

Common as these unearthly visitants were said to have been, the people of those crude times seldom wished to meet a real ghost, so the doors were shut a little earlier than usual, the Bible kept in plainer view upon the stand, and the morning and evening devotions lost none of their fervency.

The terrified, tearful children clung close to each other, snatching, it may be, a hasty glance at the haunted tomb, as they flew by, to and from the school, full of fear, yet scarcely expecting to see the ghost in broad daylight.

But no vague dread of peering, gibbering ghost could keep the young, enamored Amos long from his lady-love; so, filled with honied thoughts, and gentle, cooing dreams, when morning hours grew small, out all alone amid the darkness, he found himself plump up beside the graveyard, and there, in full view, on the haunted tomb, stretched at full length, beneath the glimmering stars, he plainly saw the silent, shrouded ghost. At once his gentle visions fled, his teeth chattered just a little, his heart beat a little faster, but he did not run, nor shriek, nor faint, but scaling, silently, the intervening fence, he walked in to reconnoitre.

Now and then a restless lodger, in the luxuriant drapery of the weeping willows, nestled uneasily in its perch, or half waked, dreamy, hidden things, cuddled closer down among the dew-bedecked grasses. Out from the shadowy recesses of the prim, sentinel-like fir tree, that stood beside the sorrow-draped gateway, a great goggle-eyed, ruffle-trimmed, impertinent owl, cried saucily after him, in the hoot language, "Who, who are you?"

The stark, gray gravestones, grim and spectre-like, seemed, as he walked, nodding and wagging strange, dwarf-like, shapeless heads at him; but there, in its ghastly, deathish stillness, lay the ghost, making no sign to welcome, and offering no repulse, until he stood within a few feet of the headstone, then there was a perceptible rustling of garments, a hustling of many tiny feet, and a defiant

"quit, quit, quit!" and the mystery was solved.

A venerable, old, white turkey, with a numerous brood of well-grown, white-robed nestlings, had taken nightly quarters on the fresh-turned sod of old Mr. Smithers' grave, and that was how my grandfather hunted a ghost.—The Little Corporal.

THE WICKED DEAD: PROF. HUDSON'S VIEWS.

BY MARK E. GREEN.

THE question is often asked, What was the belief of Prof. C. F. Hudson on the resurrection of the wicked dead? In examining his work, "The Doctrine of a Future Punishment," he makes some remarks which entirely conflict with the opinions of those who claim that God is obliged to raise the wicked, that justice may be meted out to them for their wickedness. On page 399 he says:

> We have endeavored at two points to relieve the doctrine of the resurrection of the unjust. It may here be relieved of another objection, viz: that God is not bound to punish the wicked in precise measure of their misdeeds, and their resurrection would seem designed only for the purpose of such retribution.

Br. Hudson fully indorses the love of God toward poor dying man; and again he says:

> God is not bound to resent the puny shaking of the sinner's fist, or the rude swagger of his tongue, but might forget him into eternal silence; so in fact he does not raise him up from death for the sake of punishing him. God never lifts a finger for the recovery of a right of his justice, or to save that attribute from fraud. He is not so poor that he should suffer for the lack of a deserved pang anywhere in his universe.

There was never a truer sentiment expressed than this. God does not "afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men," but only for their good or the good of others. He is not vindictive; but like Jesus in his dying moments, who said in reference to his enemies, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." The sentiments here set forth by our brother would certainly lead one to suppose that there could be no object for God to raise the wicked dead to punish them. I would ask, then, for what purpose will they be raised? and by what law, or by what principle does he get them up? Our brother has not left us in the dark on this point. On page 263, under the head of "The Resurrection of the Unjust," he says:

> To this endeavor after a philosophy of the resurrection, we may add a thought respecting that of the unjust. It is hard to believe that they are raised up by a miracle that ends in their destruction, or that accomplishes nothing but a judgment which, in this view, must appear simply vindictive. If they have no immortality why are their slumbers disturbed? But if their resurrection is connected with the redemption by a law that finds illustration in analogous facts, this difficulty may be removed. Damaged seeds that are sown often exhaust their vitality and perish in germination. And we have noted the fact that of insects which pass through the chrysalis state to that of the psyche or butterfly, many from injuries suffered in their original form utterly perish in the transition. Now the glad tidings of the redemption quickening and invigorating the soul with new life, may so far repair the injury done it in the fall that even the unbelieving, who derive many benefits therefrom in this life, may not altogether perish in the bodily death.

He closes his remarks by saying:

> And for judgment it is as if the unjust, hearing the voice of God in the last call to life, should be putting on a glorious incorruption, and should perish in the act.

We might ask as by the way of information, "What next?" or what will be the next effort to get up the wicked? According to our brother's reasoning, the wicked that have heard the glad tidings (for none other can be included), have been so invigorated or vitalized in this life by hearing the gospel, that they are in the same condition of a child that is still-born, or dies in the act of being born; and hence they never see life; or in other words, they come forth unto the resurrection of condemnation, but never attain it, because the life they received by hearing the glad tidings was not enough to vitalize them; or, to use his own words, they "exhaust their vitality and perish in germination." The ingenousness which is here displayed by our brother to revive the wicked, certainly is a step farther in that line than has ever been set forth before by any one who did not believe in the immortality of the soul. Our brother does not, in this analogy, set forth his views on this subject. He merely suggests the thought, "But if their resurrection is connected with the redemption," etc. We might say, "But if their resurrection is not connected with redemption, it would 'appear simply vindictive' to raise them up or disturb their slumbers." He does not in his writings set forth his full convictions on this point, but these few extracts would lead us to believe that unless the wicked have immortality connected with them in this life, God will not disturb their slumber, for he will not raise them up to punish them, for that would be beneath him to notice or "resent the puny shaking of the sinner's fist, or the rude swagger of his tongue, but forget him in eternal silence; so in fact he does not raise him up from death for the sake of punishing him."

I fully indorse the sentiment that God has no need of raising up the wicked to punish them. They are nothing but dust, permitted to live to have an opportunity to choose a better life, which if they do not, like the Israelites in the wilderness that were bitten by the serpents, if they did not look upon the brazen serpent they died, and that was the end of them; in like manner was Christ lifted up, that all that look upon him in faith will be healed, and if they do not they perish. Amen.

NEW YORK, July, 1870.

IF parents were really faithful to their children there would be fewer unconverted adults.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 13, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

PLEDGES FOR HERALD OF LIFE.

FOR the most part, the pledges made at the last anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union" have been redeemed. A few, however, yet remain uncancelled. If possible, the "UNION" will be glad to find that none remain so till the anniversary, now nigh at hand.

If our paper is to be continued, the effort to raise funds therefor must not be less the year to come than heretofore. The friends will judge if the paper is worthy of continued patronage, and come to our annual meeting prepared to say what they will do for this object. Those who cannot be present will confer a favor to let the "UNION" know as soon as possible what they will do toward sustaining the HERALD OF LIFE another year.

The Tract cause must not be forgotten. That instrumentality has been an effectual help the year past, and many thousands of tracts have gone forth preaching the Gospel of LIFE.

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

THE anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 26, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the HERALD OF LIFE and the TRACT cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

"CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS."

WILL our friends look at our list of these as they stand in our "CATALOGUE?" It will be seen they now number twenty. Can we spend a few hundred dollars better, just now, than to send them forth on their mission of love to dying men?

GOOD RULES OF INTERPRETATION.

IN the "Sunday Magazine," for July, is an article on "Little Children God's Stronghold for Troubled Men," which is very interesting; but what we wish especially to call attention to is, the author's—"Rev. Samuel Cox"—presentation of two important rules of interpreting Scripture. Speaking of what he calls "The plainest laws of interpretation," he says:

"All sound commentators admit that, when any words of Scripture can be taken literally, they ought to be taken literally; that when, by taking them as they stand, we can get good sense and sound morality out of them, we ought to take them as they stand, and not betake ourselves to spiritual, mystical, or figurative methods of handling them."

That we call a sound rule. Again he says, "another law of interpretation," which he calls "The second law," is:

"That we ought to interpret Scripture by Scripture, to read any one passage by the light which other passages shed upon it—a law so obviously good and wise that it needs no vindication."

These two laws, we trust, we are willing to have applied to all our constructions of Scripture language; and by them we judge of the interpretations of others; bearing in mind that we are never to lose sight of the known perfections of God in any conclusion we may arrive at.

The grand attribute of God is Love; and all his other attributes harmonize with this; but this stands out in the foreground in all his dealings with men: "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. And, "We love God because He first loved us."—1 John iv. 19. Once more: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall He not with him also freely give us all things?"—Rom. viii. 32.

Here are facts that must have a controlling influence in connection with the "two laws," mentioned above, in all our investigations of Scripture teachings.

Take the two laws named and apply them to the words life and death, as used in the Bible in relation to the reward of the righteous and the punishment of the wicked, and what other rational conclusion can be arrived at, than that both are to be understood literally? The one, meaning a literal living existence: the other, a literal extinction of living existence. We avow our full belief, that no other construction can be put upon the language according to the "two laws" above laid down by "all sound commentators." Until some plain testimony of Bible language can be produced to prove man has an entity, called the soul, and that such soul is inherently, or by Divine appointment, deathless, we are compelled by all laws of sound interpretation of the Bible to affirm that, the terms life and death, when spoken of as the final state of men, are to be understood literally, and in no other sense. To apply them as it used to denote states of happiness and misery is to pervert the truth of God; and the authors of such perversion are justly charged with having "changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshipped and served the creature [by accepting human traditions] more than the CREATOR."—Rom. i. 25. They may indeed have done this "ignorantly, in unbelief." We trust such will be found to be the fact with many: but how long shall this ignorance prove an excuse, now that God is causing light to go forth on the subject? Let all beware of shutting their eyes against the light.

PROF. HUDSON'S POSITION.

BR. GREEN has stated some of C. F. Hudson's views, as our readers see; but it may be well at this time to notice still further some of his positions.

He held the soul to be a distinct entity from the body, and that it did not die with the body, but remains, like the main-spring of a watch when taken out of its place. An article from him appeared in the "World's Crisis" some ten years since, in which he contended against the views held by that paper, that the wicked dead will be made alive again, and yet do not believe the soul to be a distinct entity, surviving in death. Against that position Prof. Hudson dealt some effectual blows. He sums up thus:

> My view is simply this—that there are two instalments of death. The death of the body kills it. It is a real, literal, killing death. As the effect of it, the body becomes a corpse at once, and ere long ceases to be even that. This death also deprives the soul of its action, as the main-spring is useless without the watch. This death is also, as a first instalment, the picture of all death, showing that the second death will destroy the soul, as this destroys the body.
>
> But if the first death destroys the body and not the soul, it is easy to see how there may be a resurrection before the second death, but not after it. While a part of the being remains, there may be life again. But when the entire being is destroyed—soul and body—to live again is impossible. My friends, who have feared that death, as I define it, involves immortality, must not wonder now when I tell them that as I understand death, in its two instalments, it seems to me that a resurrection after the second death is beyond the power of God himself. For such a resurrection would be a re-creation; which is impossible, since what is newly created is different from that which before existed.
>
> Hence I think that in my view of death, the second death kills finally and forever, as a logical result of my definition. Whereas I see in the view of my friends no logical security against immortality after the second death. And I have shown that some who held their view of the nature of the first death, as Tatian and Thompkinson, actually held eternal torment nevertheless.

Thus does Prof. Hudson show how perfectly absurd—not to say "impossible"—is a resurrection into life of a dead man who has no surviving identity, or life element in his nature. We will now show wherein we differ from him.

We know of no such Scripture teaching, "the wages of sin is death" in "two instalments:" but if there was, and the soul is a distinct entity, and not killed by the "first instalment," which only kills the body, then the "second instalment" can have no claim on the body; hence, though "there may be a resurrection," on his view, yet it would appear to be an act of injustice to the bodies of the wicked; for those bodies had paid their part of the debt, viz: "the first instalment;" so that the exaction of it from the body twice, is apparently a great wrong; and especially, as this "re-creation" body, possibly, is not the same body that sinned and paid the first instalment. Justice would seem to have no further claim on the body; its claim is for the "second instalment," and that must be on the soul, which escaped paying any part of the first; for it was not killed by that; it only "deprived the soul of its action." The second instalment, then, should and must be met by the soul alone, if justice's ways are equal. "The first destroys the body and not the soul," saith Prof. Hudson. Then all the "second death" can righteously claim is, that the soul shall die, having escaped when the body paid its part of "the wages of sin." Then a resurrection of the body into life to help the soul pay its instalment, if not unjust, is useless; for the object is to kill the soul; and surely that could be done without making the body alive, or rather giving the soul a "re-created" body—a new body to die in.

But there is another point in the remarks of Prof. H. to which we call attention. He says, "While a part of the being remains, there may be life again. But when the entire being is destroyed—soul and body—to live again is impossible."

We remark, when "the first instalment" was paid by the body, the soul either died, or it did not. If it did not die, then it cannot have "life again;" for, it was never dead.

"The second death will destroy the soul, as this" [the death of the body] "destroys the body," saith our brother. He had said, "The death of the body kills it: it is a real, literal, killing death." Now then, if the soul did not die when the body did, its final death is not its second dying: therefore, "the second death" is not dying twice, or it does not relate to the soul's dying; for that, according to Br. H., dies only once; so, we come up on this fact, "The second death" is a phrase which denotes a death from which there is no recovery—no revival into life again; and has no such sense in Scripture as that of dying twice; and hence the phrase can never be claimed in proof that the wicked dead will live again: they die in their sins—soul and body; or all the life they have perishes by the judgment of God, and "they shall never see light"—they are "like the beasts that perish."—See Psa. xlix. throughout. They die a death from which there is no recovery, and hence called the second death.

Prof. Hudson, in his work, "Debt and Grace," page 178, gives various examples of the use of the phrase "second death," among early Jewish writers. One of those writers says, "We learn from this place (Numb. xiv. 37), that they died the second death." Let us see how that "place" reads; it is as follows: "Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord."

Does this text sustain the notion that these men died a second time, and after a resurrection from death by the plague, by which they "fell in the wilderness?" Surely a mind perfectly open to conviction must see, the phrase "second death," used by this Jewish writer, means no such thing as twice dying: it is just the reverse, indicating that to die in one's sins is to die the second death, because, "they shall not live in the world to come"—"they shall die the second death so as not to enter into the world to come," as other Jewish writers express it. The writer saith of those wicked men who brought up the evil report of the land, "They died the second death;" not, they shall die it, or they will die it; but "they died" it. The event was past, whatever the phrase imports, and therefore cannot embrace life from the dead to die a second time.

In a note on page 178, Prof. Hudson quotes from Julius Africanus (A. D. 221), that "ADAM being one hundred and thirty years old begat Seth: and living thereafter eight hundred years he died, to wit, the second death." Did Adam have a resurrection to die the second death? Or, is it not evident this writer counted Adam's death "the second death," because there was no ground to hope he ever could have a resurrection into life: his dispensation ended without having ever made any provision for his personal recovery; and his doom to death was final. Such seems to be the fact: his death was penal, or the punishment justly due him for his sin.

Hence it is manifest, the "early Jewish" writers understood by the second death, a death which excluded a revival into life by a resurrection—"they understood by this death exclusion from life." Dr. ADAM CLARKE states in his notes on John vi., it was the opinion of the Jews, their fathers who died in the wilderness never would have a resurrection: they were dead past a revival. The Doctor did not agree with them in opinion, but that does not alter the fact that such was the Jewish belief.

This truth stands out distinctly, in view of all the facts, that the second death is not dying twice, but is so dying as to have no revival from death. No man "suffers" a penal "death for Adam's sin," though such a sentiment has long been maintained. God "subjected" Adam's posterity to death, not as a penalty to them, but as a part of their discipline in their probationary condition, with the promise of resurrection from it, to another and better life, if they improved their day of trial; otherwise their death was to become penal to themselves; not by Adam's sin, but by their own; so they are "twice dead," or have died the second death, by dying in their own sins; and hence death holds them eternally in his power: there is no revival of them into life at the day of resurrection. Not one text from Genesis to Revelation affirms that an unpardoned sinner shall ever live again from the dead. Of this fact we are just as thoroughly convinced as that the phrase "immortal soul" is never found in the Bible. This truth we shall maintain in our writings, and in preaching, go where we may: nor do we expect to abandon it, unless we abandon the whole theory of "Life only through Christ."

The members of Christ's body have a life union with him and in him. They have the Holy Spirit of God dwelling in them; by which they have become "partakers of the divine nature:" a new creature, in embryo, is implanted in them, which forms the basis of the new creation from death; and though their animal life is extinct by dying, their divine life remains untouched by death's power—they "sleep," but it is "in Jesus," to wake at his call. That new life is the "main-spring:" it never dies, though for a season it "is hid with Christ, in God," but will in due time manifest itself.

Let the wicked, and heartless professors, cry out, if they will—"Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." If they are willing to die like brutes, "let them take their course, and choose the road to death." "If there is no resurrection" that can be obtained, then they do well to "live like brutes." But if we may live again, and live eternally, by Him who is "the resurrection and the life," is there any occasion for any man's saying—unless he is a brute—that we teach or countenance the doctrine of the Epicurean? No; the imputation is a slander. "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." That is our cry, as it was the cry of the Apostle. He that will not do it, "shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36.

WILL THE WICKED DEAD BE REVIVED?

IT is urged by the affirmative of this question that Matt. x. 28, and Luke xii. 5, together with the idea that the wicked are to be "cast into a furnace of fire," is proof that the dead wicked will live again. In response, we say:

Usually nothing was cast into the literal gehenna that had life. But whatever was the state it was in at the time, it was so dissolved that its reconstruction was impossible; hence to cast into gehenna became a figure of speech to denote destruction without recovery. Jesus taught his "friends" not to fear men who might deprive them of the present life but could not prevent their living again—men could not cast them into gehenna; or prevent their reorganization; but God could, for he only had that power: therefore, fear him and not men. The fear commanded was to be exercised now, not after death: and the fear was, that God would so fix the seal of death upon them that they would not live again—i. e., seal their disorganization so that a future life would be impossible. Men could not do this, but God could; therefore, "my friends," fear not men, but God. These solemn warnings were addressed to Christ's "friends," and to them alone; see Luke xii. 4; and that to preserve them from apostatizing under their persecutions from men. The fear of not attaining to the resurrection life that Christ promised to give his followers "at the last day," is the fear inculcated in Matt. x. 28 and Luke xii. 5. Of this fact we have no doubt: and it relates not to a fear to be realized after death, but in the present time and life.

That the living wicked, who remain unto the coming of the Lord, will be cast into a furnace or lake of fire, we do not question, any more than we question the fact that the living wicked were submerged in a lake or flood of water in Noah's day. That was "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men;" but none were the actual partakers of that lake of water but the then living wicked, whom Peter calls "the world of the ungodly;" and he says, "The world that then was perished;" and he adds, "The heavens and the earth which are now, by" [or according to] "the same word" [or testimony of God] "are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of" [these] "ungodly men," of whom he had spoken in the previous verses, viz: the "scoffers" of "the last days," who scoffingly inquired, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and who, despising the idea of Christ's return from heaven would, at that time, be "walking after their own lust." These will meet with an awful perdition or destruction by the fire of that day, as the sinners of the old world did by water in the days of Noah.

Such we regard as the true teaching of Peter, and he never utters one word in all he saith, of the ungodly who are dead being made alive to come under the fire of that day; but he does state that God "is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish;" and that "he knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation," or trial, as Noah, Lot, and others were, while the wicked should not be suffered to escape, as "they escaped not" who mocked in Noah's and Lot's days; for while God delivers his faithful people, his knowledge is fully equal to his power to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished; and the day of judgment spoken of is that judgment in which God executes whatever he has threatened to those living in any age, or under any particular dispensation. This punishment, Peter saith, came on the old world of the ungodly and on Sodom; and that it will come especially on those worst of all sinners—the scoffers of the last days. They may think to escape, but God by the judgments on Sodom and the old world has shown that he knows how to reserve them to the day of their judgment to be punished. They may scoff when the "promise of his coming" is declared, but they shall know, as certainly as the ungodly world of old were made to know, that "God is not mocked," though he "is long-suffering;" for "the day will come as a thief in the night, in the which" these ungodly scoffers will find God's word is no more to be trifled with now than in the days of Noah or Lot. But whom does all this concern? We answer, in our opinion, and from the best judgment we can form from the word of truth, it concerns the ungodly of "the last days," who are alive at the time; and has nothing to do with the ungodly dead, except as it seals their doom to eternal night and death.

To remove our doubts of the revival into life of the wicked dead, we must see argument more potent than any we have yet seen. In other words, the evidence must be more clear to our understanding before we can believe the coming of Jesus Christ into this world was to bring the greatest curse upon a large portion of Adam's posterity that it is possible to conceive, short of eternal sin and suffering. And it may well be a matter of doubt, if those who hold that the wicked dead are to live again have the truth, if Adam the second did not entail a heavier curse on a very large part of men than Adam the first. But "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." No other life comes by the Son of God. So the word of truth seems to teach us.

A QUESTION.—If the wicked are not to see Christ when he comes the second time, how shall we reconcile the idea with Matt. xxiv. 30? which reads as follows: "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven: then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."

SEVERAL things may be matter of consideration in this text. Such as, "What is the sign of the Son of man? To whom shall it "appear?" Who constitute the "tribes of the earth?" Why do they "mourn?" and Who shall "see the Son of man coming?" We have not time or space to notice all these questions now; but we may say, that the original words, tes gees, "the earth," are often used for "the land;" meaning the land of Canaan; and the use of them here in connection with the term "tribes," is a strong indication that Jesus, on this occasion, used them in relation to that land, and had reference to the prophecy of Zechariah xii., where the Lord said, "They shall look upon me, whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one is in bitterness for his first-born," . . . "and the land shall mourn, every family apart," etc.

Jesus had said, elsewhere, "the world seeth me no more;" but promised his followers they should see him. To the inhabiters of Jerusalem he said, "Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord;" implying such a period would arrive when "the tribes of the land" would yet "mourn" for their rejection of the Messiah, and then "they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory;" not as he had formerly appeared among them, weak and powerless, as they supposed. Now, in power and great glory he manifests himself.

We have long been satisfied that the second advent of Christ is one thing, and the manifestations under that advent are various, and another matter; that is, they do not all occur at one and the same time; but first to the spiritual seed, and afterward to the literal seed of Abraham, who are not cut off in the plagues coming on an ungodly world, who have wilfully rejected Christ, where he has been proclaimed as the Redeemer and coming King. First, He gathers his saints who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. At some period, after that, he manifests himself to the remnant of literal Israel, who "mourn" under the conviction that their nation had rejected the true Messiah and "pierced" him. Then, seeing him, they say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." As to mere worldlings, they "see him no more;" but they are cut off by the judgments of those days.

HAD ADAM THE LIFE OF GOD?

"Adam had the life of God in him. . . . In Eph. iv. 18, Paul speaks of 'having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God,' etc. To be alienated implies a previous interest in a person or thing." . . . "If the unconverted are alienated from the life of God, they once had it—not personally, but in their federal head. The marginal reading of Gen. ii. 7, 'Breath of lives,' indicates a two-fold life, an animal life, the soul, and the zoe, or life of God." . . . "Man was originally deathless, hence immortal."—Josiah Litch.

WE think we understand you. You hold man was immortal because he had "the life of God in him"—that he became "alienated from that life," hence lost his immortality, i. e., he is no longer "deathless," though his Creator made him so! Thus immortality is no absolute security against death.

The text you quote from Eph. iv. 18 and your comments on it seem clearly to stultify yourself. You have to admit these Ephesians never had "the life God personally!" Then they never had immortality personally: and so neither had nor could have immortality till such time as the "life of God" is restored to them; but this "the unconverted" never have; it is the converted only that have the life of God in them. So the sinner has no "immortal soul" now, you being witness. It does not follow because the Ephesians, while unconverted, were "alienated from the life of God," they "once had it." The term "alienated" does not necessarily imply this. The first sense given the word by Webster is "estranged:" which signifies "to keep at a distance," etc. Paul saith, they were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart; not through "their federal head," as you affirm. He tells these Ephesians, when they were in their heathenism, they were "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world," i. e., they "were far off" from "the life of God"—"at a distance" from it, "estranged" from it; but no idea that they ever had it personally or in their federal head.

Your construction of the Hebrew, "Breath of lives," Gen. ii. 7, is totally untenable. The language has no such sense as you give it, and will not admit it. The same Hebrew word—"ha' yim"—is used Gen. vii. 22, and is there applied to "cattle, beasts, fowl, creeping things, and man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life—'ha' yim.'" If Gen. ii. 7 proves what you say, it is equally proved by Gen. vii. 22, that all cattle and creeping things had "a two-fold life"—"the life of God!"

The facts are simply these: all the animal, or brute creation were made and brought into life before man. Man was created last of all creatures that lived by breathing. He was formed of the dust of the ground, and so were all the brute creatures; (see Gen. ii. 19); they lived by "the breath of the spirit of life," (see margin of Gen. vii. 22), and had a priority in that life. When man was formed, he was to be made alive, or made to live. How was it to be done? "The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives;" the breath which was common to all breathing creatures which God had previously made. Instead of the language indicating any different life being imparted from what was given to inferior living creatures, it settles the fact—if the record is to settle it—that man had no other life-element in his creation than what was common to all creatures that lived by breathing.

Your insinuation that zoe means "the life of God," or immortal life, is without foundation. It does not, of itself, express any thing more than simply life; whether short or long must be determined by some connecting term. The following texts will show the absurdity of attempting to prove an eternal life or immortality from this term:

"That he would grant us, that we . . . might serve him . . . in holiness and righteousness . . . all the days of our life"—zoe."—Luke i. 74, 75. "For a man's life—zoe—consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke xii. 15. "Thou in thy lifetime"—zoen—"receivedst thy good things."—Luke xvi. 25. "For his life"—zoe—"is taken from the earth."—Acts viii. 33. "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life"—zoe— . . . "shall be able to separate us from the love of God."—Rom. viii. 38, 39. "For all things are yours, whether . . . life"—zoe—"or death."—1 Cor. iii. 21, 22. "If in this life"—zoe—"only, we have hope in Christ," etc.—1 Cor. xv. 19. "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life"—zoes—"or by death."—Phil. i. 20. "For what is your life?"—zoe—"It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away."—James iv. 14.

These texts, we judge, are sufficient to convince the candid that the term zoe, of itself, does not signify eternal life; and especially the last quoted text must convince all such that zoe, in James' mind, has no such meaning.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM ELD. H. ROCKWELL.

BR. STORRS: I send you a few thoughts for the readers of the HERALD, if you think them worthy a place in its columns.

Rom. v. 12.—"Wherefore as by one man, sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." It is my honest conviction, and that conviction arises from an impartial and prayerful review of my personal experience, that in the day in which we live, those claiming to be Christians, especially professing to believe that Christ will soon come to make an end of sin, and utterly destroy its author, to set up his kingdom under the whole heavens, and to gather together his weeping, waiting Bride, that there never was a time, nor a people, that was so exposed to become skeptical, and so sorely tempted to secret infidelity as at this time. Here I may be asked, What is infidelity? To this I answer, It is quite possible that I am not sufficiently versed in language to be able to give a definition that those of higher attainments would be willing to accept. Be that as it may, I will make the trial.

I assume that to be an infidel, is to deny the truthfulness of the Scriptures; and when one man, or any class of men, refuse the plain teachings of the Bible, and teach others so, in order to establish a theory, spun out of their own theological bowels, that this would be infidelity in one of its most dangerous forms; for to do this against light with hope of success, they must be understood to be Christians, and must apply Scripture in a wrong direction.

We come now to consider the words of the text. Let us move cautiously, lest we condemn ourself in the thing which we allow; for we are approaching a subject which to us is of vital interest, around which all of my hope of future life fondly clusters and concentrates. Yes, the hope that because Jesus died and rose again and ascended on high, and hath given us the sweet promise that he will come again, and give to all his worthy ones a resurrection to an eternal life. O joy of my poor old weary, sorrow-struck heart. O, can it ever be that one so vile, so helpless, may be exalted to the right hand of the Majesty on high? Yes, it can be; and with our faithfulness it will be, for faithful is he that has promised. Then, O my soul, wait thou on the Lord and he will bring it to pass.

"Wherefore, by one man sin entered into the world." We inquire, Who is this one man? "And the LORD God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17. Here we learn the benefit promised, and the penalty threatened in case of disobedience; but the name of the man is not given. In verse 19, when the beasts of the field, and fowls of the air were in convention to receive their respective names, they were brought unto Adam, and in the performance of his work of giving names we get his name. We ask in all kindness, How did sin enter into the world; was it by Adam's disobedience, or by the teeming millions of his unborn race? You will doubtless say, By Adam's disobedience. Yes, and so would every honest-hearted Christian say. If then sin had its introduction into the world by Adam's disobedience, who suffers the penalty of that violated law? To my mind, it is quite conclusive that those that were yet unborn, or those that were born years after, nor those unborn at this time have nothing to do with suffering the penalty of Adam's sin. But infidelity in its covert form asks, Did not death follow as a result? Yes; but why? and by sin? We ask again, How? "And so death passed upon all men." But how about this so? "for all have sinned." Here then we find a clear solution. Adam's first business operation was to invest largely in the bank of death. But we all have cause of thankfulness that instead of his leaving any of his investment, either the principal or any of the compound interest accruing from the dividends, he appropriated the whole to himself, and soon found himself in a state of bankruptcy, with his beautiful form, which in his banking speculations he had not only mortgaged, but had forfeited all claim to the title, and with it lost his life, lost the favor of God, lost his right to the tree of life; and as a result, as far as he our earthly father was concerned, left all the race that should come of his loins without any land, any home, any shelter; poor, blind, naked, bruised, and mangled, with a heel bleeding at every step. O what cause of thankfulness that amidst all the losses, in the ruins of the garden are found the original copy of the record, with this blessed promise, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. Now we ask again, What did Christ, the promised seed, propose to do? For an answer, we turn to John's gospel, chap. i. 29, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Please be particular to mark the expression, "the sin of the world;" not the sins of the world; but the one sin of our first parents. Now, as Adam went forth overwhelmed with an awful sense of sin and shame, with looking for the penalty of death pressing upon him until it was executed, still there is hope for his fallen children. But the covert infidel asks, Does not the apostle teach, that as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive? Yes. Then if all die in Adam, by the same rule all that have ever lived or ever will live must have a resurrection to life in order to be in Christ. Might we not more properly say, that in order to have a resurrection, we must be in Christ previous to the extinction of the Adamic life?

Now let us suppose, for an illustration, I am sitting here in this home of my adoption; all of a sudden, I am startled by an unusual commotion in the streets. I see men, women and children rushing in wild confusion in all directions, and hear the wild cry of an approaching herald: Get out of the street, get out of the street, for there are two lions broken loose, that are killing every one they can come at; so go into your house and shut your doors, or you will die. But after the announcement I hear some one say, O, don't be alarmed; and while others escape to their houses and find protection, the one not alarmed is killed. Do we ask, why? Because, being warned of his danger, he did not get into his house: if all had remained in the street, would all have been in the house? Certainly not. If all men choose to remain in Adam, which is the way of sin and death, then they cannot be in Christ; for he that is in Christ is a new creature; old Adamic things are passed away, behold all Christ things are become new; and are full of mercy and good fruit.

But I find my faculties so decayed, my strength so exhausted, and my hand so unsteady, that my illustrations seem rather to darken counsel by words without knowledge; so I will give a few of the Bible illustrations from among the many which serve to satisfy my mind that there is no future life of any kind to the wicked.

Rom. viii. 10, 11, "And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness." That is, while in Adam's sinful life, if you continue in his sinful practice until you lose your animal life, then you remain twice dead, and plucked up by the roots, so that you will never see life. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Thus quickened by the resurrection power of the Spirit of life, we are more than conquerors through him that loved us and washed us in his own precious blood, and made us kings and priests unto God, and we shall reign with him on the earth.

What is the revealed will of God in the resurrection work? John vi. 39, "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." For the special purpose of directing the attention of all to the will of God, in perfect harmony with the resurrection work of Christ, I omitted the context and inserted the text, and will now invite attention to the context. We go back to verse 37. "All that the Father hath given me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Inquiry: Did the Father give those to Christ whom he denounced with such cutting reproof while teaching in their presence? Hear him: "Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Again, Ye children of the devil, ye will not come unto me that ye might have life. John vi. 38, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." In John iii. 36, the will of God in the Christ-work is set forth in clear and explicit terms: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." Who cannot see from this, that there is no hope of future life to the wicked? We look in the unerring word for instruction, and we find among its inspired writers, in Prov. xxi. 16, "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Psalms xlix. 19, 20, "He shall go to the generation of his fathers: they shall never see light. Man that is in honor, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Isaiah xxvi. 14, "They are dead, they shall not live: they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Jer. li. 39, "In their heat I will make their feasts, and I will make them drunken, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the LORD." Verse 57, "And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men; and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts." We might continue to add to these a long list of testimony, but a word to the wise is enough.

BR. STORRS: After reading the above, if you can read it, excuse me for intruding on your time and patience. You might reasonably conclude that after spending that very stormy day in your office, I should remain silent. All I have to say is, that I love life and the LIFE-GIVER, and wish to contribute to its blessed cause; but out of kindness to me, please speak an encouraging word to our numerous friends for me, and ask them to pray that the evening of life to me, and especially to you, may be peaceful and useful, and then throw this into your waste basket.

Give my best love to all your family and office help. From your way-worn and weary brother, in the hope of future life.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., July 2, 1870.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

BR. STORRS: The weather out here is very hot and very dry—more dry than hot. Here in Racine we have had only one good swashing rain since the last of March. We understand it has rained in surrounding places, but not here; consequently everything suffers. Tidings from the East say there is plenty of rain. It brings to our mind the word of our Lord through Amos to rebellious Israel: "I have withholden the rain from you, when there were yet three months to the harvest; and I caused it to rain upon one city, and caused it not to rain upon another city: one piece was rained upon, and the piece whereupon it rained not withered, yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord."

The judgments of God are evidently abroad on the earth in various forms. He is reproving or dealing with professed Israel, but what is her position toward him? She is drinking at the fountain of earthly pleasures; fairs, festivals, fourth of July celebrations, but is not satisfied, only an excited craving for more. "Yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord."

For the last two or three weeks the weather has been such that it has seemed almost impossible to send any thing for the columns of "our paper;" but I have thought of you, Br. Storrs; how could you stand it? Hot or cold, the paper always comes filled with what is good, too. I for one thank the Lord for your long continued health and energy, and have often prayed lately that you may fill that same position till the blessed Master appears, if it be his blessed will.

I have just the second time finished reading that article, "Maintain Christian Liberty," in the last paper. How I thank God for Christian liberty. Thank him that Jesus himself uttered these words: "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, Christ, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father which is in heaven. Neither be ye called Master: for one is your Master even Christ."

O how I clung to, and rested on those words of my Master's last winter, when they so determinedly tried to force their theological thumb-screws upon me. O Lord, I thank thee for deliverance. It seems as if I feel the gall of that whole operation in my system yet. But the chains are broken, and I am free in Christ. Bless the Lord O my soul, and all that is within me be stirred up to bless his holy name.

How can ministers—but, can I call them ministers of Christ? has Christ appointed lords over God's heritage? Yet how can they make laws for the flock of Christ, and dictate what shall be believed and what shall not be believed, when Jesus says distinctly, Call no man master, call no man father; one is your Master, Christ, and is your Father, Lord. Ye all are brethren. And when John says, by inspiration, "But the anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as he hath taught you, ye shall abide in him."

We have one Father, God; we have one Master, Christ; one Teacher, the Holy Spirit; one Guide-book, the blessed Bible. By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. "Happy is that people that is in such a case; yea happy is that people whose God is the Lord." "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

To-day the United States celebrates its Declaration of Independence. But O it all sinks into insignificance when we contemplate the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, which will soon be given to the overcomers. Lord help us to abide in Christ. Amen.

RACINE, Wis., July 4, 1870.

FROM MRS. D. C. CORWIN.

BR. STORRS: After an absence of several years, I have returned, at least for a time, to my old home in this glorious West, made dear to me by many sacred memories.

We left Washington, D. C., the latter part of April, very much to recuperate our wasted energies and recover health. I had been confined many weeks by severe illness, in which my life was nearly despaired of. But our covenant-keeping God and Saviour, who is rich in mercy, as well as Physician of soul and body, saw fit to restore me to praise his holy name.

But I think much of the dear brethren and sisters left East, and eagerly read the papers to find their names and communications. I hope not to be forgotten by them, but remembered in their prayers, with the sure hope of soon meeting them in the kingdom.

I have been distributing tracts and papers as I have opportunity; and talking with persons of this, our glorious hope. It seems to me it is so interwoven with my very existence that I must deal out some truth to every one.

I attend the Sabbath school (Baptist), and Bible class, and hope to get more and more chance to testify on these important truths. "Truth is mighty and will prevail." God will be heard. Oh that a perishing world would heed before it is too late. Oh that we all, the followers of Jesus, may be so united to Him, that we may be ready, at his coming, and have great boldness at his appearing.

Yours, longing for the LIFE-GIVER.

WASHINGTON, Ill., June 27, 1870.

FROM MARIA M. WEAVER.

BR. STORRS: We are trying to get the truth before the people. Something of an interest is manifested by the people in this and surrounding neighborhoods, partly, perhaps, on account of our holding meetings in a tent. No matter whether they come "out of curiosity" or not, if they only come out and listen to the gospel we'll be glad to see them.

My object in writing this is to inform any one who may live near us, that we should be glad of their presence and assistance. We have had quite a company of workers from the Springfield church. Brn. Hill, Sweetland, Bradford, Toll, Robinson, Ford; also Brn. Flagg, Rockwell and Jenks, from abroad. These brethren remind us of the primitial practices of the church, when "all" had "a hymn, a psalm, or an exhortation." The city friends seem to enjoy being out in the "highway," for here they find more real need of their labors.

Many who never attended our meetings before have been respectful listeners. O how I wish they might fall in love with the truth. We pray the Lord to send us the right ones to help us.

Pray for us, that we may seek to save sinners.

FEEDING HILLS, Mass., June 27, 1870.

BR. E. WOLCOTT SICK.

BR. STORRS: In behalf of Br. E. Wolcott, permit me to say through the HERALD OF LIFE, that he is suffering a great deal through exhaustion of the vital functions and nervous depression; so much so that he is incapacitated for any mental taxation. Believing that "the prayers of the righteous availeth much," we join with him in suggesting all who have faith in God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, to pray earnestly for his recovery, that he may be restored to his former usefulness in spreading abroad the glorious light of truth, and thereby saving souls from death.

No man in our ranks is more fully and entirely consecrated to the work of God and truth than Br. W. His only question is, What is thy will, O God? and with a cheerful determination he is always happy in walking in the path of truth and duty. We know not how to spare him from the field. Therefore, brethren and sisters, pray.

In much love,

S. W. BISHOP.

OCEANPORT, N. J., July, 1870.

BR. W. S. CAMPBELL.

OUR latest news from him is, that he is slowly improving. His daughter writes us under date of the 7th inst.:

"Father remains about the same. His hand and arm we trust are beyond the danger of amputation. His fever still lingers, and his cough troubles him. He is yet delirious at times. Mother has strong faith that all will yet be well with him; and that this is but a trial of our faith and patience, sent by the 'Good Father.' She wishes you to pray earnestly for her, that she may be sustained; and for father, that this affliction may work for his good."

OBITUARY.

CURL.—In Rocklin, Cal., June 24, fell asleep in Jesus, MARGARET A., wife of GEO. W. CURL, aged forty-two years and three months. She was a true Christian, a devoted and loving wife, and an affectionate mother. She had been an advent believer since 1853, and was a firm believer in the faith of "No Life out of Christ." The last words on her lips were, "My Saviour."

GEO. W. CURL.

WHITE.—In Philadelphia, Pa., on Sunday, the 3d inst., EMILY A., the beloved and only daughter of Br. DAVID W. WHITE. Her mother died three years since, and this daughter has been her father's only household companion since. His affliction is deep, but we trust he finds the grace of God sufficient for him. He has our sympathy and our prayers. —EDITOR.

DEVELOPMENT OF THE MORAL SENSE OF LIFE.

WE are prone to imagine that our temptations are peculiar:—that other hearts are free from secret burdens that oppress our energies, and cast a cloud upon our joy; that life has for others a freer movement, and a less embarrassed way. But in no one has God made the human heart to carol its thoughtless song of joy; and the shadow of our moral being rests darkly on us all. We cannot take the world as it comes, enjoying what it offers, and passing by its sufferings and its burdens with our lightest touch:—we get involved in the deep questions of conscience and duty, and the sense of responsibility stills the carol of the spirit, and suffers no man to repose without a trouble on the bosom of life.

Infinite are the ways in which the devices and aims of the moral nature break the instinctive happiness that lives for the day, and forgets the morrow: but effectually this awakening of deeper and sadder life takes place in all; and struggle, fear, disappointment, the partial feeling of an unfilled destiny, the restless wavings of uncertain hopes, are in the heart of every man who has risen but a step above the animal life. The more we know of what passes in the minds of others, the more our friends disclose to us their secret consciousness, the more do we learn that no man is peculiar in his moral experience—that beneath the smoothest surface of outward life lie deep cares of the heart—and that if we fall under our burdens, we fall beneath the temptations that are common to man, the existence of which others as little suspect in us as we do in them. We have but the trials that are incident to humanity;—there is nothing peculiar in our case—and we must take up our burdens in faith of heart that, if we are earnest, and trifle not with temptation, God will support us, as in the past fidelity of his providence, he has supported others as heavily laden as ourselves.—J. H. Thom.

NON-ESSENTIALS.

WE hear a great deal of talk among denominational Christians about "non-essentials." By this expression is meant those peculiar isms which they consider of sufficient importance to build sects and divisions upon, causing strife and enmity amongst those who are trying to follow Jesus; but which they are occasionally willing to suspend pro tem, when they see an opportunity to make a proselyte by a show of charity, or when they have a particular desire to appear in favor of union; and when the occasion is past, the isms are again brought into force as the fundamental principles of the denomination. It may be well enough to merely mention that the gospel, as preached by Jesus and his apostles, makes no mention of non-essentials as being connected with it. There is nothing non-essential in the great plan of salvation; nothing that can be suspended for sake of a temporary compromise to gain a few more numbers with which to renew the antagonism of sects. The gospel is very simple, very concise; it recognizes no "foolish questions," no "doubtful disputations," no isms or ists. These are all human appendages, non-essentials; they are no part of the gospel.—The Nazarene.

IMPULSES.—Give no place to a heated imagination. Do not hastily ascribe things to God. Do not easily suppose dreams, voices, impressions, visions, or revelations, to be from God. They may be from him. They may be from nature. Therefore, "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they be of God." Try all things by the written word, and let all bow down before it. You are in danger of enthusiasm every hour, if you depart ever so little from Scripture; yea, or from the plain, literal meaning of any text, taken in connection with the context. And so you are, if you despise or lightly esteem reason, knowledge, or human learning: every one of which is an excellent gift of God, and may serve the noblest purpose.—Selected.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for July is received, profusely illustrated.

CONTENTS.—Episodes in an Obscure Life; The Pricelessness of Knowledge; Two French Hymns; How to Study the Old Testament; Sister Edith's Probation; Little Children God's Stronghold for Troubled Men; The Struggle in Ferrara; The Companions of St. Paul; Sundays on the Continent; Mission Work; Miriam's Jealousy; On the Miracles of our Lord; Diana Coverdale's Diary; Supplement—Notes for Readers Out of the Way.

For sale by all periodical dealers.

TERMS.—Yearly subscriptions, $3 50. Single number, 30 cents. Liberal clubbing rates. Specimen number mailed, postage paid, to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers, 715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

BOUND VOLUMES OF HERALD OF LIFE.

WE have two volumes of 1868–9, or, volume vi., which can be had for $4 per volume, if applied for soon.

APPOINTMENTS.

TERRYVILLE (Br. Yale's neighborhood), July 17.
WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., July 24.

CHAS. C. BARKER.

CHESHIRE STREET, Conn., Sund., July 17.
NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Sunday, July 24.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, July 31.

WM. STUART.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., evenings, July 12, 13.
HARTFORD, Conn., Sunday, July 17.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Sunday), July 24.

S. W. BISHOP.

HINESBURG, Vt., Sunday, July 17.

W. H. H. MCALLISTER.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—B. Sweet, M. M. Norton, H. Hutchkins, Mrs. C. Barnes, Joseph Chapin, A. H. Brown, D. J. Stansbery, Jas. Simpson.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Mrs. Henry Hoadley, Mary Mansfield, Daniel Clow, A. Decker.

VARIOUS SUMS—Jacob Bemis, 50 cents. R. D. Chase, $10 on pledge; Mrs. H. Littlefield, $3.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Thos. R. Crocker, Brooklyn, N. Y., $5.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Edwin Paul, H. Rude, H. Hutchins, Dr. J. K. Finley (two parcels), Jared Hoadley, Joshua Roberts, Taylor Woods, Eld. A. F. Dugger, Eld. B. Matthias, Mary Mansfield, J. Gregg, J. D. Burkehile, J. D. Sheridan, Wm. D. Bridge, Joseph Eaton.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"M. L. F."—"Yes."

S. B. HOPKINS.—Is Olney Hopkins the same as Eld. D. O. Hopkins? No more papers are due "Eld. Henry Hopkins."

"G. A."—Your credit extends to close of Vol. vii

PRAYER.

Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,
Unutter'd or express'd;
The motion of a hidden fire
That trembles in the breast.
Prayer is the burden of a sigh,
The falling of a tear;
The upward glancing of an eye
When none but God is near.
Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;
Prayer the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high.
Prayer is the Christian's vital breath,
The Christian's native air;
His watchword at the gates of death,
He enters heaven by prayer.*
Prayer is the contrite sinner's voice,
Returning from his ways,
While angels in their songs rejoice,
And say, "Behold, he prays!"
The saints in prayer appear as one,
In word, in deed, and mind;
When with the Father and his Son
Their fellowship they find.
Nor prayer is made on earth alone—
The Holy Spirit pleads;
And Jesus on the eternal throne
For sinners intercedes.
Oh Thou by whom we come to God,
The Life, the Truth, the Way!
The path of prayer thyself has trod—
Lord, teach us how to pray!

—Selected by W. H. S.

* With the exception of the unscriptural idea of modern theology of going to heaven at death, this beautiful definition of prayer by James Montgomery, the poet, is worthy of our recollection.

A LETTER TO A D.D.

THE writer of the following letter was an intimate friend of the father of the person to whom it was written. Twenty-five years ago we were also acquainted with his father, who then lived, if we mistake not, in Georgia, and was favorable to our Life views at that time: but we have heard nothing from him for near twenty years. We would be glad to learn if he is yet alive, and if so, where he is.

THOS. ——, D. D. Dear Tom: You are now said to be a D.D. I hope you are well versed in the idiom of language, and can construe any Hebrew or Greek sentence, text or word in the Bible. If I knew that a certain editor would publish this letter, I should most assuredly send him a copy of it, not merely for your edification or criticism, but for the benefit of all who can understand the object of it. And if I send it to him, and he considers it unfit for the press, he may annihilate it. What! annihilate it? cry doctors of divinity! Nothing is surely annihilated, say they! You know, dear Tom, what sort of a creature, living animal I am, and will not be much amazed at what I may suggest, assert, or attempt to prove—doubting, as I do, the right of D.D.'s, LL.D.'s, or M.D.'s to dictate to me or any rational man (who has common sense) on matters that concern our eternal destiny. I view all the doctors of divinity, now living, who decry the word annihilation, as applied to the wicked, by men who believe that, "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will He destroy," as partially deranged, theologically insane, if not wickedly and knowingly determined to keep the people ignorant of one truth, one word. But what does the word mean—the word, annihilation? You have not forgotten its signification in Latin, Greek, or Hebrew. Look at what I say, in this epistle—talle-et-lege—and then criticise.

Annihilate—delere; extinguere, tollere, evertere, subvertere, etc., to be annihilated, funditus, interire, ad internecionem perire—what do all these expressions, verbs, signify, but destruction—cities, armies destroyed—utterly perished—annihilated? But the noun itself? O! yes, the noun, nomen! annihilation? Here it is: deletio; extinctio; enteritus; excidium—these are very pretty words expressing the meaning of annihilation—extinction—death—destruction. Are there any more words, Tom? Aye, verily, several. I am not at a loss for words, and will bring to memory a few now, from the treasury of knowledge. Here they are: consumtio, ruina, exitium, dissolutio, internitio, destructio, etc., etc. Now, I do not wish doctors of divinity ad interitum ruere, to rush to destruction, but desire them to open their eyes, and no longer try to blind the eyes of the ignorant and the credulous by hiding the true signification of one word. Some of them say: "Nothing can ever be annihilated." Who talks of destroying nothing? Are the ungodly nothing before they are destroyed? They are wicked beings, doomed to destruction, extermination, annihilation. "The wicked shall consume—into smoke they shall consume away." Are they then annihilated? O yes! "But"—but what! "the smoke remains." This is a wonderful argument, to be sure, to prove that, when the wicked are turned into smoke and ashes, they are living! still immortal! Tremendous! Ashes and smoke immortal, living creatures—living souls! Whew! Tom, excuse these kind words, and exclamations—you know I used to have a coze inclination to use a little irony, long ago, to penetrate hard-shells, when the mildness of loving words could not find an entrance to expel all the arrant nonsense inclosed in the shells. Now, however, I will use plainness of speech—soft words—because I do know you are kind, tender-hearted, and can feel for others' wo, and I would not have you think that I am afraid you will imitate some D.D.'s, who knowingly hide the meaning of words, and vainly endeavor to cast reproach upon so small a portion of animated existence as your humble servant, because he believes the truth; all the wicked will God destroy—annihilate.

I shall say but little, on the Greek and Hebrew words connected—synonymous with those I have mentioned. As a D.D. you will, I have no doubt, ponder well and truly the import of those I may now state, and give me an answer at your earliest convenience. "Despise not the day of small things," nor the small number of those who believe in the destruction of the wicked,—that the wicked will utterly perish in their own corruption. Perish is the word! Yes, it is, indeed. Perish. What, does it mean—utterly perish? Look and see. Can you see any thing like life, animation, sensation, intelligence in any one, who has utterly perished? Phthora, kala-phthare, sontai-phthoran—corruption, rottenness, rotted, perished, utterly perished. Can you find any thing of life, incorruptibility, immortality in these words? No, I presume you will say. See the following: apothnesko, apolountai, apolonto, apoloati, sophoh, gova, shomad, adai-ouvaid, kata phthesis, apolonto, tsomath, nosakh, "exolothreuthes dai ek ton lavu," and then pity D.D.'s who sneer at the words destroyed, destruction, utterly perished, as expressive of the doom of the ungodly—utter annihilation, utter extermination.

It is not necessary to allude to other words which plainly express their doom. If your earthly parent lives, J——, tell him there is no wavering or doubting in me, so far as I have learned of Jesus; that I am still a learner; that I would not exchange my instructor and Master for all the doctors of divinity in creation; that I have yet to learn that Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Paul, Peter, Jude, James, Timothy, or Titus ever once thought of receiving titles of men, such as Reverend, Right Reverend, Bishop, Arch-Bishop, Doctor of Divinity, or Professor of Theology. O! Tom—my beloved friend, who, among all the Universities, Theologians, Arch-Bishops, and Doctors of Divinity, can lecture, preach, or teach like Paul? And Paul had no titles higher than a servant of Jesus Christ—a servant of the brethren, for Jesus' sake. "Factus sum omnia omnebus." Let me suggest, in all kindness, the propriety of rejecting all such modern titles—and if any man's ambition leads him to crave, and hunger, and thirst after the adornment of things that humble and yet elevate, let him be baptised in humility, weakness, poorness of spirit, etc., the mind that was in Christ Jesus, and then wait by patient continuance in well doing, and continue unfaltering and patiently, till Jesus crowns him with unfading honors—glory, honor and immortality. O my soul! I would not receive the honors that come from men—such sounding titles—sounding brass and tinkling cymbols. How would it sound to say, "The Right Reverend Arch-Bishop Paul, Doctor of Divinity, Professor of Theology and Head of the Churches at Rome, Colosse, Corinth, Ephesus, etc.?" Who in his heart (that has the spirit of Christ) dare give such titles to the Apostle Paul?

In our day—but a few days ago—it was announced that a Methodist Episcopal, or an Episcopal Methodist church in Baltimore wanted a head! and craved Bishop Marvin to become their head! O! I feel sorry for any headless church—an acephalous church! Surely it must be dead—lifeless—aye, dead in trespasses and sins—if it is acephalous or even is satisfied with such a head as that of a Bishop.

The Church of England had a head, Harry VIII., who was called the defender of the faith! What a head! Write to me, and tell me if your father lives, and where.

FRATER.

P. S. How would it suit to give such titles as the following: Doctor of Humility, Doctor of Meekness, Doctor of the Spirit of Christ, Doctor of Godliness, and so on, including all the beatitudes and faith, hope, charity—Doctor of Holiness, Doctor of Perfection? Think of these things—and if you like add Doctor of All Saints—Heads of Churches. Do you see the folly of such titles? Well, 'tis all contained in your title—Doctor of Divinity.

MONROE, Union Co., N. C., May 21, 1870.

THE WICKED DEAD: ELD. WAGGONER'S VIEW.

REMARKS THEREON BY J. C. DAY.

BR. STORRS: With your permission I would like to say a few things in relation to Eld. J. H. Waggoner's work entitled "A Vindication of the Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Unjust." First, by comparing his teachings, in this work, with other works on theology from his pen; and also the writings of others of the same denomination; and then compare them all with the word of God.

I think the work is very ingeniously got up, and as well calculated to deceive, probably, as any work that has been got up in modern times, especially to a casual reader. For instance, such expressions: "All shall be made alive;" "they shall die the second death;" said to be Scripture, and like expressions, with which the book abounds; and if sarcastic assertions were argument I should conclude that his position was well sustained. But I will proceed to examine some points of his argument.

On page 9 he says, "God has not only threatened death to evil doers, but he has also threatened tribulation and anguish, torment with fire and brimstone, plagues, with grievous sores and pains. . . . Now these are the deserts of sin and part of its penalty, or they are not. If they are, then Mr. Storrs' exposition of principles is without foundation in truth." On page 29, in his objections to the non-resurrection theory, he says: "It contradicts all those texts which threaten pain and anguish to the sinner." He goes on: "I say it contradicts them, because God is just, and that theory places all these texts in opposition to justice. It is asserted that, 1. Death only is the penalty. 2. Pain or agony is no part of death; therefore, no part of the penalty. 3. To inflict any thing outside of or more than the penalty is injustice." Now, for myself I cannot see the contradiction in this principle laid down by Br. Storrs that Eld. W. seems to see; for if pain and anguish and torment in fire and brimstone is clearly revealed to belong to, or is a part of the penalty, then the principle laid down by Br. Storrs require its infliction. But if it is not plainly revealed as part of the penalty, but a mere attendant upon the threatened infliction, then Br. S.'s position is true, and your theory stands condemned.

And what do you say about it, Eld. W.? I appeal to you to decide the matter, for the present; and I should like to have you tell us honestly and candidly what you think of this matter of justice as regards the law and its penalty. Well, I say, "If the law itself be strictly just, the penalty of the law, neither more nor less, will answer the demands of justice."—Atonement by J. H. Waggoner, p. 53. Well, you seem to be candid so far; but now, what do you say the penalty is, and when inflicted? "Remorse of conscience is no part of the penalty of the law. That view which is indeed the corner-stone of Universalism, is as contrary to reason as to Scripture, and grows out of the error before noticed of making no distinction between the penalty of the law and mere consequences. The penalty is a judicial infliction, prescribed by the statute, administered by authority, and its infliction must be subsequent to the judgment."—Ib., p. 54.

But now, Eld. W., what will you say when I come to inquire concerning these passages which speak of the wicked as being tormented by the seven last plagues, as you teach they have their fulfilment in the winding up of the age, and you say the infliction of the penalty is after the judgment, and the judgment lasts at least one thousand years after this age closes? I did not know but there might be some difficulty in explaining this, as your theory stands pledged to restore in the second Adam all that was lost by the first first Adam. But I shall inquire into this more fully in my next. Meanwhile I will inquire, if you please, what you say the penalty of the law is. You say in regard to Dr. Barnes' views, that Christ did not suffer the amount of punishment due to the guilty world: "But that makes not the least difference; for the question of justice or the injustice of that part endured by him must be settled by the same principles that would govern the case had he endured the whole. The objection, however, is wholly inadmissible, involving a material error in itself; for death is the penalty of the law, and the just due of the sinner."—Ib., p. 81. "As it is the duty and sole prerogative of the Governor to reveal his law, so he alone can define the penalty. This he has done in his words: 'The wages of sin is death.' Any effort to evade this plain truth, or to make it any thing but a plain truth involves difficulties and contradictions."—Ib., p. 55.

I expect we shall find before we get through with this investigation, that it really does involve contradictions, if not some serious difficulties. Yours, for the truth.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, Mass., June, 1870.

THE GLOBE FULL OF FIRE.

THIS old notion is about as worthy of credence as any other vain speculation; but we long ago abandoned it as a grand absurdity; and it seems scientific men are abandoning such a theory, as appears from the following article sent us by a friend:

THE INTERIOR OF THE EARTH.

Geologists are growing wiser by experience, and a more careful study of nature, and many old theories, supposed to be demonstrated, are giving way before the discovery of new facts. Many geologists are very reluctant to surrender the theory of earthquakes which has so long prevailed; that the interior of the earth is in a molten state, the solid crust a few hundred miles thick, resting on a vast ocean of melted matter, and that by contact of water with this heated mass, steam is generated whose intense pressure occasions earthquakes and volcanic eruptions.

This theory has been a favorite one, because it seemed to explain violent phenomena, and was in harmony with the hypothesis that the earth was formerly in a nebulous state, and is gradually cooling, parting with its internal heat. It seemed also to derive support from the increase of heat in mines and deep excavations.

But the mathematicians have taken up the theory, and proved it to be impossible, because the known gravity of the earth requires its interior parts to be far more solid than at the surface. The mean density of the earth they have found to be five and a half times greater than water, while the density of the surface of the earth, land and ocean, is only one-half greater. The centre, therefore, must be solid, and not fluid. Moreover, if the interior of the earth was a molten ocean, with only twenty miles of superficial crust, it could hardly fail to be subject to vast tidal movements, like the ocean, which would break through the crust like so much paper.

A new theory, therefore, is superseding the old one, that earthquakes are due to electrical disturbances, and may be called thunder-storms under the earth. Scientific men believe that an electrical zone exists beneath the earth's surface, to a depth of twelve miles, through which currents are constantly passing, and by whose action the molecular condition of the earth undergoes great changes. Metallic veins are a result of this action, and so is the crystallis from igneous rocks. This zone is affected by the magnetic changes in the sun, and to the agency of the sun, calling its mighty forces into action, are due the constant changes in the earth's surface, the upheaval of mountain ranges, the subsidence of continents, and the new adjustments of land and water.

It must be confessed that this theory is both more simple and credible than the old one of a molten ocean, and all recent investigation confirm it, though it can be accepted only as a probable hypothesis.—Providence Journal.

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

SALAN, THE SUSPECTED BOY.

"PEACE be with you, my sweet home! Farewell, I shall never see you again. May God always bless you!"

It was a bright moonlight night when a boy spoke these sad words. Nobody cared for him in all the world; but the people who did not love him were loved by him, for his heart did not know what hatred was. He sprang lightly over the hedge that separated the garden from the field, then hurried along the foot-path, and finally reached a little hill from which he could look down in the bright night light upon the little village that lay before him.

"Return, return," seemed to be whispered to him from within. "Nobody has missed you yet, and if you will go back again to your bed nobody will know that you had left. Where are you going? What will become of you in the wide world?"

Such questions and thoughts made him tremble, but yet he quickly pursued his way. He had proceeded about two miles when he came to another hill. He then thought he would take a look for the last time upon the little village. Suddenly he saw a burning building. It was a barn that belonged to Millenki, the man with whom the boy, whose name was Salan, had lately been living. But Salan did not know which building it was that was burning. He hastened off all the more rapidly, hoping that by the time the day broke he would be far away.

Millenki and his wife were aroused from their slumbers by the cry of fire. To their great surprise they found it was their own barn. It stood near the dwelling, and there was every prospect that that too would be burned. Millenki's wife stood on the stairs, and called out, "Salan, Salan, you will be burnt up if you don't dress and come down." No voice was heard. She ran up to awaken him, but found out that he had gone. She looked into the adjoining room, but he was not there either. Then she said, "That bad boy has set fire to the barn and run off."

By the great exertions of the villagers, the dwelling house was saved from taking fire, though the barn was burnt down.

The next day Millenki said to his wife, "Salan, our apprentice, is a wicked boy. He has set fire to our barn and run away. The only resort is to take the money that his uncle gave me in trust for him, and apply it to the building of a new barn. That will serve the boy just right."

His wife replied, "You are correct, husband. If I had him here I would whip him till he could hardly talk. He is one of the most wicked boys that can be found in this part of Russia, and if I had my way with him he would be put in jail for life. Engage a carpenter right away. Have a new barn, and that bad boy's money shall pay for it."

Now, Salan was not the bad boy that Millenki and his wife represented him to be. He was an orphan boy, and his uncle, who had lately died, had left him a nice little sum of money, which was placed in the hands of his employer for safe keeping until Salan should arrive at age. Millenki was a bad man, and his wife was by no means a good woman. They both resolved to resort to any expedient within their power to get Salan's money, and to use it for their own purposes. They now thought that they had succeeded, and that they could represent to the world, that the runaway boy had set fire to the barn.

But what became of Salan while the new barn was building? His history was certainly remarkable. He was a bright, active-looking boy, and could ride a horse equal to any man. A few days after he had started from the little Russian village, he was overtaken by a troop of horsemen who were doing all they could to annoy Napoleon's army, for this was the time when Napoleon was marching his great army into Russia. Salan was met, caught up by the horsemen, placed upon a swift little horse, and told that he must do his duty whenever his turn for fighting came. It was soon found that he was a brave soldier, and he rapidly acquired much skill in using his lance. By and by the horsemen had an engagement with a foraging party of the great French army, and though the Russians were successful, Salan was nevertheless severely wounded. He was taken by several of the officers to the nearest village, and placed in the care of a kind widow woman who superintended a little hospital. She promised to take great care of Salan, and I assure you, she kept her promise. Several weeks he was compelled to lie in bed, but by and by he was permitted to go out on the doorstep and get a little fresh air. One day as he was taking a little exercise, he saw two policemen hurrying along the street, taking a man to prison. That man was none other than Millenki.

Millenki had just been arrested for stealing, and he was now sentenced to imprisonment in consequence of his guilt. Salan knew him immediately; and as Millenki was hurried along rapidly his eyes caught a glimpse of Salan, and the wicked man knew the pale-looking boy. Salan soon found out the history of the prisoner's recent life. One day, when he had recovered sufficiently to walk all over the town, he went to the prison and asked leave to talk with Millenki. The prison keeper told him it was against the rules for anybody to enter the cell of a prisoner.

Salan replied, "I don't want to talk with the prisoner unless somebody is with me. If you will allow me to go to his door and talk through the grating it will be all I wish. You can stand by and hear all that is said."

Salan was delighted to think that he could talk with Millenki, his old employer, though he knew that he had not been kindly treated by him, ever since he had been in his employment. I will relate to you some of their conversation.

"Do you remember me?" said Salan to the prisoner, who was bound in strong and heavy chains.

"Remember you," replied Millenki; "I have good reason to remember you. I have done you great injury, and I am heartily ashamed of it."

"It is true you have," replied Salan; "you used to treat me unkindly when I was a little apprentice in your service, and your wife gave me poor food to eat—seldom did either of you speak a kind word to me, though my parents were both dead. But I don't treasure up an evil thought against you. I would never have left you if it had not been for your unkindness."

The tears began to start from Millenki's eyes, and then he said: "I have not mentioned the greatest injury I have ever committed against you."

"Tell me what it is," replied Salan, "and I will forgive you freely."

"Oh," said Millenki, "it is the injury that has brought me here. When my barn burned down the night you left, I suspected it was you who had set fire to it, and that you had escaped in order to avoid punishment. I immediately took your money and began to build a splendid new barn with it. I thought that the money would almost if not quite build a new dwelling house too. So I employed an architect to make out the estimates and draw the plan. He told me that the house would cost just five thousand dollars. I would therefore need one thousand dollars more than the amount of your money, after having paid for the building of the barn. I knew not how to get it, or where to get it. I might have worked a year or two, and gained it that way; but I thought that was a very troublesome way to make only that amount of money. I resolved to gain it as quickly as I could, even though I did it by dishonesty. I knew a rich nobleman living in a castle some six miles off, and that he had a great deal of money in his possession. I laid my plans to steal some of it, but all my schemes failed. I was caught in the very act, and you see what I have come to. Not more than two weeks had passed after my wife and I had suspected you of setting my barn on fire before the guilty person was arrested. He confessed the deed, and said that neither you nor anybody else except himself had anything to do with it. My conscience then smote me because we had accused you so falsely. Oh, pardon me, pardon me—my wife and myself—for having accused you as we did!"

Then Millenki burst into tears, and it seemed as if his heart would break.

Salan was deeply affected at his appearance, and said: "Oh, don't weep, don't weep! I freely forgive you everything. I must leave you, Millenki, for I am not strong, and must go to my little hospital to lie down. Pray much to the Lord here in your cell, and I will use all my power in due time to get you released."

By and by Salan was well again, and with his fellow-soldiers. He was brought into several engagements, and always fought like a hero. In one conflict he performed daring deeds of bravery, and the commanding officer said to him: "What can I do for you, Salan, to reward your bravery?"

"Salan said: "If you will free the prisoner Millenki, who is confined in the jail at Saltoff, I shall consider that reward enough."

"I will do all in my power to effect that result," replied the officer.

Salan was contented, for he almost knew that his request would be granted. In four days from that time a writing was placed in his hand, signed by the Emperor himself. It contained thanks to Salan for his bravery, the discharge of Millenki from prison, and a pension declared for Salan himself in all his future life.

When the war was over Salan entered a military school in one of the largest cities of Russia, and was promoted from rank to rank until he became one of the principal officers in the city. He was made professor in the school. But he did not forget the man who had wronged him, and who had asked his pardon.

During one of his vacations he went off and saw Millenki and his wife, and invited them to come to the city where he lived. He bought them a little house, surrounded with about three acres of ground; furnished it for their use, and said to them: "Please accept this from me."

One day the story of Salan and Millenki, and their strange lives, appeared in the morning papers of the city. Salan never found out how it became public, for he never told it himself. It must have been repeated by Millenki to some person connected with the city press, and thus made public. Of course it made a great sensation in the city, and especially in the institution where Salan was professor. One evening, soon afterward, he was serenaded by the splendid military band, and a committee of six students waited on him. They presented to him a very large gold medal, on one side of which was the picture of a young soldier engaged in conflict—a representation of Salan himself—and on the other these words: "All honor to the man who conquers suspicion by his noble benevolence."—The Methodist.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, The Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	THE RICH TRACT,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 20, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 39. WHOLE NUMBER 325.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,

NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

AN INSTRUCTIVE LETTER.

THE author of the following letter is a farmer in Michigan. It was written to a Sister without any thought of its being printed; but Dr. Finley, of Niles, having read it persuaded the author to allow him to forward it to us to print or not, as we judged best. Dr. Finley writes:

"It appears to me that he presents some points in a striking manner, and that its publication might do good. I dont know that I ever met with any one, who, in so short a time, seemed to have so thorough and complete a view of our doctrines and their bearings as Mr. Hoadley, and his whole soul is engaged in trying to get others to investigate them. I like to see such articles in our paper, as they are calculated to produce a favorable impression on any one who may see them for the first time."

We give the letter, trusting it may do good to many, and be the means of leading some souls to the knowledge of themselves and the designs of their CREATOR towards them, and thus lead them to love and adore Him for His mercy and love.

SISTER SERAPH:

If, after giving this letter a careful perusal, you remain unchanged in your opinion, I will, out of regard to your choice, discontinue any further correspondence on this subject. I have written you several times extending each of my letters to more than an ordinary length with the hope of being able to present the truth in a manner to enlist your attention, that you may be led to investigate for yourself and see whether these things are so. With more care, than usual for me, in writing, I have devoted several days to preparing this letter; and with the aid of books and papers, made such selections and references as I deem nearest the purpose. So certain am I that there is no future life out of Christ that it appears exceeding strange that others do not see as I do, and are not more ready to adopt the same views. I have come to the conclusion that the difference of opinions concerning the doctrine taught in the Bible originate in part from the influence of early education, and in part from a want of a proper starting point, which is only to believe God. If we do really believe him, we must believe that truth harmonizes with the Bible, but that error does not. When I learned to interpret the teaching of the Scriptures, based on the divine attributes of God, viz., that he is a God of love, mercy, wisdom, goodness, truth, justicce and power; and that every religious theory or doctrine that comes in collision with one of these attributes is false, I could then see and believe that by our descent from Adam we are mortal, and that immortality is a gift dependent on the will of the giver. The starting point, then, is to believe that God made Adam of the earth, an earthy man, of the dust of the ground. Paul gives a definition of this first man in 1 Cor. xv. 45, 46. "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual." We see the first Adam was an animal; the placing him in the garden did not change his nature, but his condition; he was in the reach of the tree of life, and but for disobedience might have continued in endless life. 2. Sin placed him outside of the reach of the tree of life, subjecting him to his corruptible or animal nature. The threat, "For in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die," preceded the violation and the violation preceded the rejection. The judgment pronounced is in accordance with the threat. Having violated the law, God explains to Adam his condition in this manner, "For dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," previous to ejecting him from the garden; "and now lest he should put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and eat and live forever, therefore the LORD God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. Under the first law, one man was tried and failed, and the world was condemned to its animal nature, and Adam was sent away from the tree of life and he and his race left in a perishing condition—death reigned.

A new dispensation enters, and a new man is tried under a new dispensation. Paul says, Adam was a type of him that was to come. The first man was tried, and failed and was sent from the tree of life into the animal world; and we die, being in Adam, because we have an animal nature. But the second man who is tried under the new law succeeds, and in him God restores man by a new principle of life. It is by partaking of him as the tree of life. Jesus says, "I am the bread of life, that one may eat thereof and not die."—John vi. 51. All die because of their animal relationship to Adam. So, in Christ, christians have life because of their relationship to Christ. The wicked have not this relationship; consequently they die and remain under the dominion of death for ever. God does not bring them to life to die again.

Let us see! salvation depends on regeneration. But what does regeneration include? It includes something more than being begotten. Being begotten and being born are two different matters, as well as different in time.

We are begotten again by the word of truth, of the Spirit, in this life. The birth takes place at the resurrection, at the last day. Christ was "the first born from the dead," (Col. i. 18), "the first-fruits of them that slept." (See Rev. i. 5, 1 Cor. xv. 20). He was "the first born among many brethren:" (Rom. viii. 29). That which is not first begotten, can never be born. Those who are born from the dead, are those in whom the Spirit of God dwelt while in this life; and being thus born, "they are the children of the resurrection," . . . "neither can they die any more." (Luke 20.) He that is born twice can not die "any more." So you see the second death is not dying twice.

The time when the Bible regeneration is to take place is set forth as in the age to come, when Christ shall sit in the throne of his glory, at and after the resurrection of the saints, or their birth from the dead. (See and read Math. xix. 28). In that resurrection the wicked dead have no part, and of course do not die twice. Their death being final, never to be revoked, is called the second death; which death hurts not any in Christ or any born from the dead; over such, that death hath no power, "neither can they die any more." The word eternal also may be used in the sense of final, or nearly so, because the state of destruction or death is such that there is no recovery from it. So punishment, in the same sense, where life is never to be restored throughout eternity, may properly be styled an eternal punishment. It is not the going on of the act of dying, but it is the state of destruction in such a manner that it is past recovery that makes it eternal punishment or death. If you please so to term it, you may call it, "the death that never dies;" which would be about the same thing as saying, the righteous have "the life that never lives."

Shall we not come to the conclusion, that "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death;" and that sin will eternally hold men under its dominion, if they die in their sins? (Perished?) Paul declares, "if Christ is not raised, ye are yet in your sins"—not in Adam's sins. And if so, (that is, if Christ be not raised), all (the righteous as well as the wicked) are perished; faith is left without foundation; that is, "your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins;" no sacrifice of blood to wash away our sins; so we remain sinners, (perished). Shall we not believe Paul, that unless the Lord lends a helping hand, we must eternally remain under the dominion of death? Where then is the boasted immortal soul? Where is that endless torment? where? When man was helpless, what did God do to show him favor? JESUS saith, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish, but have everlasting life." Eternal life then is the gift of God through Jesus Christ. Did he make provision for those who do not believe? or for one class only? Read what Jesus saith again, "God so loved the world" &c., perish! perish!—why! perish means to die; to lose life in any manner; to wither and decay; to be destroyed; to be lost eternally. Let us see about that. That word "perish"—get your Dictionary and examine with me; also, while we are about it, let us see what die means. "Die—to lose life, to expire, to cease, to vanish." Then life and death are opposites; or rather the one is the antithesis of the other, as are, also, night and day, wet and dry, love and hatred, truth and falsehood, a part and the whole. Is the gift of God through Jesus Christ (eternal life) granted (I do not mean offered) to all men? or to believers only? Very well, (I think I hear you say) "to believers only." Then it is a part, is it not? or one class only, that have the promise of eternal life. If he has made provision for those who do not believe, then they also will get eternal life. But stop: the distinction is made plain; although offered to all upon conditions, those only who believe in him shall have everlasting life. They (some) are left outside the garden of Eden where they have not access to life (because they neglect or refuse) and when their animal nature wears out they perish.

Look again and see what perish means: to die and remain dead; for the wages of sin is death according to the penalty of the law; nothing more and nothing less. Paul says, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." So then, none but believers are saved from death. There is no life mentioned outside of the gospel plan. Life and immortality only are brought to light in the gospel: (2 Tim. i. 10, which see and read). Shall we learn of Paul or of Plato about this question of immortality? Paul says, that God only hath it. (1 Tim. vi. 15, 16.) Does Paul say in what manner man can obtain it? Yes,—"To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life."—Rom. ii. 7. When will man obtain this immortality? "At the last trump" this mortal must put on immortality, 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53; which see and be convinced.

It is by inferences and reasonings the philosophy of Plato teaches (aside from inspiration) that all souls are possessed of immortality. These pagan fables virtually deny future life in Christ, and explain away the gospel hope of the resurrection by putting the honor of immortality on the first Adam, when it belongs exclusively to the second. This is the origin of the difficulty. Now, which shall we believe? Schooled in the fables of that day, the dogma that makes void the offer of life through Christ has been handed down from hand to hand through successive generations, and is still maintained, and (perhaps) truly believed, in accord with the deductions of vain philosophy. However truly this may be believed, with the light which we have received, and with the Bible in our hands, can we hope to escape the condemnation of apostate men, if we still cling to these fables—still insist that life means happiness, that death means life in misery, that perish means to preserve, and destroy means life in eternal torment?

If divine revelation, giving all needful information with regard to man's origin, history, condition, and destiny does not contain one plain and positive statement that man's soul is immortal, and is destined to exist as long as God exists, shall we look elsewhere for authority to establish it as a fact? The authority of creeds and ordinances of human establishment can not do it. "This is the record, that God has given us eternal life:" (1 John v. 11, 12 Which see). So "this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son of God, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." For Jesus says, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me though he were dead, yet shall he live." So if he does not believe there is no resurrection. Jesus says, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many." He says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave. I will redeem them from death," &c. Isaiah says, "Thy dead men shall live." Whose? God's dead men will live, and this life will be in Christ, through the resurrection to believers only, who shall be raised incorruptible. This would seem to upset the mortal resurrection theory; if it does not, I will try and give it a shove before I have done—that is, the theory of raising the wicked dead to life to judge them, then remanding them back to death again.

If immortal souls have existence, are destined to exist somewhere as long as God exists, if there is such a thing as eternal torments that also, must be eternal life! Why not? Christ alone can forgive sins. He purchased the right of our redemption by giving his blood and life for us. If he is dead there is no atonement made, for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sing. Then, in harmony with the word, "The wages of sin is death." Hence when death overtakes the unrepenting and unforgiven sinner, the law will eternally hold him in its grasp. Thus he pays the full penalty without being restored to life again to be tormented eternally or to die twice. Die once is the penalty—not twice.

Modern theology says, souls do not go into the grave; that the body dies—not the soul. The Bible says, "Nevertheless man being in honor abideth not, he is like the beasts that perish." The Psalmist speaking of ungodly men, says, "Like sheep they are laid in their grave; death shall feed on them." (Now the contrast]. "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."—Psa. xlix. 14, 15. Which shall we believe? "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead," Prov. xxi. 16. "For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything." "Also their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished."—Eccl. ix. 5, 6. Immaterialists or immortal soulists say, 'Tis the immortal soul that thinks, that loves and hates. The Bible says, love, hatred and envy will perish. Which shall we believe? "O Lord our God, other lords besides thee have had dominion over us" . . . "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." Isa. xxvi. 13, 14. Behold, "all souls are mine; as the soul of the father so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezk. xviii. 4. Again, verse 20, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Modern theology says, "The soul is immortal; it can not die." Which shall we believe? "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the LORD of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Mal. iv. 1. Modern theology says, They shall not burn up; and both root and branch shall continue forever. Which shall we believe? "My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." John x. 27, 28. Modern theology says, all men have by nature eternal life dwelling in them—that they are inherently immortal, that the man proper leaves this temporal house at death and soars away in conscious existence through realms of space in the etherial regions above, beyond the shores of time, to dwell with Christ and the spirits of those gone before, where Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are enjoying the blissful raptures of immortal life (or happiness) with other patriarchs and apostles—that death is the gate to heaven, and this body merely a clog which anchors the soul to fleeting time till God calls, come home, immortal soul. Which shall we believe?

The Contrast. "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have eternal life." How will they get it? Hear Jesus: "I will raise him up at the last day." Suppose men will not believe on Christ. O, says modern theology, Christ will raise them up; and as to eternal life they have that already. Which shall we believe? "Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment:" that is, they fall under the penalty of the law, death,—do not exist beyond their mortal sphere—therefore shall not stand; mortality engulphs them in oblivion.

Study well 1 Cor. xv., and you will not only see that man is mortal, but you will also see the absurdity of the mortal resurrection theory—for a theory I call it without a "thus saith the Lord" to sustain it. Paul says, "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die;" that is, can not be brought to new life, or the old one restored, except it first die; "and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be;" that is, you do not expect the return of the same identical seed sown, but its exact likeness in a new crop, the true representative of the original seed. He next inquires "And with what body do they come?" For the answer I refer you to verse forty and onward, which please read. First, a terrestial; second, a celestial body; "sown in corruption, raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor, raised in glory; sown in weakness, raised in power; sown a natural body, raised a spiritual body." Is there any allusion to the resurrection, other than that strictly carried out in the above figure? Read again and see. Not the resurrection of the same seed sown, but an existence derived, a new growth from the same original seed. He says, "To every seed he giveth his own body:" that is, its own natural product—the same in appearance, substance, quality, and nature; putting off of its animal relationship to the first man, (Adam), and a putting on of its spiritual relationship to the second man, (Christ), who is "the Lord from heaven." "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." "Flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Now to the fifty-first verse explaining the mystery of what will take place at Christ's second advent, "We shall not all sleep"—that is, we who are living at the time of, and are in Christ at his coming, shall not die, "but we," those then living and in Christ, "shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible," not in flesh and blood. What dead? The dead in Christ only; "and we," (who) those in Christ and living?, "shall be changed." "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Well, what then? When all this shall be brought to pass, there will be no more death,—no more to die,—death then will be swallowed up, and we, in Christ will have the victory.

Then, the grave can no longer hold us (who are in Christ,) for, "now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." "Therefore, my beloved brethren," that is, we who believe Jesus will come again according to his promise at the last day to redeem us, "be ye steadfast; unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for you know your labor is not vain in the Lord." That is, you know, that Christ is risen from the dead, and that therefore, your faith is not vain; labor on till the day comes. This figure when applied to the resurrected state of the saints implies a new mode of existence, connected with a new life, identical with the original in his most perfect manhood. The elements which secure his future immortality existed in his first estate—such as faith, hope, and charity, with every grace and virtue engendered by the power of christianity. Connected with eternal life, these are elements which can not die.

The future state of the righteous is set forth in beautiful language by Peter, "According to his abundant mercy hath he begotten us again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled," &c.; that is, begotten from a state of death by the resurrection of Christ. What to? An incorruptible inheritance. "Born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." The everlasting and ever abiding word of God which is the incorruptible seed first sown in the human mind while in the present life.

The human body may crumble to dust, and all its natural elements be dissolved, yet the living word assures us of a new and other mode of existence through the resurrection, beyond the reach of pain's sting or death and the power of the grave. If you will now refer to the Book I sent you, "Bible vs. Tradition," page 69, headed "The soul of Christ sacrificed in death," you will plainly perceive an important bearing upon what I have written, and which I think will prove conclusively to your mind, that there is no consciousness after death—no natural immortality, no never dying soul. Please turn to the references given in that when you read and observe (on page 72) the 29th verse Acts ii; Peter compares and contrasts the death of David with the death of Christ, "The patriarch David (equal to the soul of David) is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us to this day;" implying that you may see for yourselves that David himself is still in his grave; 34th v. "For David is not ascended into the heavens." 30th v. "Therefore . . . knowing that God . . . would raise up Christ to sit on his throne, he seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hades, neither his flesh did see corruption. For David after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep (died) and saw corruption; but He whom God raised again saw no corruption." Both Christ and David died, and both were buried in the grave; but while the soul of David or David himself, is sleeping in the grave in a state of corruption waiting for Christ to descend again from heaven to wake the dead. the soul of Christ, or Christ himself, was raised from the dead. Also see Acts xiii. 28, 29, 30. But for this, the soul of Christ, which David makes to be the same as the Holy One, or himself, would have experienced corruption.

The comments on the above are well worth referring to, by those who advocate natural immortality and a conscious existence after death. The soul of David, or David himself, will remain unconscious where he now is until the time spoken of in 1 Cor. xv. 52, "his sepulchre is with us to this day." Read to where it closes with, "Not a part only crucified, but Christ died and Christ was buried and Christ was raised." Read considerately what I have referred you to, then, [as is therein asked] tell me candidly, Did the Holy One, Jesus Christ himself die? Not a part—the non-essential or mortal part—but the Christ himself? "Christ died for our sins—was buried and rose the third day." 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. If the the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; then all are lost; no atonement; no redemption; no forgiveness of sins; no future life; hope misplaced; faith without foundation; expectation vain; "then they also which are fallen asleep are perished." Shall we believe the traditions of men, or shall we believe the Bible? The traditions of men say, "all souls are immortal." The Bible says God will not keep alive the soul of the wicked. Ps. xx II. 2. The Bible says, "And it shall come to pass that every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Acts iii. 23. The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy. Psa. cxlv. 20. They shall be as though they had not been. Obd. xvi. Thou shalt diligently consider his place and it shall not be. Psa. xxxvii. 10. A God of love manifests his mercy in allowing the wicked to remain where the justice of a broken law places them. His wisdom and goodness is vindicated in harmony with his love for his creatures; for he gave his only begotten Son, etc., and gave him power on earth to forgive sins. Of a truth, he is a God of the living: "For he giveth life to whom he will." I have heard it affirmed, and I think with some plausibility too, that, to say, The wicked dead are raised, is to charge God with being the author of sin. Why not? Let us see what the argument is. If God never made anything in sin in the past, and he is immutable, he cannot change and become the author of sin in the future, for he is too holy, pure, and undefiled for anything tainted with sin to come from his hand. But it is said—The wicked dead are all raised in sin; and, if they are raised immortal then they will sin to all eternity; or if they are raised mortal for an hour, a day, or a year, it is all the same; they are raised in sin, and sin while they live. Now the question arises, By what power are the wicked dead raised? God can not do it, for he never made anything in sin, and a dead man can not raise himself to life again, and I never heard any one affirm that the devil could raise the wicked dead, although it is affirmed he holds a claim on them. Query: Now if God can not do it without being the author of all the sin in the future state, even in hell, if there is such a place, and as the dead sinner can not restore himself to life, and the devil can not do it, By what power are the wicked dead raised? Who will attempt to prove that God will raise them? I will not attempt it; but I think I have shown some good reasons, if not proof, that he will raise them. Let us suppose, yes, let us suppose, if by any power the wicked dead are raised, must they not be raised in incorruption, immortal, put on immortality when raised, receive a spiritual body from Jesus Christ, to whom the Father hath committed all power in heaven and on earth to judge the quick and the dead? [John v. 28] and has Jesus promised to raise the wicked dead to life? I can not find it, and believe it is not to be found within the lids of the Bible. Can you refer me to any positive texts where it says he will? Please do so. The first Adam was the head of an earthy or animal race, who with their father will return to dust from whence they came. The second Adam is the head of a spiritual race, who are begotten in this life by the word of truth and the Spirit of God, which Spirit raised up the Christ from the dead, so that he was the first born from the dead, and those who believe in him and receive the same Spirit which raised up Christ from the dead will also be born from the dead at the "last day;" "neither can they die any more" because "they are the children of God, being children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 35, 36. All inherit mortality from Adam by generation; but the righteous only have hope of immortality and a revival from death by a union with second or life giving Adam.

The first Adam did not, and could not come into the class of those "subjected in hope," for he sinned willingly and wilfully without excuse and was rejected from eternal life, as we have seen, by an entire exclusion from the tree of life. He lived an animal, enjoying what such a nature is capable of, but death without hope was ever before him. He had willingly subjected himself to it, while his posterity were made subject to it, not willingly, but by reason of him who subjected them in hope. There is a wide difference between Adam's death and that of his posterity; yet his posterity by their personal sins, or refusing to lay hold on the hope set before them, may make their death as hopeless as that of Adam's.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively, (a living) hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ fram the dead." 1 Peter i. 3. If the same spirit is exercised in reading and understanding, that has prompted me in writing this letter, I shall consider myself paid for time and trouble, and I assure you I have brought to bear all the energies of mind I am capable of, to do the subject justice. I hope when you have read it, you will read it again with the view of detecting all the absurdities and unscriptural declarations contained in it, and report the same to me at your earliest convenience.

Yours in hope.

JARED HOADLEY.

NILES, Mich. June 1870.

WE need never say, I have no power to bless. Neither has the bruised reed, but, as it lies close by the river-brink, the stream may flow through it to thirsty lips. It could not be a reservoir, but it may be a channel—of fulness which never fails. But let us remember that we can only bless in being blessed—can give only in measure as we receive. We know this; do we live out of the knowledge? Are we thus receiving from Jesus himself, the Fountain of Life? Have we learned what it is to go to him, empty, helpless, nothing—with only one cry of want and longing: "Mine eyes are unto Thee, O God the Lord?" And, learning this, have we learned yet more—what it is to have his fulness so opened to us, both for ourselves and others, that we have nothing to do but point to it as we say—self out of sight—"He satisfieth?" Then we are blessings, though we know it not.

REJOICE in God. Dry up those tears. Cast away that downcast look. Child of the dust, you are an heir of glory. There is a crown all burnished for you; there is a white robe prepared for you; there is eternal glory for you; angels are to be your servants, and you are to reign with the King of kings forever. But while you wait on earth be witnesses for God: attest the glory of your Master; rise in the greatness of his strength; bind sin captive to your chariot-wheels; go onward in your heavenly career.

Practical Piety.

A deep and settled conviction that the present standard of Christian piety is far below that which is taught in the Bible, has induced me to write a series of communications upon this important and interesting subject. Never was there greater need of the exhortation, to earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints. The apostle Paul wrote to the Corinthians this language: "Awake to righteousness and sin not, for some have not the knowledge of God; I speak this to your shame;" and this important verse of the sacred writings seems to be given to us for our admonition upon whom the ends of the world are come.

The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, is full of instructions to believers, to be careful to maintain good works. They are not only good and profitable unto them that perform them, but are declared to be a means of leading others to glorify our Father who is in Heaven. One of the ways in which we are to let our light shine before men, is by our words and conversation. James says, "If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

This must be the happy state of every one who is sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, who enjoys that hope which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail. Truly, whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world, and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. The general epistles of John convince me that being born of God, born of the Spirit, is a change not yet fully accomplished in the hearts of great numbers who profess to have "passed from death unto life." They are undoubtedly seeking to enter in at the straight gate, and hope at some future period to overcome the world. They are expecting a more convenient season to make their calling and election sure, to work out their own salvation with fear and trembling, thinking that then God will work in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. Instead of seeking first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, they have other things to seek first. Instead of acting as though they believe that now is the accepted time, a day of salvation, they seem to think there is time enough yet, and when they have attended to matters which they seem to consider of more importance, they will consider the claims of God, and obey the Saviour's requirements.

Who would ever think that Jesus said: "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of Judgment," if he were left to learn it from the conversation of his professed followers? He also says: "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

I will quote a few passages of scripture as proof that "with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." "He that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile." "Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles." "Death and life are in the power of the tongue." "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me, and to him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I show the salvation of God." "Who is a wise man, and endued with knowledge among you.? Let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness and wisdom." "He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life; but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction."

May all who profess to love the Lord and desire to obey him, resolve as did David, "I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress." Ps. xvii. 3—Selected.

Identity in Death.

In the absence of valid arguments, our antagonists use the most plausible substitutes they can invent to set aside the doctrine of man's utter unconsciousness in death; so we are often met with the claim that if death totally kills the entire man, there can be no resurrection, the identity being lost; and parrot-like, one repeats it over after the other, till it is deemed sound logic from its universal use. But a moment's candid reflection will recognize this supposed deep argument to be but shallow nonsense.

Does not death kill the body totally? Yes. Suppose a personal soul to survive the death of the body, can it raise the body? No. Can it help raise the body? No; if ever raised at all, God must raise it independent of the soul. If the whole man dies, cannot God raise him without help, just as easily as to raise the body without help? Certainly.

But I am told that the identity is lost in death. Then how about the identity of the body? Who takes care of it in death? Is the soul so much wiser, and so much more powerful than God, that it can watch over the identity of the body during death better than God can do it, and thus have the body re-appear all right at the resurrection? If God can do it, why insist that there is no connecting link between death and the resurrection, except on the principle of a disembodied existence. If God can take care of the identity of a dead body why not of a dead man, allowing man entire dies. Shall we impute the wisdom or limit the power of deity? No man's identity can be lost in the mind of God, and he needs no help to preserve it; and his resurrection power will reanimate men without the interference of numerous identity-keepers. God will infallibly identify man both physically and mentally, and repair the dilapidation of death, at the resurrection morn.

Wm. Sheldon.

—Advent Ch. Times.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 20, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Articles Deferred or Declined.

We have several long articles, pro and con, on subjects which it is our opinion have been sufficiently discussed for the present. A number of these are on John v. 28, 29, and others, various prophecies, taking diametrically opposite views, which settle nothing but are mere opinions. Some are too badly written for our time and eyes to prepare them for the compositor, even if it were desirable to publish them. If long articles are not plainly written we are compelled to pass them unexamined or waste time to decipher words and characters; and when added to this, words are crowded together so as to give no space for interlining, publishing is out of the question, and the authors must help us to bear the burden patiently.

Truth vs. Man's Wisdom.

We have substituted the above name for the Campaign Document No. 20. instead of "Rich Tract." Some have thought, that, as all our Tracts are rich, it was "invidious" to call only one by that name. Hence it is changed as above.

"The Battle of that Great Day."

In our issue of June 22 we gave our views at some length on this subject: which please read again now that war has actually commenced. We wish to express ourself cautiously; but it seems as if the "battle of the great day of God Almighty" was now opening. The Ecumenical Council seems to have filled up the cup of Papal blasphemies; and the "scarlet colored beast," that has hitherto "carried her"—namely the Napoleon Dynasty—has at length seen fit to inaugurate a war of pride and ambition, unwilling that the Pope should be the only "Lord God" and hence seeks to obtain from the crowned heads of Europe, and the governments of earth, a like recognition of its Godship, or right to dictate their policy. A short time will show if the time has not come for "the beast and the false prophet" to be "cast alive into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

See Rev. xix. 20. Such is surely to be their fate at no distant period.

The present war movement, in Europe, is one of the great events which we regard as a sure forerunner of the destruction of Daniel's "Image," or symbolical representation of the earth born governments, which have ruled for their own aggrandizement, and whose rule is certain shortly to be brought to an end, and will be succeeded by the personal reign of the Lord Jesus Christ; "and the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."—Daniel vii. 14, 27.

Let us all watch and pray, that we may be found of our Lord in peace, at His coming and kingdom. Let us keep our garments clean of the war spirit for that is a spirit that leads to death.

Br. E. Wolcott.

This dear brother is still sick, and utterly unable to attend to work of any kind. Br. B. D. Wolcott, of Eatontown, N. J., writes us, under date of "July 15,"

"Br. E. Wolcott is almost discouraged: his health seems gradually to fail him. He says, his only hope is in the mercy of God; and requests the prayers of the church for his restoration, if it be God's will. Will you please make the request through the Herald of Life?"

We hope all the children of God will remember our brother and his request in their prayers. We are glad to say, financially he has no need of our help; but is, in this respect, helping others, now, as ever. For none of our friends do we dare to ask health or life only in entire subjection to the will of God. He doeth all things well. Let all our prayers be in faith; so shall we please our heavenly Father, and show our trust in Him.

Sr. Emeline Wood, Albany, N. Y., writes: I feel deeply impressed that I must write and ask all our brethren and sisters to pray earnestly for our dear Br. Wolcott. I feel that our Father in heaven wants him in the field, and he wants to go out doing good. May God pour upon us the spirit of grace and supplication, that He may raise up precious Br. Wolcott right away. Ask with all your hearts. You know Hezekiah prayed and wept, and the Lord heard him. He said he wanted to live to praise the Lord, for "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down to silence." I am much blessed in praying for Br. Wolcott, and hope to see him at our camp-meeting.

"Great Men not Always Wise."

Rev. Wm. M. Punshon is the man who determined to marry the woman he loved—viz., his deceased wife's sister; and because the laws of England forbade such a union, set sail for "the land of the free," and accomplished it on our shores. Physically, he is said to weigh about 250 pounds. He recently preached at the Methodist E. Church, corner of 22nd street, this city. Among other theological exhibitions of greatness, he is reported as giving utterance to the following cant sentiments.

We all have a gift of life, which comes to us without knowledge, and which we CAN'T GET RID OF.

The suicide doesn't die; he changes his condition, but lives still. None have existed from the time of Adam who do not exist now. The soul does not sleep after death, but is possessed of intellectual vigor, and lives.

If the "serpent" was wise, who said, "Ye shall not surely die," then is Mr. Punshon equally so; for his language so perfectly resembles that of the serpent that no impartial mind can fail to see, it was not original with Mr. Punshon; and he most incautiously refers to "the time of Adam," thus indicating relationship to the first teacher of his doctrine. Behold the perfect resemblance between the theory of the serpent and Mr. Punshon's, thus:

"Ye shall not surely die."

"We can't get rid of life."

Can any one doubt the relationship? As well might a man doubt the exactness of the reflection of the polished mirror.

When will men cease to give the lie to God's testimony? We fear they are beyond conviction, and will reap a like judgment with Adam and Eve for a like disregard of the truth.

The Harlot Adorned.

We have heard of persons that had "Fools Caps" put upon their heads. This piece of business has just been performed at Rome, and reminds us of the Saviour's words to the old Pharisees, "Ye fools and blind," . . . "Ye strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." A poor old man, down in his dotage, is proclaimed by 450 of his own manufactured bishops to be infallible. If we had no other evidence of folly and blindness such a demonstration would abundantly prove them "fools and blind." The Pope doubtless feels to day to say for himself and church, "I sit a queen, and am no widow and shall see no sorrow;" but one who is infallible has said, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

The "N. Y. Herald" of last Friday had the following notice:

Infallibility.—A cable dispatch informs us that the Council has voted on the question of infallibility. The result was four hundred and fifty yeas to eighty-eight nays. The question is now settled. The Pope is infallible. On Sunday the grand fact will be proclaimed in Rome in circumstances of great pomp and solemnity. Of all the extraordinary things in this extraordinary age this infallibility affair is certainly the most extraordinary. It is a most instructive fact, however, that the world is absolutely indifferent to this great ecclesiastical event. Those who wished to have the good old man in Rome make a fool of himself will be pleased. Those who have been looking on and laughing will sneer more contemptuously than ever. Most men will say, Rome has added another to her many follies. Few will conclude that an infallible Pope will be either a loss or a gain to the Church.

An Inquirer.

Br. Storrs: I once heard Eld. Munger advance the idea that the dead were not changed at their resurrection, because Christ bore the prints of the nails in his hands and the wound of the spear in his side. He said that Christ's body was not changed until he was raised up in the air, at his ascension. Now Paul says, "The dead are raised incorruptible;" and it strikes me that he meant that they were raised thus from the dead; but the inquiry arises, Will the saints when changed bear any mark or deformity, of disease, which in our mortal state we are subject to? What is your opinion of the matter?

A Seeker of Truth.

Canaan, N. H.

We do not wish to dispute about a fancy. If Christ was not changed by and at his resurrection, then there is no evidence He ever has been changed, for there is not a word said in the Bible of his being subsequently changed. He "was put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." Such is the record, and he who denies that this relates to his being changed from life by blood to life by the Spirit, in His resurrection, might as well affirm that in leaving Joseph's tomb He was not raised from the dead, and that his resurrection only occurred at his ascension into heaven.

As to our "opinion" of present marks or deformities attending us in the resurrection state, we have none, except so far as deformities or defects are concerned. All these will doubtless be removed when quickened from the dead by the Spirit, as all diseases and deformities were removed by the word or touch of Jesus in the days of his flesh. "Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped."—Isa. xxxv. 5, 6. No incumbering marks or deformities of our mortal state will remain. That is all that need concern us. We do not know but Jesus will carry the marks of his crucifixion to all eternity as a part of his glory, and to rejoice the hearts of his saints, and as evidences of his redeeming acts.

The Life and Advent Union.

The anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 26, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the Herald of Life and the Tract cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

"Campaign Documents."

Will our friends look at our list of these as they stand in our "Catalogue?" It will be seen they now number twenty. Can we spend a few hundred dollars better, just now, than to send them forth on their mission of love to dying men?

The Fact of Christ's Second Advent.

That our Lord Jesus Christ will appear again in this world is evident, first, from the fact that He has taught us himself to expect it. See Mark xiii. 26, 27. "And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory. And then shall he send his angels, and gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven." Also Luke xxi. 25–27. "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory."

That these texts do not relate to any appearance of Christ at the destruction of Jerusalem, see 2 Thess. ii. 1. "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." Evidently the same coming and gathering spoken of by our Lord: but let us proceed. "That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit nor by word nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." Now, if the apostle referred to the destruction of Jerusalem, "that day" was "at hand" when he wrote this Epistle; but he goes on to say, "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." Here the apostle teaches that it was a deception to suppose the day of Christ's coming was at hand [or upon them, as it might be rendered] at that time; and assures them that other great prophetic events must first come to pass before that day; which events did not take place before the destruction of Jerusalem, nor till several hundred years after.

That our Lord Jesus Christ will again appear in our world, and that that appearing is future will be seen by the united testimony of the apostles.

See 1 Cor. i. 7, 8. "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." What had the Corinthians to do with our Lord's coming to destroy Jerusalem? If Paul referred to that, we may read the verses as follows: "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the destruction of Jerusalem! that ye may be blameless in the day that Jerusalem shall be destroyed!"

See chap. xi. 26. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, you do show the Lord's death till he come." Now all christians that celebrate the Lord's Supper, either practice self-deception, or they believe in the coming of Christ as still future. They cannot believe that the coming of Christ here spoken of, was at Jerusalem's destruction, nor at their conversion, or sanctification.

Again, see chap. xv. 23. The apostle speaking of the resurrection, says: "But every man in his own order; Christ the first-fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Again Phil. iii. 20, 21. "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ." Here the apostle states from whence we look for the Lord Jesus, and what he will do when he appears, viz., "change our vile body." That is not done at death, but at the resurrection; therefore Paul was not preaching Christ's coming at death, as some say. See also Col. iii 4. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." And 1 Thess. iii. 13. "To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." Did Christ ever yet appear with all his saints? If not, then his coming is still future. See 2 Tim. iv. 1. "I charge thee, therefore, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Here the apostle distinctly marks the period of Christ's second advent; it is to be at the judgment, and the setting up of his kingdom. Compare this with Rev. xi. 15–18. "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Thus the periods are seen to be the same.

See 1 Peter i. 4, 5, 7, 13. "To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time . . . That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ . . . Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." See also chap. v. 4. "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Now look at Heb. ix. 28. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation:" or, as the Syriac reads—"for the life of them who expect him."

The second appearing of Christ will be a personal, or real appearing, not spiritual, as some have imagined.

See Acts i. 9–11. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "This same Jesus, shall so come, in like manner," etc. So certain, then, as he really ascended will he really personally come again. Compare this with 1 Thess. iv. 16. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." "The Lord himself," not by his Spirit as some think, but himself, really, personally. See also 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." See Titus ii. 13. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ." A personal appearing, surely. Again, see 1 John iii. 2. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Surely, no words could more clearly express a real appearing of Christ, and that it is yet future; and if this be not so we may despair of proving any proposition from the Bible.

Is the Soul a Spiritual Entity?

Let us, then, see if we can ascertain the true meaning of the term soul; for without this, how can we know what it is? Its primary sense we first look for. The term occurs for the first time in the Bible, Gen. ii. 7. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thus it is seen, it is the man that is the soul, and not a part of him, or an internal entity. The man formed of the dust is a soul, but without life till made to breathe by the infusion of breath, which caused the blood to circulate, producing life, and making man a living soul.

This phrase, "living soul," is not peculiar to man, though this does not appear so distinct in our translation. The original is nephesh ha'yah, and is used four times in the first chapter of Genesis in reference to the cattle, fowls, fish and creeping things that live by breathing; they are all called nephesh ha'yah—"living souls." This fact shows the term soul relates to the personality of a creature which has lived, may live, or does live by the spirit of life; and not to a distinct entity, being, or existence, supposed to dwell in a living creature, it is the living creature itself, that is, the living soul—its proper personality.

When Abraham d. parted out of Haran, it is said he "took Sarai his wife, and Lot, and all their substance, and the souls they had gotten in Haran," etc. Surely, here is no idea of such souls as men talk about, i. e., of "immaterial entities," but persons are spoken of. When the evangelist, Luke says, "We were in all in the ship two hundred three score and sixteen souls," Acts xxvii. 37, he is not talking of internal entities, but of persons.

It is said, "The soul must be distinct from the body, else what propriety in saying 'My soul?'"

If such expressions prove the soul distinct and separate in its existence, it does so in relation to God, for God saith, "My soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me."—Zech. xi. 8. Is God a double or two-fold entity as well as man? or, are such forms of expression used merely to express emphatically the personality of the speaker, or the person spoken of? Look at Jer. li. 14, "The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself:" the original is by his nephesh—his soul. It is thus evident that his soul is himself. So a man's soul, strictly, is himself—his person.

To suppose that a distinct invisible entity is intended by the term nephesh—the term usually translated soul in the Old Testament—is so palpably an error that we cannot see how any well-informed person can persist in claiming it; for nephesh has forty different English representatives in the O. T. This fact the "American Bible Union" has shown. The term is rendered he, her, himself, body, mind, creature, man, dead, person, they, heart, appetite, greedy, lust, etc., etc. Can any one believe, if man possessed such an entity as is usually called soul, a term would have been chosen by the Spirit of God to identify it, that is susceptible of so many and so various translations or significations?

Take one more illustration, Psalms xlii. 5. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him."

This looks, at first sight, like favoring the common notion of an internal entity called the soul; but let us examine. What is it addresses this soul? Do you say it is the body? But you forget it is affirmed, "the body has no intelligence or knowledge of itself," and could not, therefore, be an independent speaker. But suppose the body is the speaker—is not the language strange in that case? What do we see? A poor, frail body talking to an immortal soul, and expostulating with it for being cast down, and exhorting it to "hope in God, for I"—the body—"shall yet praise him." The body is more hopeful than the soul, and the soul is exhorted to hope in consideration of the prospect that the body will yet praise God!

Is it not both more natural and Scriptural to understand this language as the strong and emphatic expression of personal feeling? as if he had said, why am I cast down in mind? I will hope in God, for I shall yet praise him. He speaks of himself, and strives to encourage himself in this state of depression. His soul is himself—his personality.

In further confirmation of this fact, we will briefly remark on the text Matt. xvi. 26—"What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," etc. What is the soul here? We will give the true translation of the term rendered soul—psucheen—which is life, as in the previous verse; thus: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life?"—psucheen—"or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?"—psucheen. The text is an enforcement of the previous discourse, particularly of the preceding verse. Life, and not a fancied entity called "the soul," is the subject of discourse. And honesty requires that psucheen should be translated alike in both verses. Either make it soul in both, or life in both. Try the former, and see if it will make sense; thus: "Whosoever will save his soul shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his soul for my sake shall find it!" Such a translation shocks common sense, and gives the lie to Christianity. Why is the translation of psucheen into the term soul to be tolerated in this more than in the preceding verse? Surely no reason can be assigned to satisfy an impartial mind. Even Dr. ADAM CLARKE admits this, and says, "Sure I am, it"—psucheen—"means life in both verses."

The term psuchee is the only term in the Greek New Testament translated soul. It occurs some fifty times, not including parallels. It is rendered life by the translators nineteen times, and soul fifteen. Scarcely an instance occurs where it is rendered soul, that it would not have been more expressive had it been translated life, or the personal pronoun "I"—"myself," etc. For example, Christ saith, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Was this such a soul as theologians contend for? Could such a soul die, either a literal, moral, or eternal death? If Christ's soul was to die, it must have been a literal death: in other words, it was Christ personally, who was to die, and who did die, as the Scriptures affirm. Then his words, strictly rendered, would read, "I am exceeding sorrowful, even unto death:" Christ himself, and not some fancied internal entity called soul.

The theory of a soul entity in man, or an immortal something that "can never die"—as it is affirmed—is what has corrupted this solemn and all-important inquiry, and cast darkness and mysticism over the subject, which otherwise would be plain and within the comprehension of every mind: while the common notion has made it a fruitful theme of speculation, superstition and fanaticism.

Man has, by sin, forfeited life—all claims to a living existence. In this state he is visited by God's own Son, sent into the world by the Father's love. That Son testifies of his Father's good will to dying men, and proclaims, in his name, a free and full pardon of past sins, if men will repent and receive life through the second Adam, who is the LIFE-GIVER. To have this life, not only must past sins be repented of and forgiven, but we must develop a character under the discipline established by Christ, in harmony with his example, and in conformity with the will of God. This development will cost us the denial of self—perhaps many sufferings, and possibly our life, by the violence of our opposers. He that prefers to preserve or protract this present life rather than endure the trials incident to the necessary development that shall fit him for an eternal residence with God and his Christ, shall lose life. But what folly is such a course. How short and fleeting is this life, at best: how soon it will pass away. Why then be guilty of the folly of losing the life Jesus was authorized to promise and bestow, rather than endure the trials of this life, and death, if need be, in order to a preparation for life eternal? For, what is a man profited if he could gain the whole world—all its honors, wealth, and pleasures, and protract such enjoyments to the end of a long life, if that life at last become eternally extinct? Or what shall a man give in exchange for that life which he "shall find" after having lost his life here for the name of Jesus, or in the cause of God, and in seeking conformity to his will. The life thus to be found is an eternal one; where sorrow, suffering, pain, or death, are never again to be felt or feared. Oh, to lose such a life, even for the highest and best enjoyments of this world, supposing those enjoyments the most perfect, and protracted to the longest period of human life attainable. What would it profit that man who must sustain this loss? Surely it was not too much to inquire, what comparison there could be between this whole world gained and such a life lost.

Would you, dying fellow mortal, not meet with such a loss, haste to give your heart to God, through Christ, the "one Mediator." No other being, however wise and good, must come between you and Christ in your approach to God. Beware of leaning on any other arm, or seeking any other mediator. God has given no other, and he will accept no other. Be not deceived. Neither pope, bishop, priest, saint, nor angel can avail here. Your consecration must be your own individual act through Jesus Christ alone. All other trust will fail you, and but mock your hope. To God, through Christ, you must come, or you lose life eternally, and will "be as though you had not been."—Obd. 16. "Why will you die?"

THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.

CHARLES WESLEY MORSE, Manchester, N. H., has sent us a few notes which he took of a sermon preached there by Eld. J. Couch, of Concord, N. H., from the text "He (Christ) became the author of eternal salvation," etc. —Heb. v. 9. The preacher said:

"Salvation is change of condition. Every person who changes condition from one state to a better is saved, or experiences salvation. Christ is the author of salvation. He makes three changes, three salvations, or three kinds: common, special, and eternal. Common is universal. Special is limited. Eternal is beyond the first two. 1 Tim. iv. 10, 'Who is the Saviour of all men,' etc. Must bring ourselves to the Scriptures. If the Saviour of all men, must save all men. Not proper if he does not save all men. If we throw a rope to a man who is drowning and he will not take hold of it, it is not salvation; we are not a saviour of that man. 'For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive,' should read, by Christ. The first man causes all to die: the second causes all men to be made alive. As many as die in Adam, so many Christ makes alive. In the text last quoted, 'even' is as to numbers: as many as the one kills, the other makes alive: the act of Adam kills all men; we are not responsible for it; we are plunged into death involuntarily; it is justice to raise all men. Common salvation is universal resurrection. Special is beyond common. Salvation is first, conversion. Second, immortality. Special is the change when converted. Eternal, God said, is restitution, to be put as before, to be restored to his former condition. Man being made a probationer was thrown into the pit. God is to renew the man and renew his home. If we do not get the renewal of heart the body will come up to die."

We cannot say how accurately Br. Morse has reported the remarks of Eld. Couch. Br. Morse makes the following comment on the subject:

If common salvation is a universal resurrection, and salvation is a change of condition from any state to a better, must not the wicked be in a better condition in the resurrection than they are now? and how much better is it, if they come up to die, knowing there is no chance for them to have life, but that they must be burned up? I should say, it was a worse state, and not salvation in any sense. The word "even" means, or may mean, in like manner, as all would take it who candidly read the Scriptures.

Remarks by the Editor.

Br. Morse has put the question well. According to Eld. Couch's own showing the resurrection of the wicked dead is not salvation in any sense; for they are not changed into "a better state" by it. If man, by common salvation, is to be brought into "a better state," or be brought back to the state from which he fell by Adam's sin, then he must not only have a resurrection from the dead, but he must be placed in the garden of Eden where Adam was, and which he lost; and there he must have an Adamic trial, with the tree of life within his reach. Till believers in the revival into life of the wicked dead can prove this, they utterly fail of their point. If they can prove this, then there is hope for the wicked dead that they will live forever.

The desperate effort to prove the revival into life of the wicked dead only develops how impossible to be sustained the theory is.

As to the word "even," it has no such sense as Eld. C. and others of his school put upon it. The word in shows relationship. Why do men die? Because, by natural generation, they are all in Adam, mortal in their nature: this is the relationship. Why are any made alive from the dead? Because, by regeneration, or the communication of the Spirit of God, they are in Christ, partakers of the life in Him. All who are in Him are made alive, as, or "even" as all in Adam die by being in him.

The Apostle tells us plainly, how the resurrection of the dead will occur: "They are sown in corruption; they are raised in incorruption. They are sown in dishonor; they are raised in glory: they are sown in weakness; they are raised in power. The sowing is a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. The dead shall be raised incorruptible."—1 Cor. xv. 42–44, 52.

In the first three verses, we have followed Wakefield's traslation, using "they" for "it." The persons are raised; and there is but one condition of the raised; and that is, all who are raised from the dead are raised "in incorruption—in glory—in power—and are spiritual bodies." Here is no mortal resurrection—no dying after resurrection. All who live from the dead will live forever—"neither can they die any more."—Luke xx. 36.

"THE MEDIATORIAL KINGDOM; or, The Reign of Christ in the Gospel Dispensation. By Eld. William N. Pile, Springfield, Mass."

We have received a pamphlet of 96 pages with the above title page. The subject is an interesting one, and in the hands of Br. Pile ought to be ably handled; but we have had no time to examine it so as to express an opinion of its character.

Price per 100, $15. Single, 25 cents. Five copies for $1. Sold by the Author, Springfield, Mass.; and by C. W. Sargent, Box 426, Concord, N. H. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

THE CRISIS IN ROME.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

IT becomes the Christian's duty, as the representative of his absent Lord, to understand the times in which we live, that he may direct his efforts and wield his influence in such a manner as to glorify his heavenly Father in the greatest degree. The times are ominous with coming events; and the Christian, by a proper acquaintance with the significant signs of the times, may turn the events as they are developed largely to the glory of God, and thus be found faithful to the Master's requirements to unfold the light to the world, rather than conceal it under a bushel, or follow the example of the unprofitable servant in hiding the one talent.

The year 1866 introduced a critical epoch in the history of the Papacy, and the Roman Church found herself in a position where her dearest interests, if not her very existence was endangered. Romish publications admitted that a crisis was at hand, and declared that since the days of Charlemagne the Pope had never found himself in such a position.

We need not refer to the past history of the Papacy to show that her existence has depended on the sovereign Princes of the European world. She has been supported by the crowned heads; but suddenly, in 1866, she found herself alone, forsaken by her kingly supporters, and even Louis Napoleon, considered the last son of the church, withdrew his troops from Rome for a time, and only returned them in furtherance of his own secret policy. But this was not what caused her most trouble. Within her own borders a great liberal party, which had sprung up under the influence of the mighty progress of liberalism, was making demands for such a modification of the Romish system as would be more in harmony with our enlightened age and with the consciences of Christian men.

This renewed the conflict between the Gallicans and the Jesuits, and produced the present crisis in the Romish Church. But, as an observing visitor to the Vatican recently remarked, "the Jesuits had prepared themselves to play a bold game; they declared that nothing must be yielded to the abhorred Gallicanism, but, on the contrary, the boldest pretensions must be re-asserted, and the spirit of the middle ages must be revived. Hence the Papal Syllabus, which was set forth in advance, and which the Ultramontane portion of the Roman Church regard as already a dogma prescribed by infallible power. The difficulty was the Gallicans would not accept it. The Jesuits were resolved that Gallicanism must be crushed; and hence they suggested a Council, in which it was supposed Gallicanism would receive its death blow.... They persuaded the feeble old Pope that this would be the grand crowning work of his pontificate, and would make it glorious through all coming time. They reminded him that when the Prelates of different parts of the world were assembled, fifteen years ago, to receive the new dogma of the Immaculate Conception, not one of them asserted his Episcopal prerogative to protest against the imposition of the dogma by the Papal power. They reminded him how readily all his Churches had accepted what he chose to impose; and how the Gallicans themselves, in spite of their theory, had preferred acquiescence and submission to excommunication, which was the only alternative. They readily persuaded him, as they had evidently persuaded themselves, that by calling a Council, Gallicanism would be driven out of their church.

Thus, in compliance with the demands of the Jesuits, the Ecumenical Council was called to meet the crisis. The arbitrary dealing of the Pope with the liberal-minded members—or the Gallican element—of the Council, during its entire session thus far, shows quite conclusively that the real aim of the Council is to crush out the liberal element in the Romish Church, and thus draw to herself new power to enforce her monstrous dogmas. The partizans of this scheme are sagacious enough, when they view the decline of Rome for the past half century, to see that unless this experiment succeeds, Romanism must succumb to the liberal demands of the age.

It should be borne in mind that bold and free spoken men from Germany, France and Austria are at the Vatican, their hearts burning with the pent-up fires of freedom, and who are aware that should the Council pass its decree of infallibility, a fearful conflict with the powers of Europe will follow, unprecedented by any thing in the past; but they feel that if the Council proves a failure, and dissolves without accomplishing the designs of the Jesuits, it must result in the emancipation of the noble spirits who have put forth those masterly treatises in Germany and France, calling for the extirpation of the Papal power, which has always been the bitter enemy of liberty and progress, and a curse to the true interests of man. Europe seems to be awakened to the fact that the passing of such decrees as the Council propose must be followed by a great political revolution, and they appear anxious that the Council should be dissolved. One thing, however, seems to be certain: the Jesuits who control the Council, are determined to carry out their knavish designs. The Council of Trent was prorogued over a period of seventeen years, until the Jesuits had broken the spirits of the abler and bolder Bishops, in order to succeed. They may pursue a similar course with the present Council, and keep it in existence until they can shape things to their liking.

What are the plans by which the Pope hopes to succeed? Let it be remembered that the Pope has absolutely under his command more than 200 Italian Bishops, and with these servants of his will he hopes to obtain a majority for any dogma which he may propose.

It may not be uninteresting to briefly notice the ratio of representation, which shows something of the composition of the present Council. The following statistics are from "The Nation:"

"The Papal States have a Roman Catholic population of less than a million—about seven hundred thousand souls; of Prelates resident in the Papal States who have a vote in the Council, there are exactly 143. This gives about one vote in the Council to every 5,000 Catholics in the Papal States—or would give, if many of the Bishops resident in Rome were not Bishops in partibus infidelium. Still, as the bishoprics in partibus are sheepfolds without any sheep, and as the shepherds are appointed by the Pope, we may rightly credit the population of the Papal States with all the 143 votes which will be cast by the Bishops who reside in the vicinity of Rom and in the city itself. Austria has a Roman Catholic population of 38,000,000. In the Council, however, France is represented not by the 7,600 votes which would be hers if she had as many proportionately as the Papal States have cast, but by 84 votes. Nor has Austria 4,400 votes; 48 is her number. American Catholics are, on the whole, 'Ultramontane,' and for this or some other reason, the 8,000,000 Catholics on this side of the water count for precisely as much in the matter of expressing God's will in regard to the government of man as the Austrian 38,000,000. In Great Britain and Ireland also, the Church is Ultramontane; so the 6,500,000 British Romanists have 35 votes in the Council, or nearly twice as many as the 12,000,000 Catholics of North Germany and South Germany united."

What the Council may accomplish is a matter of indifference to us; for in the extraordinary dilemma to which Rome is now reduced, whatever she may do will but hasten her doom. That Rome is upon the eve of a great disruption can no longer be questioned. It is too late in the day for the Pope to place kingdoms under the terror of an interdict, or frighten peasantry with assured peril of eternal torments to demand concessions from their rulers as in former times; and this is what the Syllabus and dogma of Infallibility proposes.

A deep impression is gaining ground in this country, and especially in Europe, that great events in the history of this world are at hand. Can the long foretold downfall of Rome be far in the future? In her death throes she calls her votaries around her, but can they possibly infuse new life into her failing system? Her dreadful cup of abomination is filled to overflowing, and the Scriptures declare that she shall be rewarded "double" for all that she has done: "For in one hour is she made desolate," and God will "give unto her the cup of the fierceness of his wrath."—Rev. xviii.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 4, 1870.

HOT WEATHER.

THE heat of the past five or six weeks has been very oppressive; and we have felt its weakening power. It has been, at times, almost impossible to keep up; but we have hitherto been enabled to do something to keep our office matters onward, through the kindness of our heavenly Father, the prayers of His children, the aid of our only daughter, and good compositors.

Te following statement relating to hot seasons we copy from the "N. Y. Herald," of the 17th inst. It will be read with interest.

THE GREAT HEATS OF 1870.

The present year seems destined to be crowded with both political and physical phenomena. The re-establishment of the second Napoleonic empire by popular vote; the proclamation of infallibility in a mortal man; the most sudden and possibly most terrifically destructive war of modern times; the burning of Constantinople; the savage slaughter of struggling patriots in Cuba have been and are accompanied by an almost universal drought in Europe, the failure of crops, the most awful tornadoes and electric storms, and the most general range of earthquakes experienced within the memory of man. But not the least remarkable of all these incidents to a remarkable epoch has been the surprising succession of hot spells that have made both hemispheres pant and swelter beneath the rays of a sun that seems to be seven times heated. For one month, with only an odd interval to give us breath, the denizens of New York and a wide region of territory north and west of it have groaned in the torrid temperature of Calcutta. On successive days in June the mercury rose above one hundred degrees Fahrenheit, and on Thursday last it was ten degrees higher here than at Havana and New Orleans.

In Europe, while the same intensity has not been attained, the heat has been so phenominal as to bring continued drought and threaten actual famine. The statisticans are recalling former years of similar infliction. In 1214 the Thames river could be crossed near London by wading after the excessive heat had lasted for four months. France was once terribly tried in this way for a series of six years, viz.:—From 1528 to 1533, inclusive. The crops were nearly burned up, the rivers dried away, and while the whole land suffered from famine, epidemics broke out at Paris, Marseilles, Lille and other large cities. In 1562 not a drop of rain fell in some places for three and a half months, and the sky glowed like a coal. All the rivers were exhausted, and such was the consequent "run" upon the mills to get grain ground to flour that people fought furiously for the first chance, and many persons were killed. In some districts the inhabitants had to make a circuit of several leagues in search of drinking water. In 1681, 1705, 1716 and 1719 similar heats occurred with like results. The cattle perished wholesale and thousands of human lives were stifled out by the hot air. In 1788 all Europe was scourged with heat and drought, which were renewed in 1803. Normandy is the great rain region of France, yet in the year mentioned not a shower descended during the lapse of ninety-five days. The river Seine almost literally disappeared near Paris, and the face of the country presented, with the glowing firmament overhead, a picture that realized the "land of iron beneath skies of brass" in the awful Scriptural denunciation of Judea.

And now while a heat worse than the ordinary fury of the dog-star rages, and half the civilized world trembles in the presence of a judgment that all its skill and science cannot stay, the madness of political passion rushes to quench its savage thirst and bespatter the parched earth with gouts of human blood.

A SIMPLE ILLUSTRATION.

"And Jesus answered them saying, The hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified. Verily verily I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth alone: but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."—John xii. 23, 24.

In this illustration of the Saviour's the boundary lines of the resurrection, growing out of the death and resurrection of Christ are definitely drawn. Unless a grain of wheat fall into the ground, and its body decay, the life principle will not germinate, ("That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die."—Paul) it will remain only a single seed. But if it fall into the ground and germinate it springs up and produces a multitude. It goes into the ground a single grain, it comes forth many grains. "It bringeth forth much fruit."

So with Christ: Begotten by the Holy Spirit, the sentence of death—which Paul says passed through Adam to all his children—did not reach him; death had no claim on him; he might, as far as he was individually concerned, have lived on; but in that case, he would have remained alone; he would not have produced fruit, and death would have devoured the whole race of man. But he being the "corn of wheat," out of which are to spring the multitude, he must fall into the ground and die that the life in him may be multiplied into the many. But as a grain of wheat cannot produce both wheat and tares, so the resurrection—which is the "much fruit" of the "corn of wheat" that fell into the ground and died—cannot embrace any except such as naturally spring up by the germinating of the life in the single seed.

As the apostle saith: "But God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved) and hath raised us up together and made us set together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."—Eph. ii. 5, 6.

"But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by [because of—Margin] his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11.

"Christ in you [by his Spirit] the hope of glory." Col. i. 27. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." 1 Cor. xv. 52. "Because of his Spirit that dwelleth in you," [them].

CLARENDON KELLY.

BENTON HARBOR, Mich., July 10, 1870.

FROM C. R. AND O. A. PERCY.

DEAR HERALD: Again we will try and inscribe our names in your columns, though feeling our unworthiness and weakness compared with many of those that speak through you; yet we have the blessed truth, and do feel to thank our heavenly Father for the light that has been thrown upon His word in these days; and our prayer is, day by day, that it may find place in more hearts. O how it grieves us to hear the word handled as we have to, if we attend public meetings here. But it makes us love the truth better, and read our Bibles with more earnest love to God, and prize you, dear HERALD. Oft have you made us rejoice during the long weeks we have been silent. You have come nearly every time in your place, through heat and cold, rain or sunshine, sick or well, finding us ever ready to greet you with pleasure. No time is lost, let what will be, until your little band is broken and our eyes are over your pages to see if the family is all well, and which ones have written this week. We find that within your columns that is meat and drink; and it strengthens us to hear through you from the dear ones scattered over hill and dale, in different directions. Then again our hearts would be made sad by hearing of the trials that some loved one had or was passing through. Dear Br. Campbell's sickness is very sad to hear of. May it prove to the glory of God, and be His will to soon restore, and give dear Sister C. grace and strength for every hour. We well know how to sympathize with those that are watching with anxious care by the side of loved ones, laid low by the power of cruel disease; but can say, now that health in a degree is restored, we [illegible] hearts glad and rejoice to think of the blessed future, when the change will come, when every enemy of man shall be destroyed? Nothing shall survive that can be deemed unfriendly. No: for we shall live; sin will cease to defile or degrade us: then sickness and pain, with its strokes of fury and anguish, will harm us no more. Death, the cruel foe that has torn from our embrace the loved ones, and filled so many happy homes with deep gloom—and the cemeteries with the precious remains to moulder back to dust, will be conquered. Yes, praise His holy name, the time will come when the conqueror's song can and will be sung, "O death where is thy sting?"

> Here disease invades our frames;
> We wither, droop, and die;
> But there, eternal youth shall bloom,
> And bright shall beam each eye.

And may we, one and all, share in the promised reward.

Yours, with love to all, whom we love for the truth's sake.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., July, 1870.

MRS. C. BARNES, Wilbraham, Mass., writes I send a dollar for the HERALD. I think we have such rich blessings from this source, my heart swells with gratitude to God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, that He does give his children light sufficient to walk through this valley of the shadow of death. But we are coming out of it to meet the conquering Son of God triumphant from heaven. Br. Langarl's sermon is meat in due season to me. I do bless God for truth in these days when there is such a diversity of opinions. How blessed to know the truth for ourselves. If we have the Holy Spirit it will lead us into all truth and show us things to come. I am satisfied we shall soon see Jesus in all his beauty and crown Him Lord of all. I am very happy in view of the final deliverance. I can only add, Glory to God. "Come Lord Jesus, and come quickly."

SOMETHING NEW—OF INTEREST TO LIFE BELIEVERS.

In furtherance of a desire to do all we can for the thorough dissemination of the glorious doctrine of "Life only in Christ," among all classes, we propose to publish a series of "ENVELOPE TRACTS," attractive in style, in a neat form for distribution, and especially adapted to enclose in an envelope with a letter; so condensed as to secure a reading where larger ones would be laid aside, and so pointed and Scriptural as to make an impression and to incite to further investigation. No. 1, entitled "IS IT INFIDELITY?" is preparing, and will soon be ready for distribution; other tracts of the series will follow as the way opens. It is for the readers of this notice to say how many copies of this tract we shall immediately publish. Every Life Believer needs a quantity of these little messengers to mail with his letters and to mix with the "Campaign Documents." Brethren, let us keep the ball rolling.

"IS IT INFIDELITY?" sent post paid, 8 cents per dozen, and 40 cents per hundred. Address all orders to WM. H. SPENCER, Box 547, Rochester, N. Y.

OBITUARY.

ORR.—Fell asleep in Jesus, at Bondhead, P. O., Canada, Saturday, July 9, DR. JOSEPH ORLANDO ORR, in the sixtieth year of his age. His sickness was the disease of the bronchial glands, from which he suffered much for some three years past, and for the last seven months has been specially confined, and much of the time to his bed.

In the death of DR. ORR, we have parted with a long tried and true friend. He has been known to us only by correspondence; but this has been for many years. He was thoroughly with us in our Life views, and an unwavering friend to the last. It is sad to part with such friends; but consoling to know that they fall asleep in Him who is "the resurrection and the life." May his widow and children find that the same God and Redeemer who sustained the husband and father is their Supporter in this hour of trial.

APPOINTMENTS.

WOLCOTTVILLE, Conn., July 24.

CHAS. C. BARKER.

NEW BRITAIN, Conn., Sunday, July 24.
MERIDEN, Conn., Sunday, July 31.
NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, room 24), Sunday, Aug. 7.

WM. STUART.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, Sunday), July 24.

S. W. BISHOP.

SOUTH ATKINSON, Me., Sunday, July 24.
EAST BRADFORD, Me., (in the Lewis Jones Schoolhouse), Sunday, July 31.
KENDUSKEAG, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.
SURRY, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.
No name sent with the above.—ED.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—H. J. Sweetland, Anna Tubbs, Charles Smith, E. W. Surdam, G. A. Marble, Mrs. C. M. Holloway, Thomas Calhoun.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—Emeline Wood, Cornelia Hoyt.

VARIOUS SUMS—T. B. Stevenson, 50 cents.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

J. D. Sheridan (2 parcels), R. Johnston (2 books), A. D. Hanks.

To Lizzie A. Weaver on the Death of her Husband.

Sister, I know thy tender heart
  Is burdened heavy now,
That grief, thou never knewest before,
  Is written on thy brow,
I know that human strength must fail
  Under such mighty grief
Unless a pitying Christ draws near
  And kindly grants relief.
Sister, it seemed but yesterday
  Thy bark rode safe and proud,
But suddenly a storm arose
  And thunders muttered loud,
The yawning ocean wrap'd its waves
  Around thy Idol's form
And left thee, widowed, young and frail,
  To brave the raging storm.

But if thy bark had calmly sailed
  Thou wouldst not heard the cry
Of Him who rules the winds and waves
  And badest thee look on high!
The dangers that in life we meet
  Make us Christ's safety seek,
We never ask for strength divine
  Till earthly power proves weak.

Is God thy Father? Trust his love
  In darkness or in light;
Where'er he leads thee, trustful go,
  His ways alone are right.
And though earth's storms may rage awhile,
  At God's command they'll cease;
Lift up thine eyes e'en now, and see
  His glorious bow of peace.

With steadfast heart pursue the way
  That leads to endless bliss,
Obtain that world where nought shall come
  That makes us sad in this.
And when at last earth's toils are o'er,
  And thou hast found thy rest,
Thou'lt see the love God had to thee,
  And own his ways are best.

Affectionately,
Maria Mathews Weaver.

Feeding Hills, Mass., May 31, 1870.

Thomas Johnson and his English Friends.

Br. Storrs: In fulfilment of my promise last week, I again write you of the progress the truth is making in England. If people will only earnestly examine into the truth of God's word, He saith, "it shall not return unto me void; but it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I send it." Such is the language of holy writ; and although in this case I am meeting with bitter opposition from members of my own family, yet I have hope that in the end good may result from the open avowal of the reason of my hope, expressed in meekness and love with a pure desire for their benefit and the glory of God.

Both father's and sister's letters are often largely religious, and of course, in my answers to them I have been true to my views on the various subjects under consideration. Sister was the first to deprecate the introduction of my views in father's letters, and in a kind and well-meaning spirit wished I had not troubled father with my heresies; and thereupon attacked some of my sharply-defined opinions with quotations of Scripture, which in her mind were sufficient to settle forever the questions in dispute, but to me they were not so conclusive, and hence arose a somewhat spirited debate, and I was plied with more Scripture for elucidation than I could well answer in one letter; so I reserved two passages for future consideration. I soon found a disposition on her part to seek for and obtain help from her minister, Mr. Stainton, who, as early as February, had promised to write me; and hoping to hear from him, I told sister I should be glad to have him show me, by a "Thus saith the Lord," if I was wrong in any of my expressed opinions, and thus she would be relieved of the task, and I should probably be benefitted by a candid examination of "the word and the testimony;" and as she expressed herself very much concerned about the matter, I told her finally that I should not again disturb her in the matter, as it seemed to cause her so much anxiety, and should therefore in future in my monthly correspondence avoid any further discussions with her, unless she desired it. Whereupon, in her last letter to me she writes:

"And so you have retired from the fight and given up the contest. Oh what a coward! frightened at a woman! Hurrah! hurrah! I wish I was better able to contend, I would not let you give it up. . . . Remember you have not given me those two passages, the lake of fire and the rich man in hell. You promised me them, and I shall expect you to fulfil your promise."

With such a sneer I could not be content without fully answering her inquiries, as far as I could do it in the compass of a letter, and so wrote as follows:

Newark, June 19, 1870.

"My very dear Sister: Yours of the 1st was received on the 15th inst. I have taken a few days for its consideration, because I intend to fully answer your inquiries, and not give you an opportunity to say that I am a "coward, and frightened at a woman." Now I want you to understand that it was because I did not want to perplex your little brains, that I proposed that your Mr. Stainton should argue your side of the question. Does that look as if I was afraid of a woman when I seek through you to fight with a Giant in Israel, who it appears has not time to attend to an earnest inquirer after truth, who happens to hold opinions different from him, and which opinions have been honestly based on the same word of inspiration? I do hope, however, that he may yet find time to write me the letter he so kindly promised through you, that we may in candor examine the subject under consideration in the light of the Scriptures, and thus be led into the reception of the truth as it is in Jesus. I do assure you, my dear sister, that I have not hastily assumed the positions which I now hold, and it is only in the firm belief that they are in accordance with the word, that I cling so tenaciously to them. You have only to convince me by a "Thus saith the Lord" of the fallacy of my position, and see how quickly I will change it. I will also say, that nothing short of this will ever be sufficient to cause me to renounce the faith once delivered to the saints.

"You want to know about those two passages, the lake of fire and the rich man in hell. The passage you gave in your February letter is, 'And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire;' Rev. xii. 15, on which you have predicated that terrible doctrine of eternal suffering, or the unending misery of the wicked. Now to begin, let me cite you to a passage in the same book which, to my mind, does away with eternal sin and suffering, for I read Rev. iv. 13, 'And every creature which is in heaven, or on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever.' And now let me ask you, Where will you locate those poor unfortunate creatures, whom the mistaken theology of the day holds in eternal conscious suffering? for the same theology tells us their pain and anguish, sorrow, grief and misery shall issue forth in groans of endless woe. Does that agree with the above quotation, which takes in every creature? Come, my dear sister, tell me, is there not something wrong in the creed that thus flatly contradicts the plain words of inspiration?

"But to the question. Whatever that symbolic lake of fire may not mean, it evidently does mean destruction, utter and irrecoverable 'destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.'—Thess. i. 9. See also Malachi iv. 1–3; and after having carefully read those verses, tell me, what is left of those that do wickedly? Can the ashes writhe in anguish and utter groans of endless woe? No, no! the terrible judgment of the Almighty has consumed them into nothingness. Read the xxxviith Psalm all through, and learn there that the end of the wicked is 'to be cut down, to wither, to be cut off, shall not be, his place shall not be, bows shall be broken, shall perish, as the fat of lambs shall consume into smoke, shall be cursed, cut off—his seed shall be cut off; the righteous shall see him cut off; he was not, he could not be found, shall be destroyed together, his end shall be cut off.'

"Such I believe to be the end of the wicked, and I have given you but a small portion of the testimony to be found in the Scriptures on this point; and if you are not satisfied I can give you a great deal more in my next.

"Now for the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus; of course you are perfectly familiar with the whole story, and have been accustomed to use it as an actual illustration of the torments of the damned, and the blessedness of the saints in heaven; for the rich man lifts up his eyes in hell, being in torments; and Lazarus in Abraham's bosom is comforted. Now I don't know, for you don't say, whether you look upon this as a parable, or whether you take the words, at the commencement of its relation, 'there was,' to signify the relation of actual occurrences; but that makes no difference to me, for the lesson you draw from it is contrary to the plain teachings of the Bible; and as you have asked me what I make of that beautiful parable, I shall proceed to explain to you how I understand it.

"The Master had been speaking to the people in parables, as his custom was, when some Pharisees hearing him, 'derided him; and he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. The law and the prophets were until John. Since then the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth unto it.'

"Let us see, my dear sister, if we do not find here a key which will open to us the following parable, which was addressed to those self-righteous Pharisees. In their blindness they rejected the testimony of the Just One, though they were obliged to acknowledge that never man spake like this man; they did not see that the kingdom was departing from them; they had despised their true Messiah, and neglected the day of their visitation, and the time was come when the ceremonies of the law and prophets was past, for it only remained until John, since which time the gospel of the kingdom was preached; and now, as a people, they were dead; for they had rejected the Prince of Life, and henceforward as God's people they were dead because of that rejection, and another people, hitherto despised, were received into covenant favor with the Almighty, because they received the true message of the kingdom, and by faith were inducted into the bosom of their father Abraham. Let us see if the parable does not plainly teach this humiliating lesson to those proud Jews, and also let us see if the history of that people is not plainly written in that remarkable parable.

"'There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day.' Is not this a perfect illustration of the Jews as the peculiar people of God? 'Rich' in the enjoyment of his providential guidance, and in the signal manifestation of his matchless power on their behalf. Had he not given them, as a people, all things richly to enjoy? 'Clothed in purple and fine linen.'—See Exodus xxxix. 1. 'And fared sumptuously.' Where can history produce another such a people as were God's chosen Israel? The queen of Sheba, when she beheld the glory of Solomon exclaimed, 'The half hath not been told me!' and yet in the midst of all this glory and renown, they had basely forgotten the giver of every good and perfect gift, and were now ready to cry out with respect to their true Messiah, 'away with him! away with him!'

"'And there was a certain beggar, named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores.' Can we not here recognise the Gentiles, who were permitted only to the outer courts of the sanctuary, and by the Jews were treated as dogs, and not by any recognised as equal to the meanest of God's chosen people, the Jews? But now a change comes over the scene; it is represented by death, and yet it is not death—but it is the end of the law and the prophets; the proclamation of the kingdom; which is to the Jews foolishness, and being rejected, resulted in death to them as a nation; 'but the power of God unto salvation' to the Gentiles, and unto every one that believeth. It is the transition state—the Gentiles by faith are dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord; and these were received into covenant favor with God, as was Abraham by the same faith. This poor man thus finds himself in Abraham's bosom; 'for if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.' Not dead, but alive, and received into covenant favor with the God of Abraham. 'The rich man also died'—as we have shown the Jews had rejected 'the stone which was chosen indeed and precious;' and now from henceforth they were to feel the weight of God's judgment upon them as a nation; to be still held together, and suffer as a living people only can suffer. 'In hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment.'

"And now let me ask you to look at the history of the Jews from the time of the destruction of Jerusalem to the last century, and tell me, have they not lifted up their eyes in hell, being in torment? They have been a hissing and a byword in all generations, a reproach and offscouring to all people, and all this must needs be to fulfil this most remarkable prophecy of our Lord's parable; it has been literally fulfilled in the Jews as a people. They have felt the iron entering into their very being, and have been spit upon and buffeted by all nations under heaven, and yet they have lived, and kept their identity separate from the rest of mankind.

"Notice the 24th verse, 'And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy upon me, and send Lazarus.' The rich man acknowledges his nationality, by addressing father Abraham, and he recognizes the same by the term, 'Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime received thy good things,' as we have seen in the 19th verse, 'and likewise Lazarus evil things;' but in the dispensation of the gospel of the kingdom, 'now he is comforted,' and because thou wouldst not receive that gospel 'thou art tormented.'

"The whole parable, in my view, was intended to represent the cutting off of the Jews from covenant relationship with the Almighty, in consequence of their rejection of Christ, and the receiving into covenant relation the Gentiles, who by faith accepted the proffered gospel of salvation. It has no reference to future retribution; it is not the lake of fire spoken of in Revelation; and above all, it does not agree with your theological hell."

The foregoing is my last argument with my sister; should it call out any reply from Rev. Mr. Stainton, who is a champion of the opposite doctrine, or should it lead to any extended discussion on the subject of immortality in sin and suffering, I trust to be assisted in the untried region of debate.

I want a fresh supply of your Campaign Documents, both for home and English consumption. I have several Newark friends who are becoming interested in the Life views, and hope soon to be able to send further orders for the Herald of Life to one or two new subscribers.

Your brother in Christ,
T. Johnson.

Newark, N. J., July, 1870.

The "Resurrection of the Unjust:"

or, Eld. Waggoner's Position.

By J. C. Day.

The Elder proceeds to say, on p. 29 of "Vindication," "If we could find but one text in the Bible clearly expressing the fact that pain or torment would be, as an infliction, (not as a mere attendant upon the threatened infliction), then my position is true; and that theory stands condemned." He then selects Rev. xiv. 10, 11 as the text, and on page 30, after quoting the text, he says, "It is punishment or penalty;" and on page 31, he again says, "I say, to deny the infliction of this threat is to deny the word; for we find in Rev. xvi. 2, a prophetic record of its fulfilment, when the seven last plagues are poured upon a guilty world."

Now, this seems to me to be an unfortunate selection for Eld. W.'s theory. For if this is the infliction of penalty on any class of individuals, then he abandons his whole position; for his theory teaches that Rev. xvi. 2, and onward, has its fulfilment in the end of the gospel age, and that the wicked are not raised from the dead to receive their punishment until at least one thousand years from that time, and that the second death is the only death to which their probation relates, and that a second dying is the only penalty for their sins.

Now, this being the case, his whole theory stands condemned, and his whole teaching, as far as "Vindication" is concerned, is a fable. But suppose it is not true, as he argues elsewhere, that our condition here is an inevitable consequence of our relation to Adam, and that our Adamic condition cannot be changed by any amount of faith or repentance, and that any infliction here, in this life, is no part of the penalty of personal sins, but that all personal sins are referred to the day of judgment (see "Vindication," p. 15), and that judgment a thousand years subsequent to gospel age: then what? Why, the theory makes God one of the most unjust and cruel monsters in the universe! Just think—The most fearful threatenings that can be found in God's word to be visited upon the wicked, and that for no fault of their own! I say, "wicked;" but perhaps this is not strictly proper according to Eld. W.'s theory, for they have not had their trial yet, and of course are not condemned; but yet they have to drink the unmingled wrath of God in the seven last plagues! I wonder if Eld. W. thinks God can be honored by such—I was almost going to say—blasphemous teachings as these? Let us hear what one writer, who advocates that theory, says:

"The fearful penalty connected with the warning of the third angel now claims our attention. It consists of two things, 1. The wine of the wrath of God poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation. 2. The torment with fire and brimstone. We have shown that the plagues and the wrath of God without mixture are the same."—J. N. Andrew's Three Angels, of Rev. xiv. 6–12.

He goes on to show that these are poured out upon the living wicked in the end of this age. Here is another testimony from Eld. James White: he says:

"God executed his judgments on the wicked in the days of Lot and Noah, and at the destruction of Jerusalem, and will execute his judgments on the living wicked at the pouring out of the seven last plagues, but the pouring out of all these judgments cannot be the final execution of judgments."—A Word to the Little Flock, p. 24.

I will add but one more testimony, and that is from Mrs. E. G. White, the author of the theory we are examining, and this professes to be a "divine revelation." She says:

"I then beheld the earth: the wicked were dead; their bodies were lying upon the face of the earth. The inhabitants of the earth had suffered the wrath of God in the seven last plagues. They had gnawed their tongues for pain and had cursed God. The false shepherds were signal objects of Jehovah's wrath. Their eyes had consumed away in their holes and their tongues in their mouths, while they stood upon their feet."—Spiritual Gifts, Vol. i. p. 211.

And all this takes place before the wicked have their trial, so this is not punishment for their sins, for the penalty for their sins is a judicial infliction after judgment, and consists in the wicked dying again after they have been raised from the dead. This is "the second death, the only death to which their probation relates, and is the penalty for their sins," according to Eld. Waggoner's theory. Very well, we think we understand him, and we invite him to take a look at this subject with us in the light of reason. "Come now, let us reason together" a little, and see how the matter stands.

Eld. W., I thought you said you was "satisfied that the death of Christ clearly showed what the penalty of the law is."—Atonement, p. 61. Well, I did, and "I further say, he bore the penalty of our sins, in our stead."—Ib., p. 71. Also, that "he died in the room and stead of those on whom death had a claim."—Ib., p. 76. "God has set forth his Son to be a propitiation—to suffer the penalty of the law for us."—p. 79.

Now if this be true that Christ died in our stead and paid the penalty of the law for us, the law can have no claim upon us. Who ever heard of a government, after accepting a substitute and killing him, falling back on the original delinquent and making him pay the penalty over again? But this is not the point I am after. What do you say the penalty for our sins is? "The second death; which is the only death to which their probation relates: this only meets the demands of justice."—Vindication, p. 22. "The second death is that penalty."—p. 25.

Then Christ must have died that death; "from which," Eld. W. says, "there is no recovery;" which is true; there is no coming into life again; for I consider this to be the meaning of the phrase "second death." Now, Eld. Waggoner, there is no escaping the conclusion from your premises, that he who dies the second death cannot come into life again; but Christ did come into life again; and thus your reasoning is false, and your theory stands condemned, every line of it thus far.

South Ashburnham, Mass., July, 1870.

Children's Department.

The Stony Potatoes.

In an obscure village in the beautiful land of Bavaria, there once lived a good family, who were contented and happy with the little that they possessed, and with what they could gain by hard labor. It was often difficult for the parents to support their five children during the hard war-time, when Napoleon was spreading such havoc through Europe.

In the year 1812, the war between France and Russia broke out, and the head of this little family was compelled to become a soldier in the army of Napoleon. When the hour came for him to separate from his family, he hardly knew how to do it, especially because he had to leave them in poverty, and almost without any hope of assistance. The mother and her children clung to him as long as they could, expecting never to see him again. His last words before leaving were: "Trust in God; pray and labor; and the merciful heavenly Father will not leave you."

The mother did all that she could, by sewing and spinning, to gain bread for her children, but she was not able to do it, for she was not strong enough to work all the time. Just as the war began, all kinds of provisions became very high, and the few friends who had helped to support the poor peasant woman and her children, after her husband's departure for the war, had all they could do to take care of themselves.

One evening, poor Margaret—for that was the mother's name—was looking out of the window at the sky, and as the cold, winter wind beat against her face, the hot, bitter tears streamed down her cheeks. In the corner of the room her poor children were sitting, worn out by hunger and shivering with cold. The day before, they had eaten the last remnant of bread in the house, with the exception of a piece of crust which the mother handed to Carl.

"No, dear mother," said Carl, "if Finette cannot have any thing, then I also can eat nothing."

These words pierced her heart, and she did not think of any means by which she could help the children.

"Mother," said little Fritz, "why don't you give us potatoes, if there is no bread? Yesterday our neighbor, Mr. Muller, had a large basket full of them, and I am sure we are just as hungry as they are."

Poor little Fritz did not understand what poverty was as yet, though he knew that he was very hungry. His mother, almost in despair, rushed out of the door, went up the road some distance, and brought back in her apron a number of good-sized pebbles, which looked as if they might be potatoes. She brought them into the house, slipped them into the kettle, poured water on them, and said to the children: "Now I hope you will be encouraged."

The children were almost wild with delight, for they now thought that they would have all the potatoes they wanted. They soon became very impatient, but the mother would not allow them to look into the kettle. After a while, one after another begged her to see if they were not cooked; but all the time she knew that she had only put stones into the kettle, yet had done so in order that her children might be encouraged, and that, if possible, they might fall asleep.

She gained her end. Worn out by weeping and expectation, as well as by hunger, one after another fell asleep, and poor Margaret, when she saw that they were all sound asleep, took the stones out of the kettle and threw them again into the road. The night was very dark, and, when she had shut the door again, she went into the corner and prayed the very words which our Saviour uttered: "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" Then she further prayed: "Give my children something to eat. If thou will, cannot stone be made bread? If these children whom thou hast given to me do not have something to eat soon, they must certainly die of hunger."

Her tears fell thick and fast as she prayed, but all at once a voice seemed to say to her: "Be comforted, good woman, your prayer shall be heard, and your tears shall not be unnoticed." She arose and went to her children, who were now sleeping soundly. She covered them over with the scanty bed-clothes that she had, and lay down to sleep herself.

She did not wake the next morning until the sun was shining against her little cottage-window. When she opened her door, what was her joy to find a large basket full of potatoes and bread, and a large pitcher of milk before it! On the basket lay a note, with these words: "For the poor hungering children."

She collected her children about her, and, as all fell upon their knees, she thanked God for his kindness. While she was in the midst of her prayer, she heard somebody approach the door. After she had finished praying, she opened it again, when she found before it a gentleman, of highly respectable appearance, who said to her these words:

"Good woman, you shall hunger no more. I know it all. As I drove through the village last night, one of my carriage-wheels broke, and while I was waiting to have it mended, I took a walk, in the darkness of the night, through the streets. Fortunately, I came into the neighborhood of your cottage, and I heard your prayer to our heavenly Father to give your children something to eat. Behold! he has not forsaken you; he has made me an instrument to care for you. I learned from the landlord where I took a lunch that your good husband had been drafted in the war, and that you and your family were compelled to live in great poverty. I also had a son in the war, and he was as promising a young man as ever went to the battle-field. But he came back no more. He was a hussar officer, and he died a heroic death. I have money, and property of many kinds left me, and, as I have no son now, I must show to the needy that love, and bestow upon them those favors which I would have given to my son. I will be a father to you, and will care for your children; and I have a little house on my estate which has no tenant, and if you will come and occupy it, you and your children shall have all that you need."

All this seemed to Margaret like a dream. Her breath grew short, and the gentleman who stood before her and spoke as he had feared she would faint, so pale did she suddenly become. Her first thought was gratitude to God for such unexpected goodness, and yet, said she to her children: "I am not surprised that my prayer has been heard, for it would be stranger if our heavenly Father did not hear a prayer of faith than if he did."

The next month found Margaret and her children in the house which the nobleman had promised them, and it was such a change as seemed more like a picture or a dream than a real event in their lives. Carl, in his childish innocence and simplicity, said, as they entered the neat cottage, and found a table spread for them with everything that was necessary: "Now, Finette, we need not hunger any more."—The Methodist.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works mus be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.
JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.
GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 27, 1870. | VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 40. WHOLE NUMBER 326.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

[THE following article comes to us without a signature; we have little doubt, however, as to its author, viz: Dr. J. F. LEE, of Monroe, N. C.—ED.]

THE WRATH OF GOD: WHAT IS IT?

I HEAR it used so frequently by preachers, big and little, I desire to ascertain its true import. I am not satisfied with such descriptions as are given of it by uninspired men, and will therefore search the Scriptures, the word of God, where alone I can find its true sense or meaning.

Paul uses the word wrath in Rom. i. 18, thus: "For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness." The ungodly and the unrighteous who hold the truth in unrighteousness are described in this chapter, from the 21st verse to the 31st verse inclusive. The 32d verse tells us what is implied by the wrath of God. It is the judgment of God on the wicked—"Who knowing the judgment of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them." "Who changed the truth of God into a lie." Surely of the whole catalogue of crimes, none are more abominable than those enumerated by the Apostle Paul, who shunned not to declare the whole counsel—all the counsel—of God, and assures us that the doom of the ungodly and the unrighteous is death—that death is the sentence which is pronounced by God on the wicked. In the 2d chapter, 12th verse, he uses this language: 'For as many as have sinned without law, shall also perish without law; and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law." Sin is the transgression of the law. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." This is the judgment of God—the truth of God; "For the wages of sin is death," says Paul. "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die. . . . for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here is the true definition of death, given us by God himself. It is the truth of God. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The end of all ungodliness and worldly lusts is death. "For the wages of sin is death." For "to be carnally minded is death." "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die"—"vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." Destruction or death is the doom denounced on the finally impenitent by the Almighty; clearly revealed and ably advocated by the apostle of the Gentiles. The Apostle Paul is a sure guide—he preached the destruction of the wicked, and never preached any other doctrine relative to their doom than destruction, which is the death of the entire man—extinction of life. He uses the strongest language, different words, to convey the idea of death, that there can be no room to doubt their import. There are not as many other words in any language that can express so forcibly and unmistakably the meaning of death as those he uses—the meaning of death defined by God, being, turning man to destruction—to the elements out of which he made him—dust—DUST.

Paul speaks of the destiny of the wicked in twenty-five places. He uses the words devour, perdition, burned, perish, everlasting destruction, sudden destruction, death, perished, destroy, die. In the Old Testament similar language is used. "The soul that sinneth it shall die. In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; mortal man; sendeth to destruction." Who sends him to destruction? God. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will He destroy." "They shall utterly perish in their own corruption—they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away. . . . For behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

Now, who turns the truth of God into a lie? Who contradicts and blasphemes the Almighty? Who says he is cruel, vindictive, and that he will preserve the wicked eternally, raise them from the dead, deliver them from death, and then plunge them alive into an eternal hell, exert his omnipotent power to keep them alive eternally in a lake of fire and brimstone, and torture them forever and ever, causing them to suffer woe and agony unutterable? Is there such language as this in the Bible? Is it revealed from heaven that God made man immortal, gave him an immortal soul, a part of his own divine essence, will give the wicked an eternal life of woe and misery, unutterable torture in an eternal hell, to satisfy his vindictive justice, the curse of the law, the penalty of the law, and that he can never satisfy his justice! or that his justice will never be satisfied throughout the cycles of eternity? Where is such language revealed in the Holy Bible? Nowhere. What is it, then? Is it turning the truth of God into a lie? Is it blasphemy against God? Is it the sin against the Holy Ghost?

"God is love." "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that he turn from his evil way and live; turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die? Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

"Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though thy sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

"Hear, O heavens, and give ear O earth: for the Lord hath spoken: I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not." "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have eternal life."

"For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief." O, God is love! "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners Christ died for us. For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly. He tasted death for every man: he came to seek and to save that which was lost: he died for our offences; he rose again for our justification. He is the way, the truth, and the life." Out of Christ there is no life. Life only in Christ.

Life and death are revealed from heaven. What arrant nonsense to define death to be eternal life in woe and misery! and called, "the death that never dies." As well might theologians say, The life that never lives! Both expressions are not merely arrant nonsense, but unmixed absurdities—a pigmy, impious effort to turn the truth of God into a lie—and an indirect way of indorsing the first lie on record—"Ye shall not surely die"—but live forever. Nay, it goes farther—it says, ye are immortal! in the face of the truth, "God only hath immortality." Let it suffice to say, it is turning the truth of God into a lie to say, Man was made immortal—has an immortal soul, or has a part of the essence of God. No such expressions are in the Holy Bible. Man is mortal, a dying creature, wasting away, subject to death; and no redemption for him from death without Christ. In Christ alone we have redemption from death (the curse of the law), through his precious blood—the forgiveness of sins.

Come to Christ, then, that ye may be saved from death and have everlasting life. Repent and believe the gospel; ask God to forgive you; seek pardon through Christ; believe in Him and ye shall obtain forgiveness. "Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you" Do you really desire to be saved? Do you wish to live forever? Do you love life—eternal life? Then believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; obey him; learn of him; read his glorious Gospel, and may God grant that you may realize its transforming, saving influences.

Do you love the world? do you love the gratification of the lust of the flesh? Then you love sin, and to love sin is to love death. Then you hate God; you hate Jesus Christ, and unless you turn from your evil way and repent, reform and return unto the Lord, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, you will die in your sins. The Lord will not at all acquit the wicked. You do not like to die, yet you love death if you love sin; for sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death. See you not how corrupt and perverted your mind and heart must be; intelligent as you are, you are not quite as wise as Solomon, and yet Solomon tells us there are men void of understanding, who gratify the lusts of the flesh. And some, who profess to be wise, have not the understanding of an ox or an ass, not as good sense and not as much gratitude as an ass. No, not as much common sense as a chicken! O, pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall; but before honor is humility.

Humble yourselves, therefore, ye sinners; confess your sins to God, your ingratitude, etc.; cry aloud for mercy, and seek the Lord while he may be found. Why will ye die? O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help. O sinner, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Christ is thy help. "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden." Come to Christ. All that the Father giveth me shall come unto me, and him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out. Who calls you? Who gave you being? Who preserves you? Who spares you? On whom are you dependent for every moment of existence? In whose hands are the issues of life? Have you forgotten him? The ox knows his owner. Do you know yours? The ass knows his master's crib. Do you know your Master, who has raised you, brought you up, fed you, and now offers you pardon, forgiveness of all your sins, your ingratitude to him? What is offered to you in Christ Jesus? The hope of glory, honor, and immortality. With him what else? Unsearchable riches, an eternal and exceeding weight of glory, an inheritance incorruptible, things so inexpressibly glorious, so unutterably divine that eye hath not seen, ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man—to be like Christ the Son of God, an heir of God, a joint heir with Jesus Christ. The most eloquent being on earth cannot find language to express the glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, the gift of God through Jesus Christ, conferred at the last trump on all who love God. Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. Consider the inheritance promised—reserved now in heaven—ready to be revealed in the last day. Consider it; read the xvth chapter 1 Cor., 53, 54 verses. Such will be the eternal inheritance of the saints: the new earth, under the whole heavens. Now consider the doom of the ungodly—death—destruction—utterly perished—dust they are, and unto dust they shall return—dust—dust—they shall never see life—they shall remain forever dust—dust—dust. Choose now. Life and death are set before you, in the whole Bible. Everlasting life and everlasting destruction. Which do you choose? May God help you to make a wise choice. Without Christ you can do nothing. Then come to him; ask him to give you more sense than an ox or an ass; poor sinner, cry for help.

THE EARTH.

THERE is a theory that the earth was once one great mass of liquid fire, which had been splashed out from the sun, in consequence of having been struck by a comet approaching it diagonally, and that, according to some law, over which no human being has any control. This "splash" has been cooling off gradually, forming a crust, until we have our present habitable globe, liable, during all the process of cooling, to explode and be blown to atoms by the sea—which as yet I have never heard the remotest idea advanced as to where it came from, unless it was "splashed" from some other quarter to help put out the fire—breaking through the crust, and generating enough steam to accomplish this dreadful result; nevertheless, there is a bare possibility of an escape from such a dire catastrophe.

This was the theory of a man who had not the name of loving the things of Christ, and it is the theory now of some who have the name of Christians, and from them comes the warning, "beware, wicked man; this mundane sphere of ours is to catch fire some time, and you'll get burned;" just as if the Almighty Architect was some cob-house builder, who had no arrangement, plan, or design in his work. No, no! the great God has said, "The earth abideth forever." He has also declared, "In the beginning (millions of ages ago, perhaps), God created the heavens and the earth." Who knows when this was? And when God's Spirit moved upon the face of the waters—not fire—He found it one mass of chaos moving through space, and began to beautify it. "Let there be light," was issued from the eternal throne, and immediately there is a movement in the waters, a separation of gases. Oxygen and nitrogen unite after leaving the sluggish waters, and formed the heavens or firmament. Oxygen and hydrogen remain, forming the sea; which being called "unto one place," caused the dry land to appear. Then the lower order of vegetable life is called into existence, and by this time the firmament was ready to receive the two great lights, and an arrangement was made to perpetuate day and night.

Next the waters produce the fishes to swim and live within them, and the fowls to fly in the open firmament above them; and so the great work of creation goes on until everything is ready for the introduction of man.

God having now laid a sure foundation for the earth, which can never be moved, lays as sure a foundation for this the greatest act of creation—the introduction of man. As in the case of the herbs and grass and trees which had placed within them their own seed, so God placed the seed of man within himself, that he might generate his own species.

In the whole account of the creation there is not one word about fire: and how any one could draw such a conclusion, or even an inference, is at least surprising. But still the cry is, "fire!" and it is the watchword to faithfulness, diligence and repentance, and the great incentive to holiness among some, even to this day.

In this age of progress much is being taught and learned. Among other things we find that this old notion of fire is becoming obsolete, and that according to the known laws of gravity this mundane sphere must be, in its internal parts, more dense than liquid fire.

Earthquakes and volcanic eruptions are attributed to the action of electricity under the earth, controlled by the sun. That there is an electric zone beneath the surface of the earth to the extent of twelve miles. That comets could pass through our atmosphere without disturbing or being disturbed by it: and the idea that the earth is a "splash" from the sun, splashed out by a comet, is all a myth, and some one must find another incentive to repentance besides "fire." Better take—"God is love."

After God placed man upon the earth he gave him dominion over it—that is, the whole earth. Everything belonging to the earth was under his control. Electricity could not then cut up such pranks. Volcanoes could not destroy, but then man held the reins of the world in his own hand, and could guide it just as a man does a well-trained horse; but when he fell, and lost dominion over the earth, these very elements, which before, he could manage, turned now against the rebel man, and are become, instead of protective agents, destructive agents, to rid the earth of its corrupters. Nation after nation has been destroyed. Judgment after judgment has visited the earth. Death, famine and pestilence is abroad. O yes, man has lost control of the world; and indeed seems to be in despair. The sun scorches him, and all the elements seem combined to destroy the works of his hands, and appear to triumph over the power they have in this direction.

But there is to be a change. The dominion lost is to be restored: man, once master of the world, is to be so again. O happy thought. God, the creator, did not form this earth for nothing. Jesus, his Son, and the "LIFE-GIVER," gained by his obedience once more for man the dominion of the world and the control of the elements, so that he could say to the tempest, "Be still," and "immediately there was a great calm." In those days he was rejected as a mere pretender; but God cared for him and gave him "all power in heaven and in earth." The kingdoms of this world are to become his; and at the proper time we expect to see him standing with his feet upon the Mount of Olives, and his own flocking unto him, He having again the reins of the world in his hand, and going forth to subdue the earth. The incorrigibly wicked swept from off the face of the earth, before him, the left of the nations shall go up from year to year to worship the Lord of hosts, and the way opened for the filling of the earth with glory; once more the elements shall be under man's control, and that age will be the grand climax to which all other ages have contributed. Then there shall be no more sea, and no more curse: men will have instant communications from the remotest part of the earth; locomotion will be accomplished without danger. Earthquakes and volcanoes will have passed into oblivion, and the elements will again become subservient to man's will, and he "shall long enjoy the works of his hands." M. L. F.

ELD. WAGGONER'S POSITION EXAMINED.

BY J. C. DAY.

ELD. W., in answer to the question propounded by himself, "How then can pardon be granted, and strict justice administered?" after making some suppositions abhorrent to his own mind, and perhaps what nobody else ever thought of, certainly not to advocate such an absurdity, says:

> Only one way remains, that I can perceive, by which pardon may be granted without trampling on justice . . . that is, to make satisfaction to the law by voluntary substitution. If the substitution be voluntary, so that the substitute be satisfied, and the full penalty of the law be inflicted, so that the law and justice be satisfied, all must be satisfied—all conflicting interests and feelings must be reconciled."—Atonement, pp. 24, 25.

Now, if this is a true representation of what was accomplished by Christ's death, that he died in our stead and paid the full penalty for our sins, then I don't wonder he teaches that reconciliation may exist, or we may become reconciled to God without the atonement, as there is no atonement necessary. Law consists of precept and penalty. If we keep the precept we are not liable to the penalty; but if we break the precept, all that can be required of us is to pay the penalty, and after the penalty is paid, why talk of pardon? There is no pardon in the case; the law has no claim; its demands have been met. Br. W. infers that the law was literally executed upon Christ, and that justice was literally satisfied in his death: so thus those for whom he died cannot justly be punished again, but may claim a release of justice itself. So, with this view of the subject, while W. contends that God will punish those for whom Christ died, vindicate and clear his justice in so doing, if he be able, the justice of God renders their salvation absolutely certain, because it would be incompatible with the first principles of equity to punish in their own persons those for whose sins Christ by his death hath made ample satisfaction. A price being paid, it is unjust to detain that for which it is paid. So, on this ground, I don't wonder W. claims that justice demands the resurrection of all classes, if there be more than one class in the theory; but it looks very much to me as though the theory required the acquittal and salvation of all. I do not say that this harmonizes with Universalism; but it is a much cheaper way to the salvation of all men than even Universalism required.

But in answer to this mode of reasoning I would say, The Scriptures I believe nowhere speak of Christ paying the debt even of believers, much less that of sinners; but they speak of the debt as still remaining, and as being, after repentance and faith, gratuitously forgiven. They teach us to pray, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." They illustrate our discharge by the case of a servant, who owed his lord ten thousand talents and had nothing to pay, to whom in answer to his entreaties his lord forgave all. Nor can it be overlooked that this notion of paying our debts stands opposed to every idea of pardon, and to all those representations of a free and gracious justification with which the Scriptures abound. What remission or grace can there be in discharging a bankrupt when his debts are all paid? You say, There was grace in providing the bondsman. Granted. But when the bondsman has discharged the whole debt, there is no grace in letting the debtor go free. At least there is nothing which answers the Scriptural idea of pardon. On page 76 of the "Atonement," Eld. W. seems to imply that God could not have justly inflicted punishment on Christ without first legally imputing to him our sins, and thus attaching a just liability to punishment. But what is gained by this resort? It comes out at last that it would not have been just for God to strike, had he not first commanded him to receive the blow. But this seems a strange way of rendering a stroke just, which otherwise would have been unjust. The mediatorial law did indeed require Christ to die, and God had set him forth as a lamb slain by every mediatorial sacrifice. But that the moral law, which man had broken, and which was the exact measure of justice, required an innocent person to suffer for the guilty is manifestly not true. We have the law before us, and know from the letter of it what it requires. The soul that sinneth it shall die: not it or a substitute. That addition is supplied by Br. W.'s imagination. The law knew no substitute. It demanded the death of the identical person who had sinned, and not the death of another; and unless another could become the same person by an intercommunion of consciousness and sensation, so that the punishment would attach to the identical agent who had sinned, the law could not demand his death. There could be no commutation of persons here as in a money transaction. Another may assume my pecuniary obligation, because he can give me so much of his property. But another cannot take upon himself my person, and sustain my person so as to render him the it, which the law declared should die. This is what no power could accomplish.

Christ, therefore, could not sustain our legal punishment or the literal penalty of the law in our stead: and I cannot conceive how an innocent person could die a penal death. The plain truth is, that Christ's death opened a way of redemption, or mercy, by which man might escape the just penalty of his sins (which is death as a finality), by becoming reconciled to God through the death of his Son; which indeed answered the same purpose as relates to the honor of the law, but it was not the same thing, and could not be the same without a personal identity. Then, so far from enduring our punishment, he died to prevent our punishment. In support of this argument Br. W. argues, with a surprising degree of tenacity, that sin ought to be punished; that the honor of God and the eternal principle of right requires it. But He did not punish sin, for the sinner escaped and the innocent suffered. Peter was not crucified; and Christ was not a sinner. But it is not so that a law-giver pledges his truth for the uniform execution of every sanction. The penalty is not of the nature of a prediction or promise; but merely states what transgression deserves and may, ordinarily, expect. Otherwise every act of mercy in human governments is a departure from verity.

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, Mass., July 10, 1870.

WHAT IS THE MIND?

IT is often said, "The soul is the mind." Hence we hear persons speak of "the immortal mind." The term "mind" is used in a general sense to represent all the mental faculties, taken as a whole. A thought is a single mental manifestation, and all the thoughts of an individual on any particular theme would constitute his mind on that subject.

It is very gravely asserted that thought is not a property of matter, and therefore there must be an immortal soul in man to do the thinking; and that this soul continues to live and think when the body is dead. Let us look at this with the eye of candor, in connection with well known mental phenomena and physiological facts.

It is asserted that, inasmuch as there is no thought in a single atom of matter, therefore there can be none in any given combination of atoms. Is this sound logic? A single atom of matter will not keep time; neither a single wheel of a watch, nor any two or three of them; shall we therefore conclude that no combination of wheels can keep time? If the logic should be considered sound, facts would prove it false, when the beautiful chronometer watch was presented. So when it is asserted that matter cannot think, and therefore man must have an immortal soul to do the thinking, we turn from man to the dog, the horse, the elephant, and other animals, and behold they think too; remember, love, hate, etc., as truly as man. Then it follows, if organized matter cannot think, and there is no thought without the existence of an immortal soul, that all the beasts are immortal as well as man. Are we prepared to adopt premises that legitimately and unavoidably bring us to such a conclusion?

When it is asserted that thought is not a property of matter, and cannot be under any circumstances, we would inquire, is pain a property of matter? When we saw the board, or chop the tree, does it feel pain? Certainly not. Shall we then conclude that no organized matter can feel pain, and, accordingly, when a piece of beef is wanted, step up to the ox feeding in his stall, and cut out a piece of sirloin steak, and a nice baking piece, because pain is not a property of matter? It is to be feared that such logic would get a severe kicking from the abused and tortured animal.

The Creator has so organized living matter in the animal creation, including man that it can and does feel pain; and it is absurd to argue to the contrary. But the same logic that would deny thought to organized matter, would also deny that it could feel pain. But we know it does feel pain; and we think the evidence is equally clear that it has been so organized by the wisdom of the Creator, as to love, hate, remember, reason, and accomplish all that is covered in the term mind in the human race. We do not see that thought is any more mysterious, or wonderful, as the result of organized matter, than is pain, which we know is produced by the action of such an organization. Pain is common to the whole system, but this is not the case with thought, which is confined to a particular part of the animal organism.

There are certain physiological facts, which we think demonstrate that the brain is the organ of thought in man, and in all thinking animals. If the brain is diseased, then insanity is likely to follow. Is it reasonable to say that an immortal soul could be deranged? If the brain is the thinking organ, then, when it is but partially developed, as in the infant, the mental faculties would be weak. This is known to be the case. In infancy the brain is soft, and impressions are easily made upon it, but they are not remembered. It is like writing upon soft clay; the impression is soon gone. In old age, when the brain becomes hardened, it is difficult to make an impression upon it, hence only some very remarkable occurrences are remembered; and at length the statesman becomes a second child.

When the reasoning faculties are deficient, as in the idiot, the man does not possess as much intelligence as the dog, the horse, or the elephant. Why is this, if the brain is not the thinking organ? Why is the Hottentot inferior to the Englishman? Is it because an inferior soul lives in his body? or is it because he has an inferior brain? The answer to these inquiries is sometimes given by those who believe that man has an independent soul that does the thinking, and is the prompter of every action performed by man, that the disordered mental phenomena occur because the brain is out of order. Then how could the soul think, when the brain is dead? Who can tell? If an imperfect living brain produces imperfect thought, a deranged brain deranged thought, an infant or an idiotic brain little or no thought, is it reasonable to suppose that a man can do his best thinking when his brain is lifeless and buried in the grave? "What saith the Scripture?" "How readest thou?" "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. ix. 10. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. cxlvi. 4. "The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing."—Eccl. ix. 5. Thus the Bible, philosophy, reason, and common sense all harmonize in their testimony.

From the facts before us, we are driven to the conclusion that thought in men, and in all lower animals, is the result of an active brain. Thought is not a personality any more than pain. Neither exist, or are produced, independent of a personal organism. In other words, man never feels pain, nor thinks, only when his brain is active. When it can be proved that man can breathe without lungs, talk vocally without the organs of speech, see without eyes, feel without nerves; then it may do to assume that he can think without a brain.

It is a well known fact that the form, size, and quality of the brain are definite means by which to determine the intellectual ability of men and animals. So far as we know, all mental phenomena are in harmony with this position; therefore all attempts to show that there is a personal immortal soul in every man and animal, living distinct from the physical organism, that does all the thinking, must be considered unphilosophical, unreasonable, and consequently opposed to facts, common sense and the Bible.—World's Crisis.

From Miss Elizabeth Smith.

Father In Christ: Your child, unknown as she is in person, is no less one with you in spirit. I am young when comparing my experience with yours, who have been so long in the way. O, how precious will be the privilege when we meet around our Father's throne. O, how precious the thought that we shall be one of those who have come up through much tribulation, washed our robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. To-day we are sustaining the cross, the precious cross of our Saviour, and counting all worldly things dross for the consolation we now, day by day, find in him, and the hope, which is an anchor to our souls in every hour of temptation. A little beyond there is eternal rest in the bosom of our Father, in the company of our glorified Saviour, and all the holy who have gone before, and those who are now running for refuge, from the storms to come, in the narrow road.

O, I praise the Lord this morning for the peace I feel in my soul. I have given all for Christ; and as I think of my great gain, it fills my soul full of peace and consolation. It don't seem possible that any thing could induce me to recant my bargain. I am not my own, any way. I belong to Christ; he has bought me, and cancelled all my debt of sin, and now he is washing me and taking away the dross, and I have his holy, precious cross to carry, and he says, Child, I have a crown for you, by and by, if you are faithful, which the righteous Judge shall give at his appearing. My heart is full of the love of God; and how I feel for my poor perishing brothers and sisters.

Many, I fear, who hold and believe the doctrines of the precious Bible, have not forsaken all for Christ; they yet cherish objects, desires, and thoughts, which keep Him out. Dear Saviour help us, poor worms of the dust, to examine ourselves by thy word, and see if there be any evil in us, that we may know our true position before it is too late; and not only to examine, but to be enabled, by the help of thy good Spirit, to cast out all the works of unbelief, that sin may no longer lord it over us, but that we may have perfect liberty in Christ. Amen.

I feel as though I cannot praise God here as I can by and by. I feel the feebleness of the flesh. But unworthy as I am, I feel accepted of my Father, saved by the redeeming love and blood of my Saviour. No longer shall my strength be spent for naught, or my money for that which perisheth. I came to my Father very poor, dying of hunger; all stained with sin; and, O, he met me half way, fell on my neck and embraced me; took me home; is tenderly healing up the wounds sin has made, and to-day I am feasting out of the great bounty of my Heavenly Father's hand. O, why did I ever go hungry? why did I wander into by and forbidden paths?

May the Lord bless you, my aged father; you who are wearing out your life in the service of your master; who have not stood for worldly honor, or worldly gain. May you be filled to overflowing with peace unspeakable; and may you have a foretaste of the joys awaiting you. Praise the Lord for the grace which has sustained you these many years, and helped you to conquer. Bless the Lord, the disciple may not be above his Master, but as his Master. O may we, can we be like Jesus our Master? Precious privilege.

We'll have his love and meekness,
We'll bear his cross, in weakness,
Up Calvary's rugged hill.

May the Lord preserve us unblameable unto the end. Your daughter.

Lapeer, Mich., July 18, 1870.

Eld. W. S. Campbell.

A note just received from his daughter, says: "Father is still improving, though slowly. His mind is as weak as his body; but we feel more hopeful for the future than when I wrote last. Mother recognizes the hand of God in this affliction, and considers that He has interposed directly in his behalf to save his life."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JULY 27, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their anthorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

To Disappointed Subscribers.

After our paper of last week was printed, and the mailing nearly completed, it was discovered that our edition was about 175 short. As the outside form had all been distributed, it was impossible to remedy the disaster, and our only choice was to print the inside and send that to the remainder of our subscribers, or send them none at all. We chose the former course, and a large number opened their papers to be disappointed. The outside was very excellent, and we felt sadly at the disaster, and feel so still. To add to our embarrassment we do not know the names of the disappointed ones.

We suggest that, any subscriber who received the perfect sheet, and, having read it, is willing to part with it, should return it to us, directed, "Herald of Life, New York City." Then any one who received only the half sheet inform us of their desire to have a perfect copy, and we will supply them as fast as we have them.

Another Failure.

"Not good for everybody," is the conclusion of the Congregationalist, after reviewing the Rev. N. D. George's vaunted work against "Annihilation." It says:

We are not prepared to say that this volume is to be relied upon as always competent in exegesis, or in general reasoning, to overthrow the annihilationist positions, and convince truly good men, who have been bitten by it, that it has no standing in the Word of God, or in any sound philosophy. But it does seem to us that in general, and for many persons, at least, the effect of the careful reading of this work will be good.

—In others words, it can't warrant the work to cure—which is just what we thought after examining it.

We take the foregoing, except the heading, from the "Advent Ch. Times," of a recent issue. We have not yet had a chance to "examine Rev. N. D. George's vaunted work against Annihilation;" and do not know that we shall ever examine it, as neither author nor publisher has sent us a copy, and we have ways enough for dollars without spending them to buy arguments which we have abundantly refuted, coming from abler authors than our old friend N. D. George. We venture the prediction, that his work will make more converts to our views than it will turn away from them. It will make converts by calling attention to the subject, and that will lead impartial minds to our side of the question instead of perverting any from it. It is too late in the day to stop the onward progress of the grand truth that "Life future and eternal is only through Christ; and is given to none only such as are in Him."

Dr. Post, a talented clergyman, in 1856, then a minister in St. Louis, Mo., was selected by certain ministers in New England to write a prize Essay on inherent immortality. It was unquestionably the most able work against our views and in defence of his side of the question ever issued in this country. He took up the question in two arguments, 1st from "Nature," and 2d from "Scripture." It was published in "The New Englander," of New Haven, Conn., in Feb. and May 1856.

We have no faith that N. D. George has exceeded Dr. Post in argument. We reviewed the latter the same year, in a pamphlet of 150 pages, the advertisement of which will be seen on the last page of this paper.

After Dr. Post, appeared the redoubtable "Rev. Robert W. Landis;" of so much importance was his labor that the "Methodist Book Concern," of this city, published it, in a large octavo volume, and blazoned it abroad as a great affair; but in a year or two it died, and was "among the things that are not."

Next came the pompous "Prof. H. Mattison," with sounding words; and again the Methodists were in possession of the best that they could find to stop the progress of the Life views; but onward those views have marched, as if no Prof. Mattison had ever lived. But the Prof. is dead, and with him, we doubt not, his work against the Life views will die also; in fact, is dead already.

Last of all comes "Rev. D. N. George," a man whose piety and amiableness we do not call in question. We knew him well 40 years ago—received him into the M. E. Church and officiated at his wedding: good and worthy man, we have no doubt; but a man "of like passions with" other men: influenced by early education and the love of "good old Methodism," and fears that the Life views may "turn," if not "the world," yet, Methodism "upside down." We honor him for his sincerity and pious zeal, yet we have no idea that his work against us will arrest for an hour the onward march of the glorious truth that Life future and eternal is the gift of the God of grace; and given only to those who are in Christ Jesus, who is "the resurrection and the life;" for, "God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in His Son: he that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." 1 John v. 11, 12. Let it be remembered, that "This is the record that God hath given;" a "record," John saith, that "he that believeth not hath made God a liar." 1 John v. 10.

It will not do for N. D. George, or any other man, to set aside such a "record" by telling people that in this record, life means happiness, and not a living existence. By such a course they do "make God a liar," though it be done "ignorantly in unbelief." We trust God will forgive them, and that they will yet see and confess their fault.

If the author, or any of his friends, should send us a copy of his book, we shall notice it, if there is any thing new in it which we have not met in our various writings on the subject. From the notice at the head of these remarks, we judge the book is "another failure," and will pass away as have Dr. Post's, R. W. Landis', and Prof. Mattison's. They have each fallen powerless at the feet of "Life only in Christ," as Dagon fell before the Ark of God. Such, we are satisfied, will be the fate of all the efforts to stop the onward course of the doctrine that Immortality, or an endless living existence — which God calls "Eternal Life"—is a gift of grace, bestowed only on those in Christ, who is God's chosen medium of its communication; and in whom alone it resides by God's appointment.

P. S.—We have determined to add our Review of Dr. Post on Immortality to the list of our Campaign Documents, at a reduced price. It will go into the list as No. 22. "Man's Deltiny:" or, Review of Dr. Post; 14 cents. Let it go forth anew; specially among Methodist Ministers. We trust it is a sufficient antidote to N. D. George's work against "annihilation." Try it and see.

Is the Identity Lost in Death?

A correspondent writes us, "I heard a sermon on the immortality of the soul, in which the preacher dwelt for some time on the point, "If men die as a whole, then their identity would be lost; therefore, the righteous would have to be recreated." He asks if we cannot "give a condensed note of" our "views on that point."

We can. Such preachers "do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God." If David could say, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made,. . . . Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect: and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance"—yomeem, days—"were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them," Psa. cxxxix. 14–16, surely a christian may say, Though men die as a whole, their identity would not "be lost": the identity is just as safe and secure in God's hands after death—if he pleases to preserve it—as before we came into life at first. Calling it a re-creation does not frighten us; nor does the cry of "absurd" or "impossible"; for we have learned "what God has promised he is able also to perform"; and he needs no scholastic dabblers, with their inventions of worldly wisdom, to help him bring "again into existence" (Septuagint of Job xiv. 14) those who "shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, even the resurrection from the dead." Lk. xx. 35. It is really sickening to hear men who profess to believe God is infinite in wisdom and power, talk as if they knew what he cannot do! They seem to think they must help him out of difficulty, by furnishing a soul of some sortt hat does not or cannot die; so that infinite knowledge and power need not be overtasked to preserve the "identity" of the righteous! Alas! by worldly wisdom men never did and never will find out God. God has pledged himself to raise "the dead in Christ," and that is enough. If they were not "dead as a whole," then "as a whole" they need no resurrection and cannot have one. The identity of the righteous is that of members of Christ's body, and their life is hid in him, and when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. See Col. iii. 3, 4. As to the wicked dead, they have no identity of life; for, "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." See Isa. xxvi. 14. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." See Psa. xlix. throughout.

"Life and Death Real."

A Tract with the above title, made up from Herald articles, will be No. 21 in Campaign Documents.

The Annihilation of the Wicked.

It is satisfactory to the wicked. One young man, dissipated and profligate, said, "That doctrine just suits me." And so it is. If the impenitent could really believe it, their impenitence would become a fixed fact. Could they but persuade themselves that they could continue in a life of dissipation and pleasure here, and then be blotted out of existence, they would scoff at the Bible and religion, and give themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness. Those who promulgate this doctrine lay a flattering unction to the souls of the wicked, and encourage them to continue in lives of impenitence and rebellion against God.—B.

This objection is made up of two parts: 1st, The effect of the doctrine on the wicked; and 2d, The censure of those who preach it. We will look at each part by itself. "B" says "It is satisfactory to the wicked." What proof has he given of this assumption? "One young man said, 'That doctrine just suits me.'" But "B" forgets that it is by the mouth of at least "two or three witnesses" every word is to be proved: yet he is satisfied with one. And that one may never have learned any thing of the doctrine spoken of except what he had heard by the misrepresentations of its enemies. Quite probable "B" had "garbled" the doctrine in giving the "one young man" an idea of it which drew out the expression spoken of. But suppose this young man had a correct idea of the doctrine, and expressed himself as "B" says—what then? Does that prove the doctrine false, and not calculated to lead men to repentance? By no means. We have known intelligent persons who had rejected Christianity altogether, from the representations of God, his character and designs, by such men as "B," who have been brought to acknowledge its truths, and been led to renounce sin and consecrate themselves to the service of God, and are now ministers of the gospel by means of the very doctrine which "B" says "If" they "could believe, their impenitence would become a fixed fact." Thus "B" is convicted of a false assumption.

Some of the dissipated may continue impenitent under the preaching of this doctrine; and what doctrine will not be abused or perverted by such characters? Does the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul and endless torments lead all such to repentance? And do not "B" and his school teach that the punishment of the wicked is postponed to a future life—and in another world? Has such a doctrine no tendency to encourage men in sin? If "B" says, No, a greater than he has said—"Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil."—Eccl. viii. 11. Does that prove the doctrine of judgment and punishment future is calculated to lead men "to continue in a life of dissipation and pleasure here?" The fact is, men of corrupt minds may abuse any truth; and some hold the truth in unrighteousness. "B," then, should show, not by assumptions and mere declamation, that the doctrine, "all the wicked will God destroy"—Psa. cxlv. 20—is a doctrine "satisfactory to the wicked," and calculated to lead them to continue in sin and "scoff at the Bible and religion." We rather think the doctrine of inherent immortality and endless sin and suffering is that which hardens men in sin and leads them to "scoff at the Bible and religion." Many cases might be adduced where such is the result of his theory, to "one" of his showing led to such a course by the doctrine of "the annihilation of the wicked." The question, however, is not settled in this way. It is a question of, What does the Bible teach? Whether sinners are pleased or displeased, with the doctrine presented, settles nothing of its truth or falsehood; but what saith the Lord? That point determined, if sinners abuse his mercy and take liberty to continue in sin on that account, the teachers of that truth are not responsible for their stupidity and love of sensual gratification rather than eternal life and immortality. We know the truth will be a "savor of life unto life" to some, while it is a "savor of death unto death" to others. The fault in the latter case is not chargeable to the truth, but to men's perverting that truth and refusing obedience to its claims.

Multitudes who profess to believe the theory "B." advocates, "give themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness." His views, therefore, are not a sovereign remedy for sin and wickedness. So far from it, the probability is, that the very "young man," of whom he speaks, had become confirmed in his "dissipated and profligate" course under the preaching of "endless misery." It is not to be wondered at, then, that a "young man" lost in evil habits, and feeling that his case was hopeless, should say, "that doctrine just suits me." Unhappy youth! He had doubtless been driven to despair of the mercy of God by the savage representations of his Maker's character that "B" and his school had given him; and one ray of light thrown upon his mind that God did not design eternally to torment him, did, doubtless, remove a burden from his heart, and in that sense did "just suit" him; and if any thing on earth could melt his heart, such a discovery of the character of God contrasted with the hardening effects of the endless misery theory, must have moved him to an effort to overcome his evil propensities and "lay hold on eternal life." Possibly it had that effect, for "B" seems not to have stopped to inquire in what sense the "young man" used the phrase—"just suits me"—whether to encourage himself in sin, or as inspiring him with hope in God's mercy, which he never could have had under the horrible doctrine of endless sin and suffering. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we may fairly conclude he had a hope inspired in his heart, by this milder view of the character of his Creator that even he, wicked as he felt himself to be, might find mercy: while the savage theory of "B" had driven him to despair that had made him reckless of his character and doom.

The doctrine that "B" traduces has no tendency to lead men to give "themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness:" it is a libel on truth to affirm it. It is only by a misrepresentation of the doctrine, such as "B" and others of his faith are guilty of, that the doctrine will lead to such a result, except in cases where no doctrine would affect the heart to lead the sinner to repentance. "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance," saith an apostle, Rom. ii. 4. If that will not do it, men will go on, under any theory, to "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath."

We repel, then, the charge that "those who promulgate this doctrine lay a flattering unction to the souls of the wicked," etc. It is not so. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy," is the testimony of inspiration: and, "the wicked shall perish: the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away."—See Psa. cxlv. 20, and xxxvii. 20. Such Bible testimony is not to be set aside by the mere declamation of such men as "B." The encouragement to continue in sin belongs to his theory by representing God as a most merciless tyrant, who, having brought men into being without their knowledge or consent, is determined for the sins of this short life to perpetuate that being or existence, without interruption and without end, in the most unutterable and unmitigated anguish, and without hope! Such a representation of God is more fitting the savageism of heathenism than the character of the most merciful and compassionate God of the Bible, who saith—"Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?"—Ezek. xxxiii. 11. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

Thus the appeal to men is based on their love of life and God's love to them, and not on the savageism of endless torture and woe; which latter idea is well calculated to beget hatred to God and dislike for his service now, hence is almost universally, where it is proclaimed and believed, followed with a present neglect or contempt for his service, and procrastination in relation to the things of religion till just as they are "going to die;" and then a profession of submission often takes place merely to escape the savageism of the God they are taught claims their homage, without which they are to be the eternal objects of his "fiery indignation" and "incensed fury."

Truth vs. Man's Wisdom.

We have substituted the above name for the Campaign Document No. 20, instead of "Rich Tract." Some have thought, that, as all our Tracts are rich, it was "invidious" to call only one by that name. Hence it is changed as above.

The Life and Advent Union.

The anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 26, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the Herald of Life and the Tract cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

The Wicked Dead Live not Again.

The following article we copy from the "Advent Ch. Times." The writer's attempt is to prove that "a first resurrection is" taught elsewhere in the Bible besides Rev. xx. He is a believer in the revival of the wicked dead; but his argument disproves such an idea most thoroughly; for he demonstrates that the righteous are raised out from among the dead, leaving the wicked in death; but not one text has he produced, aside from Rev. xx., to prove that any dead ones will be made alive after the saints are. He has referred to Heb. xi. 35, "the better resurrection," as if it related to another to follow it, which is manifestly incorrect. It relates to a resurrection which had gone before it, viz: "Women received their dead raised to life again," in the past; "others" suffered death, "not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection."

The contrast is, some have been raised from the dead in answer to faith, as both the Old and New Testaments teach; but there is a "better resurrection" than this; one which cannot be followed by death. The resurrection first spoken of was good; but there is one that is better; not better than one of wicked dead men; for that, if it were to occur, has in it no element that can be called good to contrast with "better." This text, then, is utterly at variance with the idea intended by the writer of the following article. Toward the close he speaks of a resurrection "which all will attain without seeking for or desiring it." But we let that pass as a mere assumption. The article, in the main, clearly shows that the righteous only are raised out from among the dead. Let him or any other man prove, if they can, that the dead left, at that time, will ever live again. Inspiration saith, they "shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them."—John iii. 36.

THE RESURRECTION FROM THE DEAD.

"Questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean."—Mark ix. 10.

The belief in a first resurrection is generally supposed to rest solely upon a passage in Rev. xx. This is a great mistake. Omitting those Old Testament Scriptures, by faith of which the worthies of that time served God, and suffered, "that they might obtain a better resurrection" (Heb. xi. 35), we will examine some of the words of our Lord and his apostles concerning the "resurrection from the dead," with a view to understand what the rising from the dead should mean, by (1) noticing the meaning of the words they used, and (2) how they are applied.

1. The words "resurrection from the dead," or "rising," or "raising," are in the Greek, anastasis ek ton nekron, or other compounds of ana-histeemi; ana, up again; stasis, standing, from histeemi, to set, erect, or raise. Thus anastasis, a standing up again, of what had been up before, which is well translated resurrection; re, again; surgo, to rise; tion, the act of doing, or state of being. Anastasis, or resurrection, is not a rising merely, but a rising again, a re-rising. This is a resurrection of the dead, and there is a resurrection from the dead—ek ton nekron, what does it mean?

Ek, out (of, or from), governs the genitive. This word ek (or ex before a vowel) is used in such English words as "express," press, ex, out. "Extract," tracto, to draw, ex, out, etc. Thus the English scholar can see the meaning of ek or ex.

Ton is the article, in the genitive plural, meaning of (or from) the nekron, genitive plural of nekros, (the) dead. Ton nekron, of, (or from) the dead (bodies, or persons, or ones). Nekros, dead, is used in such words as necropolis, nekros, dead; polis, city; and necromancy, nekros, dead; manteia, prophecy.

Thus the anastasis ek ton nekron is the re-rising out of the dead (ones). It is generally translated "from the dead," which conveys the meaning, but is often misunderstood as if it read "from" the state of "the dead," or in effect, "from death." This is surely unwarranted; for had the inspired writers intended to say "from death"—ek thanatou—they no doubt would have done it, as in Heb. v. 7. Thanatos is the word for death, not nekros, which means a dead one. Nekros, with ek, occurs about thirty-six times in the New Testament.

2. How is it applied? It occurs first in Matt. xvii. 9, and its parallel, Mark ix. 9, 10. Ek nekron anastee—"Be risen again from the dead," and is applied to the resurrection of Jesus, as it is in about thirty instances, and translated "from the dead." It is a fact that the resurrection of Jesus was out from the dead ones; it was not a resurrection of the dead (ones, plural). It is never called so. But he is always said to have risen ek nekron out of (or from) the dead (ones). Thus his resurrection exemplifies what the rising from the dead means.

Lazarus, also, was raised ek nekron "from the dead" (John xii. 1, 9); and this also illustrates the meaning as above defined. All the dead did not rise with Lazarus; he rose out from the dead.

The Lazarus in the parable (Luke xvi. 30, 31), had the rich man's request been granted, and he sent to warn the five brethren, would have "rose from the dead," ek nekron anastee.

Having found what the words mean, and that their application some thirty-four times to events in the past exemplifies, illustrates, and supports that meaning, we proceed to notice an event in the future, which is described by the same words, by our Lord, in Luke xx. 35: "They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world [tou aionos], and the resurrection [tees anastaseos] from the dead [tees ek nekron], neither marry, . . . neither can they die any more, . . . and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

The resurrection here spoken of is [tees ek nekron] that out of the dead; to obtain it they must "be accounted worthy," and the subjects of it "are the children of God;" they have attained unto "the adoption, to wit: the redemption of the body" (Rom. viii. 23), and they are immortal, "neither can they die any more." The class thus described rise ek nekron, out of (or from) the dead ones: if all rose at the same time there could be none to rise from.

Paul, in Phil. iii. 8–15, speaks of the same event as "the prize" for which he reached forth, and pressed toward the mark; for which he suffered the loss of all things, that he might win Christ, and know him, and "the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I may attain unto the exanastasin ton nekron, out-rising from the dead, as the Greek Text. Recept. reads: but more reliable versions read exanastasin teen ek nekron, out-rising out from the dead—having the ek, out, repeated, as if to make it impossible to state what resurrection he referred to. And yet it is rendered in the English translation—"the resurrection of the dead," as if Paul strove if "by any means he might attain unto" that to which all will attain, without either seeking for or desiring it. Paul neither strove needlessly, nor for a myth. He knew that only the "saints" "and faithful in Christ Jesus" are "predestinated" unto "the adoption of children," "to wit: the redemption of the body" "from the bondage of corruption;" he knew that none but those "accounted worthy" "shall obtain" "the resurrection from the dead" "in incorruption."

Jesus, and his apostle Paul, agree that there is a resurrection from the dead, the prize to be won by those who run so as to obtain it. The church has lost sight of it, and even spoken of it as heresy, some making the first resurrection conversion, others, the soul going to heaven at death; all alike losing sight of the plain, simple, literal meaning of the words, and consequently ignoring a prominent part of the Christian's hope—the resurrection from the dead, in immortality (or an equivalent change), at the coming of the Lord.

To attain this prize we must be counted worthy; we must press toward the mark; and be found in Christ; having his righteousness. "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded."

A. Armour.

Tamarac, Ill.

The European War.

We should be undertaking an impossible task to give our readers all the reports and conjectures concerning the hostile aspects of of affairs present, and likely to grow out of the warlike attitude of France and Prussia. The general news they will get from the secular papers before ours would reach them. The best summing up of prospects and possibilities we have seen we find in the "New York Herald" of the 24th inst, of which the following is the most interesting part; and,- without intending it, hints at the rising of the "morning star"—which we call the advent of the Prince of Peace—"never again to go down." That paper speaks as follows:

It is impossible to speak too highly of the French army. In point of bravery it is second to no army in the world. That its chances are good we cannot deny. At the same time we cannot close our eyes to the fact that France has more to lose than Germany—that Napoleon has more to lose than King William. It is not possible for any Power or combination of Powers to keep Germany disunited or throw her out of the pathway of progress. Even if Prussia were defeated it would not be possible for France, or for France with all the Powers at her back, to dismember the Fatherland. It is not possible to make South Germany French. A French victory might check the progress of German unity, but it would only be for a little. There is a gulf between the Germans and the French, between the Teutons and the Latins, that no French triumph or European artifice can bridge. It is too deep. It is too wide. Should Prussia win, should Prussia be successful in driving France back upon herself, hurling the legions of the second empire homeward demoralized, as after Leipsic and Waterloo, how heavy would be the blow to France, how ruinous to the House of Bonaparte! If Napoleon wins, France will unquestionably honor him and take more kindly than ever to his house. It will be at least a less difficult matter for his son to succeed. But if he should not win, republicans, Orleanists, legitimists and not a few Bonapartists would unite against him. It requires no great effort of imagination to picture to the mind another abdication, another exile, another restoration. The first fruit of an invasion of France in such circumstances as those we have described would most certainly be "Down with the Banapartes!"

There are conceivable circumstances in which this war might, nay, in which of necessity it would assume a European character. Let us suppose that France is successful, that in battle after battle she beats Prussia down, that she has firmly established herself in the very heart of Germany, is it conceivable that the neighboring Powers will look passively on? It is not conceivable. Russia could not. Great Britain would not. Austria might be tempted by some magnificent offer to take the side of France. France in such a case would be strong enough to compel the neutrality or the obedience of the population of the south. It is not, however, to be denied that another coalition, sustained by English gold, would reduce the pride and restore the dimensions of France. There is nothing which the European nations so much dread as a conquering and triumphant France. Nor is there anything on which the European nations are more agreed than this—that no such France shall be allowed to exist. A European war, another grand congress at Vienna or Berlin or Paris or London, a fresh bundle of treaties, a reconstruction of the map of Europe, and possibly a patched up peace, to last for some ten years. Such are some of the possibilities which arise in the mind as one reflects on the present situation of things on the European Continent. While we write a cable despatch reaches us to the effect that the attitude of Russia is considered doubtful; that Austria is troubled by the course Bavaria has taken, and that Great Britain is putting both her army and navy on a war footing. Coming events cast their shadows before.

We cannot conclude this article without once again expressing our regret that in this late age of the world such a war—a war that threatens to be gigantic and destructive beyond any war in all the past—should be a possibility. Those who still indulge the fond hope that better times are in store for humanity may gather some consolation from the thought that good sometimes grows out of evil. It is not impossible that out of this chaos, another cosmos may come, and that through the darkness and the tempest, the morning star may be seen—that morning star which shall never again go down upon the world's sorrows. So may it be! Meanwhile we must regret that ambition and bad passions rule.

La Fayette Norris, Campton, Iowa, writes that he is corresponding with persons in different places, and sending them tracts with considerable success. Some receive his communications favorably. He thinks he could accomplish more if he had more tracts. He says:

"I believe it is a good way to spread the truth, to write to our relatives and friends. If a majority of Life believers would do this, and then send them Campaign Documents, much good would be the result."

Much good has been done in many places by the course Br. Norris speaks of. If friends cannot write, let them send the Campaign Documents alone. One man, a Baptist preacher, three or four years ago, was waiting at a Livery Stable, and a man drove in, and in the bottom of his wagon lay a tract: his curiosity led him to look at it. It was our Campaign Document—"The Doom of the Ungodly." That tract led him to inquire for the author, and to an examination of the subject, resulting in his conversion to the Life views, and now gives not less than $100 a year to help on this glorious truth. Take courage, friends, and work on.

Mormonism.

"Life in Utah; or the Mysteries and Crimes of Mormonism; being an exposé of their secret rites and ceremonies, with a full and authentic history of Polygamy and the Mormon sect, from its origin to the present time;" by J. H. Beadle, editor of the "Salt Lake Reporter," is the title of a valuable work just issued by the National Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

This is a work of 540 pages octavo. We have received a copy of it from the publishers. It cannot fail to interest, while it shocks the reader. If there were as many devils as orthodoxy claims, we should think they exhausted all their madness and folly in producing such a system. How men and women with one grain of reason left could be drawn into it, is a mystery to us. That it is founded in villainy and blasphemy, and carried on in the same spirit, is clear, if the representations of this volume are reliable. We have read and examined the work pretty thoroughly, and see no reason to doubt the correctness of the author's statements.

The work shows how Joe Smith and Brigham Young have been enabled to deceive and cheat their followers; how by leading them on from crime to crime, and enticing them with licentious baits, they have succeeded in maintaining their influence over them; and treats of the Mormon religion, its infamous and heathenish character, its multitude of gods, its abominable doctrines and practices, revealing many strange and outrageous ceremonies. The Endowment or initiation ceremonies, show how obscene and disgusting they are; how female modesty is outraged in them, and how licentiousness is taught as a part of their religious creed.

This work gives a full and authentic account of their degraded social condition, their blasphemous rites and ceremonies, their sacrilegious doctrines and practices, and is a thrilling and startling account of licentiousness and crime.

The book is sold only by subscription. Agents are wanted in every county.

A Voice from New Hampshire.

Br. Storrs: As voices are being heard from different parts of the country, and even from across the ocean, I thought perhaps the readers of the Herald would be interested in hearing a voice from N. H. A limited number of them will doubtless remember the writer of this as the individual who some five years since discarded the Life views, and wrote a very unwise letter to the "World's Crisis," a part only of which appeared in its columns; and I have always felt extremely grateful to Br. Grant for withholding a part of it. Enough, however, did appear to draw from Br. G. W. Denny a scathing rejoinder in the columns of the Herald; which I have never forgotten although long since forgiven. In this connection, also, I might mention the Editor of the Herald, D. S. Holt, and others; but Br. Denny's was the unkindest cut of all. I trust, however, I learned a lesson, and a very useful one, by which I shall profit as long as past experiences may be profitable to me. I have long had an ardent desire to meet with Bro. Denny, and the Lord willing, I hope to see him and others of like faith at the coming anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union."

I can heartily indorse the sentiment, and join in singing these very suggestive lines,

> "We want no cowards in our ranks
> That will their colors fly;
> We call for valiant hearted men,
> Who are not afraid to die."

I can truly rejoice also in the hope of Life through Christ alone; and I bless the name of our heavenly Father that through his grace we may obtain mercy, find forgiveness of sin, receive the adoption of sons, and be saved in life with the King of the World.

In regard to the "cause we love," here in N. H., there is apparently much opposition existing: but a spirit of meekness, forbearance and long-suffering will accomplish much where harshness and bigotry will accomplish nothing.

Brn. John Quimby, D. S. Holt, and myself, are the only preachers in the State, that I am aware of, who are believers in the Life theme. Perhaps my erratic course and unhappy experience may have produced an effect upon my mind, and much of the prejudice of which I have spoken may only exist in fancy.

I am led to make this remark from the fact that the N. H. Advent Conference, of which I am a member, have ever cared for me tenderly, and loved me with a practical, substantial brotherly love, which is written upon my heart in characters that will never be erased, however much of opposition I may meet from them in regard to my faith. But it is truly a source of grief to me that we must so widely differ in sentiment.

There are a goodly number in this place who are firm in the faith. The following extracts from a letter I received a short time since from Br. John Roberts, of Strafford, N. H., may be suggestive of how the cause is progressing in some places in this region. Br. Roberts in an old '43 veteran. Under date of June 27, he writes,

"Dear Brother Bryant: You no doubt have seen the appointments for this place since you were here. Br. —— was here and preached: the chief of his message was against the Non-Resurrectionists. He said, it was a trap of the devil, and produced division wherever it went. He gave us some solemn warnings against believing such stuff.

"Yesterday Bro. —— preached here, and he gave us the same faithful warning. Now, Bro. Bryant, I am sure the Lord never sent them here with that message; they must, I think, been sent by some one else. It seems there are a few men that are not willing to trust the Lord to take care of us in this place. I don't know why we should not have the right to believe what we think the word of the Lord teaches. In regard to that pamphlet, [Life from the Dead, that I left with him to read, it has done good service; and with others that Bro. R. has circulated is still at work], I read it through; then wife and mother read the most of it; then my son, Tobias, gave it a thorough reading, and we think it looks like truth.

"I then sent to that dear old Bro. Storrs, and he sent me the Herald of Life and a bundle of tracts, and I have been having a feast, and imparting to others. I intend to send for more soon.

"The most of the Brethren and Sisters are anxious to read and hear on the subject. We are getting hungry for the word of Life.

"Now we want to know if you have not something more for us from the same piece we had when you were here before." [I preach to them July 31.]

Since receiving the above, I passed through the place and find the sentiments expressed in Bro. Roberts' letter much more widely diffused through the community than represented by him. Surely nothing can be done against the truth, but for it. Yours in hope of Life.

H. M. Bryant.

Northwood Narrows. N. H.

It was a wise saying among the ancients, that the way to vice lies down hill. If you take but a few steps, the motion becomes so impetuous and violent that it is almost impossible to resist it.

Knowing the Truth is Conditional.

By Helen Robertson.

"As he [Jesus] spake these words, many believed on him. Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John viii. 30–32.

Here we see, being disciples indeed, knowing the truth, and the consequent liberty arising from the knowledge of the truth, all depend on one thing. What is it? Those Jews have believed on Jesus. What more do they need? Let us see. Jesus says, "If ye continue in my word." What makes him speak thus? Those Jews have believed. Are they not safe now? Jesus knew from the first what was in man, and he had an experience in the sixth chapter, so he could speak out, and admonish those Jews.

In the beginning of the sixth chapter he had many disciples. They believed on him; they followed him; they listened to many sayings from his lips; but, by and by, as he was teaching, they exclaimed, "This is an hard saying; who can hear it?" What is the matter? Has not Jesus been preaching something he ought not? that the disciples ought not to hear? Had he not better have kept still on that hateful non-resurrection? It troubles the disciples now, and it troubled them then; so much so, that they "went back and walked no more with him." Undeniably it was this very rock on which those disciples split. Who can deny that Jesus preached conditional resurrection—conditional life? The conditions were, being in him, eating his flesh and drinking his blood; continuing in his word; and the result, "I will raise him up at the last day."

Those disciples, for they were disciples, in John vi., would not accept Jesus as the resurrection and the life. At this point, their power to know the truth was cut off. They walked no more with Jesus; they did not continue in his word; they went off by themselves. Hence, Jesus admonished those in chapter viii., to continue in his word, and deem nothing too hard which it teaches.

It is the Spirit of God in man that teaches him to know the things of God. But the Spirit and the word go together; so if we reject the word we cannot have the Spirit; and if we reject the Spirit, the word can do us no good. In thus rejecting what we may at first sight think an hard saying, we do not continue in the word; we lose the Spirit out of our hearts, and thenceforward are unable to know the truth. Lord help us all.

Racine, Wis.

From Maria M. Weaver.

Dear Pilgrims: How goes the battle? There are a great many discouragements, and yet much to gladden us on our way. It makes us sorrowful, indeed, to see those who professed a superior knowledge of the truth departing into error. But the Bible says, that in the last days, "some shall depart from the truth," and we must not be discouraged, for their so doing only proves the Bible true. And when they fall, we should examine and see if we are on the rock, so that flattery, ease, honor, or any other consideration shall have no power to turn us aside.

God always tries his people. We all have a chance some time in our experience to prove which we love most, the gospel of Jesus Christ or something else. May we be willing to bear the cross, connected with the gospel, and willing to suffer all of want or humiliation that cross may bring. God knows those who have in truth "left all to follow" Him, and will not forsake them ever.

Last spring we had a chance to know, as often before, which we loved best, the gospel or this world. We had taken a farm on shares, but the owner broke his promise, and his wife told the neighbors they "wouldn't have people on the farm that believe such awful doctrines." Well, it threw us adrift again, disarranged our business calculations, made the summer a harder one for us; but if the intelligent young man who embraced the gospel, and started to serve God can only reach the kingdom, we are willing to bear yet more.

Were it not for the hope of life in a better world, I should often sink in discouragement. But the light of a future world shines on my pathway, and I go on singing when otherwise all would be sadness.

There is in reality no cause for discouragement. Jesus loves us, guides and protects us. God knows all our wants and woes, and has made us many precious promises, so that in all things we may be qualified for the journey through this mortal vale.

O how glad I shall be to get over on to the new earth! Hallelujah! here they come, fathers, mothers, husbands, wives, children, small and great, come home. Meet to part no more. No more sorrow, pain or death. No more tears and groans. Nothing more to disturb our joy and everlasting rest. Truly,

> "We shall have a joyful day
> When the King of kings comes!"

Are any weak and fainting? O, be strong. God's arm will sustain you, though those we have confidence in may fall, God's word will stand. Trust in God, but "put not your trust in man."

Your sister, sighing for home.

Feeding Hills, Mass.

From Eld. Wm. P. Shockey.

Br. Storrs: I was very unwell for the last four weeks of my stay near Tipton; with much pain I spoke the last four, first days. My school was afflicted with whooping cough, which, strange as it may seem, I, though 55 years old, contracted, and evidently have been very bad with it all that time. I strove with all my energy to close my labors of thirteen weeks, and succeeded with a very interesting and satisfactory close of school term. Most of my patrons attended the close, and were delighted with the manifest improvement of their children. Indeed, it was clear that I had friends on account of my teaching, many of whom I had not on account of the hope of Israel.

Well, I praise our God that twelve noble persons were so won to the faith of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom of our Lord, that they yielded obedience to the faith, being immersed in the name of the Lord. They behold that the witnesses of the gospel and the house of Cornelius were immersed in the Holy Spirit; that God bore them witness that he had made choice that the Gentiles should hear the word of the gospel and live.—Acts xv. That when they had poured out on them this miraculous power to bear witness, they obeyed Peter, when he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; for as many of us as have been baptized into Jesus Christ have put on Christ. "If Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. iii. 26–29.

We held Bible class every Saturday, p. m., in prayer and much anxiety to learn of the Lord's word. On the last first day we had a large audience to hear of us two lessons delivered to the world. At 5 o'clock, p. m., twelve of us assembled at Br. W. H. Ford's, imitating our Lord, who sent two of the disciples to procure a house where he might eat the passover with his disciples. We pledged ourselves to the cause of God. Rejoice in the words, "I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine till I drink it new in my Father's kingdom." If he had designed them to do this every first day, he was with them six first days after his resurrection. Why not do it once with them? But if it were annual, then he could not stay long enough to eat with them.

We took the parting hand in prayers and many tears. God save them and us to the day to eat with him anew in the kingdom.

Aspinwall, Neb., July 15, 1870.

From W. H. H. McAllister.

Br. Storrs:—According to appointment I went to Hinesburgh last Sunday. I found our friends still true to the grand doctrines we believe; but they have had no preaching since last winter. They had made arrangements for me to speak in the Congregational Church in the afternoon. In the forenoon, I attended the service in this church. It happened to be a union service of the Methodist and Congregationalist congregations, with a sermon from an agent of the American Bible Society.

When I saw such an array of clergymen before me, with the possibility that any or all of them might be present in the afternoon, I must confess that I wished, for the time, that our friends had made different arrangements: but I soon made up my mind that I would not fear the face of man. When the time for our meeting arrived the clergymen had gone in other directions and I had not the difficulty that I had feared. We had a good audience, many of the Congregationalists and Baptists being present. My subject was, "God's plan of salvation," as suggested by the inquiry of the jailor, "What must I do to be saved?" I spoke for an hour with a good degree of freedom, and tried to show what we are to be saved from, how we are to be saved, what it is to be saved, the reasonableness of the plan, and the desirability of salvation.

My prayer is that some good may result in the name of the Master. Yours in the Vineyard.

St. Albans, Vt., July 20, 1870.

From P. C. Davis.

Geo. Storrs, Dear Sir: Allow me to trouble you with a few lines. I wrote you last summer from Nevada City, Missouri, for tracts; which I received, and for which you have my best wishes. You also sent me sixteen numbers of the "Herald of Life," for which I still feel myself indebted to you. It was my intention to send you the subscription price, and have the paper sent the full year; but as I had no settled home, I could not conveniently do so. I now inclose two dollars, for which please mail to my father, Thomas Davis, the Herald of Life. I have no doubt, but he will become one of the many readers of the paper, and one of the advocates of the "Life views."

In conclusion, I must say, that I feel that I have gained much light from your tracts. I have perused them thoroughly in connection with the Bible. I still read them. Some say, they "have given all away." I pass mine to those who will read them, but I wish to keep them. I regard them as a treasure.

Since I began to study for myself, I see things quite different from what I did before. Orthodox preachers tell us, that Christ has promised as soon as we give our hearts to him, he will come and set up his kingdom therein. I haven't found it in the Bible. Some say, that at the resurrection, soul and body are to be re-united. Tradition may say so; but so far as I have read the word of God, I have not seen any such language.

I heard an active member of the M. E. Church remark that, she believed in a lake of fire, where the wicked would burn eternally, but did not think that God was the author of it; but that it was the work of the devil! A grand thing, to be sure. The devil prepared such a place for himself! Who was first, God or the devil? Christ said, Matt. xxv. 41, depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels.

Prejudice and ignorance have much to do with churches, at this age of the work.

I am fully satisfied that all this confusion about going to heaven at death, and the eternal torment of the wicked, is not taught in God's word. Eternal death, to one class; and eternal life, to the other, is most emphatically the teaching of the Bible.

Corydon, Ind., July 10, 1870.

The European War.

Among the various statements made by political and clerical men as to the causes and objects of the present war in Europe, we have seen nothing so near the truth, in our opinion, as the following in a sermon by the "Rev. Dr. Boynton," in Washington, D. C. It is thus reported in the "N. Y. Herald" of last week:

At the Central Congregational church the Rev. Dr. Boynton preached an eloquent sermon from Matt. xvi. 3, "But can ye not discern the signs of the times?" After explaining the cause of this rebuke to the rulers at Jerusalem, the preacher proceeded to apply it to the present European war. Events were passing in the world which the world seemed not to discern. It was generally thought that the present war was occasioned by political causes alone, France desiring to extend her boundary to the Rhine, and Prussia to place herself at the head of united Germany. There was a deeper significance in this gigantic struggle; a more profound meaning attached to it, in which all Europe and the East and even America had an interest. He thought the real meaning of the struggle would be found to be an attempt to arrest the progress of civil and religious liberty by bringing first Europe, and then the rest of the world

UNDER THE SWAY OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

by the military power of France. This war concerned the three great religious divisions of Christendom—the Greek Church, with Russia at its head; the Romish or Latin Church, with the Pope as spiritual and France as military head, and the Protestant Church, with Prussia as its Continental leader. It also concerned the great divisions of the races. But it was impossible to predict whether they would be all brought into the contest. The reverend gentleman endeavored to prove his theories by a historical review, and very ingeniously pointed out curious illustrations in past history to show that the policy now being pursued by Rome and the Latin race was precisely the same as that attempted centuries ago.

The sermon is too long and closely knit together to admit of any thing like a fair abstract. It was listened to with deep attention by the congregation.

Nothing brings such peace to the heart as a calm trustfulness in God's overruling care.

OBITUARY.

Bowman.—Died of consumption, at his residence in Duxbury, Vt., on May 11, Br. H. S. Bowman, aged 46 years.

Br. Bowman was a subscriber, a constant reader, and a lover of the Herald of Life. He was a firm believer in the immediate personal coming of Christ, the unconscious state of the dead, and the non-resurrection to life of the wicked dead.

If one point of doctrine occupied his mind more than another it was this—No Life out of Christ.

He had hoped to live until Jesus came; like all of us, he had an instinctive dread of death; hence in his last sickness, as the enemy—death—stared him in the face, he exclaimed, in the presence of the writer, "O how I wish the Lord would come!"

He leaves an affectionate companion, and five children to mourn his loss.

Br. J. Litch preached the funeral discourse.

Timothy Wheeler.

Waterbury Centre, Vt.

Lynn.—Our little daughter, Abbie Alexander Lynn, aged three years, four months and fourteen days, fell asleep in Jesus, July 7. She was a great sufferer for a week before her death; but she bore it without a complaint to the last. Her sickness was erysipelas.

We sorrow not as those who have no hope. We believe that Jesus died and rose again. Even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

Durham, P. Q., Canada, July 10, 1870.

Jonathan and Elizabeth Lynn.

Appointments.

Meriden, Conn., Sunday, July 31.

New York, (Cooper Institute, room 24), Sunday, Aug. 7.

Wm. Stuart.

East Bradford, Me., (in the Lewis Jones Schoolhouse), Sunday, July 31.

Kenduskeag, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.

Surry, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.

No name sent with the above.—Ed.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Plymon Muncil, B. Browne, David Stanway, W. P. Schockey, Jeremiah H. Chandler.

Two dollars each from—Wm. Shough, Royal Boston, Thomas Davis, La Fayette Norris, Emerson B. Wilson, J. A. Loton, Theodore H. Ford.

Various sums—Wm. G. Ocobock, $5: D. H. Baker, $5; Mrs. M. A. Battersby, $2 50.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

H. Miller (book), Jacob T. Albright (two books), Dr. J. W. Sykes, La Fayette Norris, A. K. Faccett, J. A. Loton, Samuel W. Eshleman, D. Stanway, O. S. Parker, Z. Campbell, Jer. H. Chandler, T. James Newcomb (book).

THINE.

LITTLE to me it matters
Whither my feet are led,
If in the burning desert
Or the pastures green I'm fed—
Whether the storm or sunshine
Be in the path I take;
For my hand is in Thine, my Father;
Thou wilt not Thy child forsake.

And it shall not cause me sorrow,
Though the path be steep and rough;
I am Thine, Thine own forever,
And that shall be joy enough.
Thine is the care, my Father—
The work of providing, thine;
Only the trust and pleasure
And the calm content are mine.

Neither shall I be anxious,
For the dear ones whom I love,
For Thou art never absent—
Thou reachest them from above;
And, Lord, I know they are dearer
To Thee than they are to me;
So I only ask Thee to take them,
And do as it pleaseth Thee.

But others are only strangers,
And know not the perfect peace
Of those who, beneath Thy banner,
Are finding their sorrows cease.
They are away in the darkness—
In the gloomy and silent night;
O Father, receive them also,
And welcome them into the light.

So, then, it will not matter,
Whatever the future be;
Gladly we take our journey,
Leaving the rest to Thee;
And in darkness, or gloom or tempest,
Still shall the best light shine,
And the joy shall come to our spirits;
For, Father, we all are Thine.

Selected by E. C. M. B.

THE GOSPEL HOPE.

BY A. BOYNTON.

To the dear children of our Lord in the A. B. C. class of the school of Christ, we dedicate this scriptural epistle.

In the first place, It is supposable, yea, taken as a fact, that you are a child of God, having received of his Spirit, "whereby we cry, Abba Father," and are not only desirous to learn, but have also an humble teachable disposition; for this meekness and lowliness of heart, as a characteristic of Christ and his followers, is the first thing acquired in christian experience—the "first fruit of the Spirit" received. To such we come; and by the help of the self same Spirit shining upon us, and upon the "word" to teach you "the way of the Lord more perfectly." Faith, hope, charity, (or love) are the three pillars as it were in the Gospel. Faith is belief, accepting the evidence of things; which things, or facts may be desirable, or not, but hope includes, with expectation or faith, desire. We may expect things not desirable; but if we both desire and expect, then it becomes an object of hope. But to be realized, the expectation must rest on good evidence. The Gospel hope is "a good hope through grace:" composed of items most desirable, with no mixture of evil in its pure cup of bliss. Whatever the hope of the Gospel is, then, must be all of good, and nought of ill. Note this, and may it ever serve you as a rule in studying the "word."

We will take the term hope, as related to our subject, and see what light may be obtained from the scriptures. Paul when arraigned before the "council," for his faithful preaching, testifies thus: "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." Acts xxiii. 6. Again, in his defence before Agrippa, he says, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead?" Acts xxvi. 6–8. Whatever "the promise made to the fathers" embraced, it is evident the door of entrance was the resurrection. It seems the Jews believed this, but Paul's offence was in looking for this revival to a future life through Jesus, whom they had crucified. Here then is one item of christian hope—the resurrection. But we wish to know the nature of that future life, as well as the fact. These points are often brought out together. Paul in writing to Titus defines it thus: "In hope of eternal life, which God, that could not lie, promised before the world began. But hath in due times manifested his word through preaching." Tit. i. 2, 3. Thus we find that "the hope" is eternal life by resurrection from the grave, or from literal death.

Let us see how other teachings of the apostles harmonize. "By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. . . . That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. v. 2, 21. See the whole ch. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." Rom. vi. 22. "For we are saved by hope. But hope that is seen, is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it."—Rom. viii. 24, 25.

Although present enjoyment is an important item in christian experience, yet it has hope as its foundation. "For whatsoever things (and this expression comprehends a good deal,) were written aforetime, were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have,"—what? joy, ecstasy only? no: but "hope." Rom. xv. 4. "For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith." Gal. v. 5. "That being justified by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life." Tit. iii. 7. How plain. "But Christ as a Son over his own house: whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence, and the rejoicing of the hope (here is true joy for you) firm unto the end." Heb. iii. 6. The vast importance of this hope is seen in the following: "That by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." Heb. vi. 18, 19. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again (through the Spirit) unto a lively hope (or a hope of life—Syriac) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, (and what else is connected with this hoped for life?) to an inheritance, incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God, (yes, trembling one, God's power keeps you, only believe, rest in him) through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time; wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season (if need be) ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations; that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. Whom, having not seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory: (has not the hope joy enough for you then?) receiving (prospectively only, as we shall soon see) the end of your faith even the salvation of your souls. Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified before hand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. Wherefore gird up the loins of your minds, be sober and hope for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." (This is the time.)—1 Pet. i. 3–13.

Paul, also, puts it at the same time: "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ." Tit. ii. 13. The fact of Christ's second coming to consummate the hope of the gospel is a prominent doctrine of the New Testament. Hear Paul exhort his Corinthian brethren: "So that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. i. 8. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself." Phil. iii. 20, 21. That eternal life is the object of hope, we offer the following scriptures: "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is (or has) our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4, 5. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." 1 Tim. iv. 8. Paul says, speaking of Christ, "Who hath abolished death (in his own person) and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. i. 10. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Jam. i. 12. "Heirs of the grace of life." 1 Pet. iii. 7. "And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life; (not in its fulness of fact, but by promise, as we shall see), and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v. 11, 12. So we have the Son and life eternal in like manner. "By grace ye are saved through faith." By promise it belongs to all God's children; but its fulfilment is future, as we have abundantly shown.

In conclusion, we would state our subject thus: the hope of the gospel is future; it is a unit, or "one hope," "the hope," "that blessed hope," etc. It is "eternal life," which we now have by the Spirit's assurance through the word. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he (God) that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, ye are debtors, not to the flesh to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Rom. viii. 11–17.

This life is given at the second coming of Christ; and given to all the children at the same time. For Paul says of the ancient worthies, "These all having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, (which is eternal life), God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. 39, 40. Hence the importance attached to the second advent, and the interest required, and manifested by christians in the same.

Dear friend, do these scriptures strike a responsive chord in thy soul, so that, with the beloved John, you cry out, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus"? Rev. xxii. 20. If not, there must be something wrong in your theology, and your life. Examine carefully and prayerfully; and may the grace of God so purify, and sanctify your mind and nature that you shall at last join in the glad acclaim, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us."—Isa. xxv. 9.

WEST BATAVIA, N. Y.

THE DEAD ARE DEAD.

BR. STORRS: The following slip I cut from the "Providence Journal," for insertion, hoping that no persons who may read it will brace their minds against stubborn facts as regards any conscious existence after the breath has left the body. Some suppose that an entity or spirit remains alive. There can be no feeling without consciousness; no consciousness without life; and no life without organism. Break up the organism and life ceases; it is so in all animal economy. Josiah Litch, some years ago, attempted to prove an invisible soul, stating that an arm had been cut off, and the person could pass the invisible arm over a burning lamp and not feel the heat of the flame, and at the same time could feel the arm and fingers on the lost hand. He supposed he had triumphed that time, with something that could not be disputed; but had he been a Surgeon, and had by examination and experiment discovered what others have found in fact, that had the nerve been cut from (close up to) the spinal cord that extended down the arm, (that branch), that no feeling would have existed. This is a fact. Various accidents and experiments have proved it. A soldier in the late war had a ball pass through the small of his back: the spinal cord was severed. Now the fact was, that he had no feeling below that part of his body; the lower limbs were powerless; the wound healed up and he lived several years. Small animals have been experimented on; the knife has been inserted and severed the column; pins were used to prick the limbs. Though the upper part of the animal was active and sensitive, yet no perception of pain when the pins were thrust into the lower limbs. I am of opinion that the entity existence does exist only in imagination, and so long as persons will follow imagination they set aside the word of God. That declares that the dead know not any thing, and in the very moment that the breath goeth forth the thoughts perish. W. C. STONE.

BOSTON, Mass., June 1870.

DEAD HEADS.

It has been demonstrated within a few weeks by experiments made in Paris, that in the case of a decapitated man, the head ceases to show any signs of life almost as soon as it is severed from the body. So far as appearances are concerned it is bereft of all knowledge and sensation by the parting stroke, and becomes at once a "dead head" beyond shriving, and without privileges. The experiments were made by medical experts on a culprit who had suffered under the guillotine, and whose head was delivered to the examiners within five minutes after it had rolled into the basket. According to the account the face was bloodless and pale, and the set features bore a stupid and comatose look, but no expression of pain. The eyes were open and fixed, and had lost their lustre and transparency, and there was no evidence of the natural sense. After various manipulations and magnetic applications, which failed to elicit even a spark from the slumbering spirit, one of the experimenters applied his lips to the orifice of the ear, and in a clear and strong voice shouted out three times the name of the departed criminal. There was no response. The lips moved not,—every feature remained fixed in its solidity, and the ear even under repeated shocks was as dull as an ear of marble. Spirits of hartshorn were placed under the nose, nitrate of silver was rubbed into the eye, and the flame of a candle was waved repeatedly before the contracted and stony pupil. It was all in vain, the head was a dead head and gave no sign, and the philosophers who had speculated on the proofs of vital tenacity were obliged to confess that the division of the spinal column had killed the culprit and at the same time put an end to their theories. While this result is in some measure satisfactory to science as a demonstration of a fact, it must be exceedingly comforting to the many in France who are always in danger of the executioner's knife. It is well that some things should be done surely as well as quickly, and no man in his sober reason, much less a volatile Frenchman, would desire that the mortal sense should linger after he had lost his head.

GOOD IDEAS.

We give the following, from "The Advance," for the much good it contains. We do not indorse every expression, but in the main it is excellent, and meets our most hearty approval. Let it be pondered well by all.

DO WE WORSHIP?

A singular question this, many will think. What do our church organizations mean? What signify our sanctuaries, with their prayers and hymns, on any other supposition? Do not published notices declare that "divine service will be held" at such a time and place? Does not the minister rise and say, "We will begin our worship by singing" this or that hymn? of course we worship, and we pay liberally for the privilege.

That is one side of the matter: let us look at the other. Worship is a reverential approach to God in certain prescribed forms. In every such act God is uppermost in thought and feeling. The mind conceives of Him, and the heart goes out to Him. Whether it be confession, petition, thanksgiving, or adoration, the idea is, to present oneself before God, to exalt him, and to obtain his blessing. The form is but secondary, the state of heart everything. "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him, must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Taking this conception for our guide, what facts meet the eye? It is no slander to affirm, that many congregations offer few outward signs of worship beyond the use of certain rites and ceremonies. They do not enter the sanctuary as if God were in their thoughts, but much as they go to a concert or literary lecture. They do not indicate reverence by varying their posture according to the nature of the exercises; neither bowing in prayer, nor standing in song, nor sitting attentively upright in the reading of Scripture. They weary, if the devotional services are prolonged, even if there be variety and brevity in the single parts. They are eager to reach the sermon, as that for which they came to church. If the sermon be not particularly attractive, one learns by the subsequent complaints that the occasion was a failure; that being disappointed in that, they found no edification in the whole service. They select a minister with little inquiry as to his piety, but have in view chiefly his eloquence, or his oddity, or his ability on some ground to draw a crowd, and to pay the expenses of the church. They plainly wish and expect to be entertained rather than profited by his preaching, and they have a special horror of doctrines, revival efforts and an old-fashioned style. They limit him also to twenty or thirty minutes, that his discourses may be always brilliant and never tedious! And then as to the matter of praise, so-called, it is performed by proxy, by an organist, who plays beautiful snatches from the operas, and by a costly quartette of singers hired regardless of price or character! And these attractive exercises, in churches where the poor are excluded by the high rental of seats, are called worship! Also the ten or fifteen thousand dollars annually expended in maintaining these are said, in current phraseology, to be paid "for the support of divine worship." Allow that we have stated the case strongly, must it not be granted that something of this world-spirit has crept into our churches, and needs to be exorcised? This putting man foremost in the sanctuary, be he preacher or singer, must be done away, and God be allowed to take His ancient and rightful place. Worship and not entertainment should be our object. The Episcopal service, although open to criticism in various particulars, is correct in this respect. It is long and repetitious and formal; it lacks the extemporaneous element, and hardly leaves space for a sermon; but it nobly maintains the idea that the grand occasion of assembling is, to worship God. Its use produces a more reverential and devotional effect than do the free and easy meetings of some congregations to listen to a favorite orator. Christians are properly taught to depend for their edification more upon themselves as worshipers, and less upon the genius and eloquence of the preacher. With a good service they can make out well, though the sermon chance to be indifferent. This can be carried to an extreme, so that the true teaching function of the Christian ministry shall be almost lost, as it was, and is, in the sacerdotalism of the Romish church. But we long to see a reaction in our Protestantism, which, without the puerilities of Ritualism, shall cultivate more reverence and devotion, more communion with God and less idolatry of man. Let us multiply the acts of worship; let us make them brief, varied, and hearty; let us keep before the people the idea that they are in the house of God, and not in a public hall, and that reverence requires as much decorum there as does politeness elsewhere.

M. LAMENNAIS is reported to have uttered the following weighty words just before his death: "There is nothing fruitful but sacrifice. Some will say this is a hard saying; who can hear it? Yet the fact remains that for eighteen hundred years during which Christians have professed to believe in the cross, nothing really elevated, beautiful, or good, has been done upon the earth except at the cost of suffering and self-abnegation."

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

THE ORPHANS.

"Our Father which is in heaven."

THE wind was howling fiercely around the old cottage, and sweeping through the broken windows with its chilling breath. There was a sad scene within. A woman pale and wasted by disease, lay on a heap of straw, which formed the only bed the room contained, while two children—a girl of ten and a boy of eight years—bent fondly over her. She had just awaked from sleep, and Rose smiled and asked:

"Do you feel better now, mother?"

"Yes, a little, darling."

"I thought so; I knew you would be better if you could only go to sleep."

"You must not deceive yourself, Rose; I am not really better. I feel that I am dying, I can not live through another day."

"Oh, mother, you must not say that!" pleaded the girl in saddened tones. "You must live for our sakes. What will become of us when you are gone?"

"God can make her well, can't he sissy?"

"Yes, dear; and I think he will. I have asked him so often to do it."

"My dear children, God can make me well; but if he should not, he knows what is best for us, and you must not murmur. That God who has watched over you from infancy will not forsake you when I am gone, and you must put your trust in him. I have commended you both to the kind care and keeping of "Our Father which is in heaven."

Just then a gust of wind blew out the last feeble, flickering ray of the candle, and left them in darkness.

"Oh, mother! what will we do now? It is so dark, and we have no other candle."

"You had better lie down here by me. Nestle closely, and we will keep each other warm, and sleep till morning."

A few words of conversation, and their voices grew fainter. The wearied children and their mother fell asleep, and in that sleep the mother's spirit passed from earth.

The sun was shining when Rose awoke the next morning. Her brother's eyes were fixed steadfastly on his mother's face.

"Hush," he said, "mother is asleep; it will do her good. Be quiet, and do not wake her."

Alas! alas! it was the sleep that knows no waking. Rose felt it as soon as she saw the pale face and motionless body. She had seen death once before, and she could not forget its tokens. She pressed her lips to the forehead. Its icy coldness startled her, and she drew back with a shudder.

"Don't sissy, don't; you will wake her."

"Eddie dear, mother is not asleep. She will wake no more on earth."

"Oh, yes she will, sister!"

"Touch her; she is so cold."

"But so are we. The room is cold; there is no fire. I wish we had some wood, and that would soon warm her."

"No, no, Eddie; that cannot be. It is too late now."

"But she can't be really gone, sissy. She didn't tell us good-by, and kiss us, as father did."

"Because God took her in the night when all was dark, and we were asleep."

"And we are all alone, and so little! What will we do, sissy? Who will care for us now?"

"Not all alone, Eddie. You know we have 'Our Father in heaven' yet; mother told us we must trust in him. Hadn't we better say our morning prayer together now?"

The orphaned children kneeled beside their dead mother, and in broken, tremulous accents, repeated the Lord's prayer. He who is the father of the fatherless looked down from his throne on high, and in love and compassion heard their prayer.

Their sobs, while they were upon their knees by their mother's side, had fallen upon the ear of a passer-by. They were tokens of distress, and he was one who was ready to lend a helping hand in sorrow. The shutters were open, and he looked through the broken pane and saw the kneeling children. He heard too, the childish, broken accents, repeating, "Our Father which art in heaven," and his heart was moved with compassion towards them. Waiting until their prayer was finished, he knocked at the door. Rose looked up affrighted.

"Oh, Eddie, it must be the landlord, and we haven't the rent for him. He will turn us out!" and they nestled closer to their mother, as if even yet she could protect them. The stranger heard their whispered words, and did not wait for them to give him admittance. He opened the door and stood before them. They looked at him with fear and then with wonder, for he was a stranger. They had never seen him before. As they looked they felt that they could trust him, there was so much kindness in his face, and his first words were very gentle.

"I heard your sobs, my children, and feared that something was wrong. I thought that perhaps I might be able to do something for you."

They pointed to their mother. That pale face told the tale.

"When did she die?"

"Last night. It was in the dark, and we did not see her die;" and at the thought the tears flowed forth afresh.

"Never mind, now," he said, drawing them towards him. "Tell me all about it, and I will see what I can do."

In a few words Rose told the oft-repeated story. Theirs had been a very happy home when their father was alive; but suddenly sickness had laid him low, and in a few days had carried him to the grave. A widowed mother was left alone with two young children. She had striven hard to keep them from want, and had succeeded, till in her turn she was attacked by the hand of disease. She fought against it as long as she might, and had even till the week of her death continued her labors for part of the day. They had for months past been growing poorer. One article of furniture after another was sold that they might buy bread. Now all was gone; their mother, too, was dead, and they were left alone—to starve, perchance, "except," Rose said, and she thought it would be so, "Our Father in heaven will take care of us." The simple words and artless manner had their effect on the good man's heart.

"Would you like to go with me?" he asked. "I will give you a nice and pleasant home, and you shall have bread enough to eat."

"You will go, won't you, sissy? I am so cold and hungry."

Rose looked up with tears of thankfulness in her eye, and then glanced thoughtfully at the bed.

"Never mind, dear, I will not take you yet. You must stay here till your mother is buried, and then you shall go with me."

He made inquiry in regard to them and found their story true. Their mother was spoken of in the highest terms. The funeral over, the children were taken to his home, and committed to the care of his sister, who kept house for him. The children lived happily there, but never forgot their mother's early teachings. When asked who had provided them with such a home, and given to them so many kind friends, their answer was given in a childlike faith, "our Father which is in heaven."—Selected.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions, and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1870.

VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 41.
WHOLE NUMBER 327.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,) NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

HADES, HEAVEN, AND HELL.

THERE are undoubtedly in the present day many popular errors about Hades, Heaven, and Hell, so oft-repeated to our ears that we do not perceive their opposition to the teaching of Scripture.

We must say that Mr. Browning has in his "Words in Season," given expression to a great deal of error on these important questions. Scripture ever points the believer's hope and faith to the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the just, and this present earth renewed as his inheritance. Really when we read Mr. Browning, all these appear to vanish out of sight. Thus, in one of his chapters he represents "The Inheritance of the Saints" as gained by them when they die.—P. 124. In his chapter, "Present Suffering and Future Glory," he represents this "Future Glory" as attained on death.—P. 46–49. On Mr. Browning's theory we find it impossible to see that the second coming of Christ can be of any benefit to believers, or that the resurrection can possibly serve them. Or, rather perhaps we should say that his theory utterly rejects the teachings of Job in the primitive times of the church (chap. xix. 26), the teaching of Daniel as the Jewish school of prophecy drew to its close (chap. xii. 2), the teaching of Christ when he, the life of the world, appeared (John v. 29; vi. 54), and the fuller teaching of Paul in 1 Cor. xv. In fact, we doubt much if Mr. Browning can be called a believer in that article of the apostle's creed which affirms "The Resurrection of the Body." This is strong language, but we think Mr. Browning's words justify us in using it. If we are thus justified, are we not called on to enter a protest against such erroneous teaching?

Error must indeed be prevalent to permit men calling themselves Christian teachers to promulgate such opinions without rebuke. The common ideas as to the state of the soul, in that period which elapses between death and the second coming of Christ, seem to be at the bottom of it all.

Rest—sleep—these are the words used in Scripture to describe it. The dead in Christ are represented as falling asleep, and thus as awaiting their inheritance when the Lord comes to wake them up to its enjoyment. This present earth is represented as their inheritance, but as not fitted for them till purged from all evil. But popular theology will not wait for God's time. Death, by Scripture represented as the period during which the believer's last enemy reigns, is by it represented as the period when it is subdued. Calvin expresses it when he says, "Whosoever believes in Christ ought to be so full of courage that at the mention of death he should lift up his head as the joyous announcement of his redemption."—In Phil. i. 23.

Mr. Browning does not quite agree with Calvin. Indeed, on the question of the state of the soul prior to the second coming of Christ, much diversity prevails among those who share in a common error. Calvin did not think that the souls of the just went to hades at all. He here placed the disciple above his Master. Others, who do suppose them to go there, assign to them a great variety of occupations and various degrees of bliss. Mr. Browning has here a theory peculiar to himself, we believe, at least he calls the state of hades by a name which we have never before seen attached to it, he calls it a condition of "vastation."—P. 252. Turning to Webster to know the sense of this uncommon word we found his only meanings to be, "a laying waste, waste, depopulation, devastation." Being rather doubtful in which of these senses Mr. Browning used the word, we thought it best only to look to Mr. Browning himself for its definition; and, according to him, "it is a process of exploration and development by which the exteriors of the spirit are gradually brought into agreement with its interiors; by which the genuine internal character is brought forth to view."—P. 253. Lest we might confound this Protestant process with the Roman purgatory, Mr. Browning is careful to tell us that they are distinct.—P. 256. His "vastation is an orderly process." Whatever it be he supports it by the text of Luke (chap. xii. 2): "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid that shall not be known."—P. 253. Not believing that Luke's text refers to hades at all, we must ask for some better proof of Mr. Browning's "vastation," and till we receive such proof must call his theory "Mr. Browning's Dream."

He does not, however, leave any soul long in hades. As soon as good souls are vastated in one way, and wicked souls are vastated in another, he sends the one to heaven and the other to hell.—P. 256. He thus ignores altogether that Great Judgment of which Scripture speaks, and which it teaches us to look for in connection with our Lord's second coming, and after which the just receive "life eternal" and the wicked "everlasting punishment" in hell. All this finds no place in Mr. Browning's theology.

His description of the condition of the blessed in heaven, immediately on their entering it after death, differs very widely from the teaching of Paul in 1 Cor. xv. When arrived in heaven, or perhaps before it, the soul finds itself provided with its spiritual body. He seems to think that even now, before death, this spiritual body is growing toward its perfection inside our present gross bodies of flesh! Speaking with special reference to Paul he says of him, "God had been building up within his fleshly tabernacle a spiritual body, a house not made with hands, which should be eternal in the heavens. He knew that when his body died he should inhabit this beautiful house, and that mortality should be "swallowed up of life."—P. 62. Really if we believed Mr. Browning, we should have to leave out of our Bible all that it says about the resurrection.

On the question of hell, Mr. Browning has some rather peculiar ideas. In his general view of it he adheres to the Augustinian heresy, as he holds the old Egyptian belief in the soul's immortality, and does not see his way clear to accept of any such restoration from hell as Origen taught. But on the nature of the punishment of hell, we see from his and other cases, that perplexity and confusion reign in the camp of the Augustinians. One or two faithful men, as Mr. Grant, may still stand up for the old horrors as they have been depicted by Mr. Spurgeon, Jonathan Edwards, Peter Lombard, Thomas Aquinas, and Tertullian; but most of the Augustinian leaders now shudder at these diabolical descriptions. They are at present busy, to use a homely phrase, in whitewashing their hell for the close inspection to which it is being subjected. Mr. Birks thinks hell a plac where it will be "good" to be. Mr. Girdlestone ascribes to "habit" a power infinitely superior to any thing that Bishop Butler dreamed of, and supposes that the lost will at last become so accustomed to their sufferings, that they will not much mind them; or, in default of this, he plunges them into a "lethargic" sleep, in which they are insensible to torment, just as our modern physicians put their patients under chloroform before they cut off their limbs. Dr. Angus in his recent contributions on the subject to the "Christian World," devotes one of his three chapters to the "alleviations" of hell. Mr. Spurgeon, as we hear, has greatly moderated his tone, and, in middle age, recalls much of the terrible fierceness of his youth. And Mr. Browning, not to be behind his fellows, has his own little theory. It is a curious one; it is this:

Holding, as we have said, the Egyptian or Platonic notion of the immortality of all souls, he can find no relief for lost souls in their destruction. Neither can he find relief for them in the Origenistic notion of their restoration. What is to be done with them to preserve intact God's character of mercy? The very best that can possibly be done for them under that unfortunate circumstance of their immortality! "The punishments of hell," he tells us, "are no exception to the operation of the divine mercy."—P. 248. The old idea held by most of us, that hell's punishments are for the sins of men in the present life is utterly rejected by him. "The notion of hell," he tells us, "as a place of arbitrary punishment, eternally inflicted by an implacable Deity for past sins of wickedness committed during the sinner's life on earth, however apparently supported by the letter of Scripture, "is utterly untenable."—P. 248. The wicked are placed in hell, and not in heaven, because they would be "less miserable" in hell than they would be in heaven!—P. 249. When we are thus brought to an utter loss to know why they are to be punished in hell at all, Mr. Browning kindly comes to our relief. They are punished to prevent their getting more wicked, and so more miserable, than they had been in this life! "There is, indeed," he tells us, "punishment in hell, but it is such punishment for present acts of wickedness, as is repressive and restraining only, and thus altogether merciful."—P. 248. So hell is with him a great conservative institution! The wicked having brought themselves to a sad condition, incapable either of removal or improvement, hell, with Mr. Browning, is God's institution to prevent them from doing any more harm to themselves. Verily, we think that if Solomon could know of our modern ideas on future punishment, he would confess that there was something new under the sun.

To our Augustinian friends in general, we would recommend the consideration of these strange ideas of their leaders. They plainly prove that the old notion of hell as a scene of everlasting torment is now thoroughly felt to be untenable. The Principle of Evil might create such a hell; it is felt that the Principle of Good could not. To Mr. Browning himself we recommend an examination of the teaching of Scripture on the great questions of the Intermediate State, the Resurrection, the Second Coming of Christ, the Saints' Inheritance, and the Sinner's Doom. On all these he wanders widely from apostolic teaching. If only words of truth are "Words in season," we would recommend Mr. Browning to re-write some of his chapters.

HENRY CONSTABLE,
Prebendary of Cork.

DESERTMORE GLEBE, [England.]
—The Rainbow.

THAT "DIALOGUE."

BY MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

TO BR. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Webster, Mass.: Having read your "Dialogue" in the "World's Crisis" of July 6, I thought it not above my ability to make a few remarks in reply. The subject under consideration is to me of vital importance, and I wish to settle the truthfulness or *un*truthfulness of it by the words of Divine inspiration.

In the first place, my brother, it seems that those who believe in the resurrection of the wicked are bound purposely to misrepresent our views of the "judgment." You open your article with the oft-repeated statement that unless the wicked are raised to life we cannot "all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." Now, brother, let it settle into your memory henceforth, forever, that we do believe in a personal judgment for all "mankind." If you make a statement to the contrary hereafter, you do so wrongfully. But the question is, When and where is this judgment? You complain, sometimes, because our orthodox neighbors proclaim that "Annihilationists preach that there is no punishment after death;" and you with grieved heart for the thousandth time reply, "Assuredly, friends, we do believe in future punishment, but our difference with you consists in what that punishment is." How do you relish to have them still persist in circulating the misrepresentation of the doctrine you love? Be cautious and not be found doing the same work yourself.

Please be fairer next time you exhibit one of us on the public stage in a dialogue, and get one that is better versed in the New Testament. The one who is unable to meet any argument you brought into your dialogue without "certain books of reference at hand," was not the one to begin at. How would you like a dialogue with those who wrote "certain books of reference?" I always did like to see people in any kind of a contest take their equals. A man that can't meet a man, better not fight than to commence upon a boy.

After citing a few passages and giving your opinion of them, you pass on to another subject that has been made against us. Why is it that your party have got such a wonderful faculty of remembering a few texts that you say are positive proofs of the resurrection of the wicked, but are unable to remember texts that are positive against their having life in the future? "They shall not see life," is Bible language. Have you a right to qualify what Christ has left unqualified, by saying, "That means eternal life?" Will you please tell me what other life there is in the future except eternal life." God gave life to the first Adam, and he spoiled it through sin. Adam's life was mortal, ended in death. So "all" (we believe "all means all," too), that are in Adam have his perishable nature, because "the stream can rise no higher than its fountain." Here is a whole race, then, cut off from future existence. But God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Here's the nature of the life that comes from the second Adam. Men get this life on conditions—by "believing." As it is all the future life there is, those who do not get it, do not get any life whatever, after their natural life ends. And if it be true that "the stream can rise no higher than its fountain," neither will the stream of life be lower that its fountain. God gave life to the head of mankind, and because he miserably failed to fill the world with beings that might live on in bliss, he provided another Head, investing him with power to give life. The life he gives is eternal. He says, "he quickeneth whomsoever he will, and it is only those who by being connected with him are willing to "live by him."

Now, if there is any other kind of life in the future it must be from another Head. When did God provide one? Where do you read of it in the Bible? Really, Br. Chamberlain, I would like to have held that dialogue with you.

As a last resort, you bring up the idea that we "Life believers" don't pray; that we "gave it up long ago, for it was merely formal."

I can say for myself that I never intend to blow a horn to let my neighbors know when we pray at our house. And I am so busy in minding my own affairs, that I presume a great many people around me pray when I know nothing of it. There are some in the world who pray "to be seen of men," more than they pray from the heart to the Lord. It is not what you hear from a man's lips that proves him a man "given to much prayer," so much as it is what you see in his daily life and conversation. And if you want to make praying a test of our right or wrong conclusions of Bible doctrines, let me say that there are plenty who agree with you in theory who pray, "have family worship," yet who tattle and make mischief wherever they go. Does their praying benefit them?

We have "prayers" at our house, but they come only when we have something to ask for. Your advice is, "Pray for the Holy Spirit." I did, and thank God he answered me. There is no grace in agonizing before the Lord for blessings already received. It is more pleasing to God for us to ask no further than our faith will accompany our prayers. A great portion of the time spent in asking for "ye know not what," would profit us more if spent in praise and thanksgiving for blessings already received. "Praise is comely." Talk about "the duty of prayer." It isn't the Christian's "duty," it is his privilege, his pleasure. What! is it simply a task that I must be urged to perform, to "ask" and "receive" the things I am perishing for? Nay, verily, but it is a chance I grasp at with out-bursting gratitude.

Many times when my little family have been in sickness has the Lord heard prayer, and given them health. Many times when I have needed little comforts, myself, has Father sent them to me, in answer to prayer. Often when the path of duty is obscure, and I know not which way to walk, God, in answer to prayer, opens up the right way, and hedges the wrong. All this without "having stated times to pray." All this without sounding a trumpet, or praying "to be seen of men," or using "vain repetitions, as the heathen do."

Brethren, I will not call on you to testify that you "pray." Your lives will answer better than your lips can.

Br. C. in closing says, "This doctrine has made a marked division among us as a people." Why? Because, "as a people" you have had the wrong element to actuate you toward us, and as you say, "Instead of 'Life and Union,' it is death and division." With you, "as a people," it may be true; but with us, as Christians, and individuals among you "as a people," we find that it is possible to "love one another even as Christ loved" us, whether we believe alike or not. And though your houses and hearts "as a people" are shut against us, we still rest in peace with God, and expect the truth to triumph gloriously at last. God help us to "grow in grace and in knowledge," and live in harmony with our great Exempler. Amen.

FEEDING HILLS, Mass., July 16, 1870.

ELD. WAGGONER'S THEORY EXAMINED.

BY J. C. DAY.

BUT I have another charge to bring against Eld. W.'s theory; and that is, It plainly and emphatically denies the Gospel scheme of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ. The gospel doctrine as set forth in the Bible is, that remission of sins comes by faith and repentance. Luke iii. 3, "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins:" as, also, in Matt. xxvi. 28; also, Luke i. 77, and many other passages. But Eld. W. says, all personal sins of just and unjust are referred to the judgment.—Vindication, p. 15. "The remission of sins is the work of the judgment."—Atonement, p. 129. "The judgment is a definite, appointed time, and succeeds the day of salvation."—Vin. p. 33. "The day of judgment is never used in the Scriptures but in such a manner as to indicate exactly what Peter affirms it to be, viz., the future day of retribution."—Ib., p. 41. Mrs. White says (professedly by inspiration), "At Christ's second coming the wicked are all destroyed; the saints are taken away to the New Jerusalem, there to sit in judgment one thousand years. The books are opened, the book of life and the book of death. The book of life contains the good deeds of the saints, and the book of death contains the evil deeds of the wicked. These books are compared with the statute book, the Bible; and according to that they are judged.

Here we find the ground of all this absurd teaching. After the saints are changed to immortality and are caught up to the New Jerusalem, then their cases are examined by the Bible, and then their work for one thousand years is to examine the book of death, which contains the evil deeds of the wicked, and mete out and set off against each name the amount of punishment due them at the execution of the judgment.

So you see, my dear Br. Storrs, what according to this theory your work will be for the first thousand years after being made immortal! Perhaps this may be a very desirable work for those whose theory shows no mercy, except to those who follow in their footsteps, and whose hearts are steeled to every emotion of sympathy for those who dare differ from them.

But I had forgotten you are excluded according to this theory: it shows no mercy to any since the antitypical day of atonement commenced 1844; only to such as are Sabbath-keepers under the auspices of Mrs. E. G. White's visions. None others are to have their sins remitted. Christ takes all the sins of his people and bears them in the heavenly sanctuary. Here they are kept in reserve until the judgment. Then if they are found to have a righteousness according to the law, by their own obedience, their sins are then transferred from Christ, who has borne them for more than eighteen hundred years, to the head of the scape-goat, the devil; and he has to suffer them all out. But those who do not comply with their teachings, said to be "the third angel's message," their sins are rolled back upon their own heads, and they have to suffer the amount of punishment set off against their names in the book of death.

So, in reality, this theory admits of no forgiveness or covering of sins; hence the atonement is of no avail; and indeed W. says, Justification can and does exist without the atonement. He expresses it in this language—"Justification by faith and reconciliation are very closely allied, but the atonement is subsequent to both."—Atonement, p. 131. This being the case, it supersedes the necessity of the atonement; for if men can be reconciled to God, and stand justified in his presence without the atonement, this is all that is needed; and W. has at last solved the greatest question, by far, that ever awakened human inquiry, How can man be justified with God? And, this, too, without the atonement of our blessed and precious Christ. No wonder he says, that the atonement did not commence until 1844! This certainly must be another gospel, for we have always understood the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles to teach that justification and reconciliation were based upon the atonement of Christ. Probably no man knew better what he meant than W. himself did when he said in "Vindication" that, "there would be no need of absurd teaching if you would keep absurd theories out of the way." All this turning and twisting seems to be needed in order to obtain a new trial for the wicked. And his plea for a new trial is, that God's justice may be vindicated. He don't seem to be satisfied with God's decision of condemnation. Do I say, he don't seem to be? His whole teaching is to that effect. No man can by right be condemned until after trial; and W. says, Our probation relates to a judgment subsequent to the gospel dispensation. Hence, condemnation must be unknown in this dispensation, and also justification, as our justification must be from condemnation, as we are all reckoned under sin. But Eld. W. seems to think that if there could be a new trial in which every act of men's lives could be examined and compared, and that by the saints, it would appear more evident that God was just in his decision of condemnation. But I think if he and others would cease this endless twaddle about a new trial, and tell men that their condemnation is just, and unless they seek pardon in our precious Christ and LIFE-GIVER, it will never be removed, but will abide upon them, their preaching would be productive of much more good in inducing men to love our LIFE-GIVER.

But I wish here to say a few words about our Adamic condition. On page 57 of "Atonement," Eld. W. says, "The penalty pronounced against sin, in the first instance, was death: simply death. Had no promise been given afterward of the seed to bruise the serpent's head, it would necessarily have been eternal death. But Christ, introducing a resurrection for Adam and his race, causes it to be temporal."

Now let us reason a little upon this, and see how it looks. W. says, the penalty of the law was eternal death, and that Christ stepped into our condition and paid the penalty in our stead, and thereby made death temporal, and introduced a universal resurrection. Now, if W. can solve this enigma, I should like to have it explained. But there is another difficulty to be encountered. Christ dies in our stead; he pays the penalty for our sins and suffers our desert, says Eld. W., and our probation does not relate to the first, but the second death, and Christ pays the penalty in our stead; hence, his death does not relate to the first, but the second death, according to W.'s theory. Then if he introduced a universal resurrection, it must be from the second death, and then who paid the Adamic penalty?

SOUTH ASHBURNHAM, Mass., July 24, 1870.

WHAT IS THE TIME?

MEN have their methods of marking the passing of time with reference to the events that transpire in this world. God also has given us a method of marking time as it passes away, for the purpose of revealing the nearness or remoteness of the end of things temporal, and the ushering in of scenes eternal.

And prophecy is the "light" that shows the time; and as it is fulfilled, the watching people are enabled to say as Peter did on the day of Pentecost, "this is that spoken of by the prophet." By the light of prophecy we are enabled to foresee the rise and fall of kingdoms unto the judgment and the end. By it we are told of the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, as indicating the nearness of the glorious advent of the Son of man. The unfolding of events in this world is like the marking of time by chronometer, and by their transpiring we may know the time in which we live, whether near to, or remote from, the end.

Let us look then for a moment and inquire as well as we are able what time is past, what hour is present, and how much is yet to come before the day of the Lord shall dawn.

Beginning with the kingdoms, we find, according to the book of Daniel, that the kingdoms of Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome in its undivided state are all in the past. We also see that the ten kingdoms of divided Rome represented by the ten horns in Daniel's seventh chapter have come to pass as foretold, and a thousand years and more have passed since then. And the "little horn" representing the temporal political (not ecclesiactical) power of the papacy came forth long ago. And it has done the work foretold of it, "wearing out the saints of the Most High;" and all that is in the past. Once it is prophesied to be; once it has been. Shall we look for its repetition? As well might we look for a second edition of old Babylon and all the rest. And if we may have a second edition, why not a third, and thus swing around the circle again and again, with no knowledge of the end or the time of the end? What says the word? "Until a time, times, and the dividing of times." That word until marks the close of the scenes mentioned, and admits of no repetition of them.

What does the chronometer indicate of the present scenes? Simply that the dominion of this political persecuting power is to be consumed and destroyed "unto the end." That consuming has been going on for many years, and is nearly accomplished; but a very small portion of territory being politically subject to the Papacy. Shall this consuming now be suddenly stayed, the political power of this horn suddenly enlarge and increase, and the saints of the Most High again feel the torture of the rack and the faggot-fire? "Unto the end." That word unto does not admit of any reaction in the progress of the consuming until its full and final accomplishment.

The "until" of v. 25 ended years ago, and cannot be repeated. The "time, times and the dividing of times" must be interpreted by the year-day theory, or it cannot be fulfilled at all. Shall it be literally three and a half years? This is not in accordance with the facts. For 1,260 years the papacy prevailed against the saints. But the prevailing was prophesied to be before the consuming, and it is certainly natural that it should be. The year-day theory harmonizes with facts.

The day-day theory does not harmonize with facts or with prophetic arrangement.

If we give way to a theory that introduces a repetition of these scenes, and admit a persecuting power yet to arise and prevail, then the chronometer of God which marks the time must cease to move forward, or it must again go around the circle: and if so it may the third time, and who can tell its use to the world!

Brethren, we are past these scenes once and forever. Thank God! Once more the timepiece of the Almighty shall indicate the hour, and that hour is "the end." When it shall strike, God only knoweth, but we know it must strike soon. Naught hinders but to have the index reach the appointed spot. "Take ye heed, watch and pray."

Advent Ch. Times. F. BURR.

THE greatest man is he who chooses the right with invincible resolution; who resists the sorest temptations from within and without; who bears the heaviest burdens cheerfully; who is the calmest in storms, and whose reliance on truth, on virtue, on God, is the most unfaltering.

AN hour passed in sincere and earnest prayer, or in conflict with, and the conquest over a single passion or a subtle bosom sin, will teach us more of thought, will more effectually awaken the faculty and form the habit of reflection, than a year's study in the schools with them.

EVERY act of sin is more injurious to him who commits it than it can possibly be to any other who suffers by it; it will return into the conscience and perform a strange work there.

THERE are many laughable things upon the old earth, but she always keeps her gravity.

IT is better to starve than to sin for a sustenance.

ELD. HENRY PERKINS.

BR. STORRS: By request I write to the brethren, through the HERALD, to report Br. Henry Perkins, formerly of Plymouth, Me.

He is now at my house in New Rutland, Ill. He arrived here by the way of the Illinois Central Railroad, July 22, in a very low condition as to health. His disease, which is fast using up the last spark of vitality, will soon make an end of his earthly career, unless God by his providence sees fit to prolong his time a little longer. We are using some medicines now that will help him if it is in the power of medicine to do it. Sometimes I think he will recover; and again I doubt whether he ever gets any better. It is a hard struggle. We want him to live, and shall do all in our power to help him. He has been down for a long time, not able to earn any thing; his expenses have been heavy.

Now, brethren, remember those that are in bonds, as being bound with them. Br. Henry, like myself, never begs. We hope we shall not be forgotten when you are at the mercy seat.

I will now ask of you one question, Do you believe the plain saying of Jesus, as recorded John xv. 7? I have had much doubt about this matter. If we abide in Christ, and his words abide in us, have we not reason to expect what we ask for? I am satisfied brethren will pray for us, and pray for our recovery. Now, brethren, if you do, and you are really abiding in him, we shall get well. When you pray expect it will be done, and do not doubt.

Br. Perkins expects to stop here till about the 20th of August, and then return direct to Maine, if he is able.

JOHN BILLINGS.

NEW RUTLAND, Ill., July 27, 1870.

Note by the Editor.

Under the same date as the foregoing, Dr. Billings writes of himself as follows:

BR. STORRS: I thought it would be right to inform you and the brethren how it is with me. First, will say, my health has improved some since I last wrote. I was taken worse soon after I wrote, and continued to fail till I thought I must die, and arranged my business accordingly. I never before knew what it was to be in the agonies of death. But in this condition all help had failed, and our cry was to God; he had mercy, and from that time to the present I have slowly gained, and now am able to be up and to attend to some light business. I am in hopes to be able, in a short time, to speak to the people again in defence of the character of that God that has been to me more than all beside.

I have used the tracts you sent me as I think tracts should be used, i. e., have been cautious how I distributed them. There are enough that will take them, and that will be the last of it. I consider that the truth they contain is very precious, and ought to be in the hands of persons that will carefully read. On this ground I have distributed them; and I think that not one of them will be lost, and that they will at least fetch each one his man. This has been my purpose, that through their instrumentality, with what little help I can render to them, they will do it.

I hope the brethren will not forget us while we are here alone and sick. When we look out on the face of nature we feel discouraged; for such a drouth as we are having I never saw before. We have had no rain to help vegetation since last April. Our crops are dying in the field; everything is literally dried up, so much so, that the corn cannot ear, and the stalks are very short.

Well, brethren, we are not left in this dark place, and in this terrible drouth, and in our poverty, and all these discouraging things without something to cheer us. Our eye has been turned toward the old field of prophecy. This earthquake, that seems to be causing such upheaving in Europe, we think, will result in opening the way for the introduction of the fifth universal kingdom. If so, we will soon get home. The trouble has commenced very rapidly, but I should not think strange if it stopped just as sudden; but if it does not, in a short time we shall know certain.

Now, that is comforting to me to think I shall be able to know positively, in a few weeks, that my Lord will come in this time of trouble. I won't undertake to write or speak through the HERALD on those prophecies. But brethren that have been acquainted with me, in days past, will understand by this what my position is.

WM G. OCOBOCK, Auburn, N. Y., sends $5 for the HERALD, and writes: I would be glad to do more, but I have to earn my bread by hard labor and I am getting in years, as well as yourself: but thank God, through our Lord and Saviour, for all I have and hope for. May His blessing rest on you and all the dear brethren in the faith. I would like to be with you at the anniversary of the "Life and Advent Union," but suppose I cannot. I hope all the brethren and sisters will have a good time in the Lord. May the grace of our Lord and Saviour be with you all.

C. C. WEBBER, Minneapolis, Minn., writes: I am very much pleased with the management of the HERALD OF LIFE, and I hope it will be continued another year, although I would like one change; and that is, that the old order of things might be restored, so that our Editor can exercise his own judgment in answering articles the same week they are inserted, if he sees fit.

THOSE who blow the coals of others' strife may chance to have the sparks fly in their faces.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 3, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive..

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

WHAT SHALL THE END BE?

THERE was a time when the mind of the prophet Daniel was sorely exercised in relation to matters showed him in vision, and he cried out, "O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things?"—Dan. xii. 8.

At the present time, saints and sinners seem to be exercised in much the same way, in view of the war clouds that hang over Europe. All seem puzzled as to what is to be the course and result of things. Looking at the possible complications in the affairs of Europe, at this time, and the various causes operating to bring on a general war, the "N. Y. Herald," of Friday last, concluded as follows:

"Look at the situation from what point of view we may, we can arrive at no other conclusion than this, that Europe has been on the eve of no such crisis since the wars of the First Napoleon. We do not wonder that men given to the study of the Apocalypse should recognize in the approaching conflict the battle of Armageddon. It would be strange—would it not?—if the year which has been specially honored by the proclamation of Papal infallibility should witness the downfall of the Bonapartes, the extinction of the Mohammedan power in Europe, the removal of the Pope from the chair of St. Peter, and the final destruction of the temporal power. Strange, certainly, but who shall say—impossible?"

This is singular language in a secular paper. But, secular or religious, we have seen no suggestion more likely to be realized than this, only we would not calculate that all this would be accomplished in "the year" now opened by the proclamation of "papal infallibility"—the last blasphemy of the Roman harlot; yet it may be; and there is one prophecy which indicates it will be, viz: Rev. xviii. 7, 8. It reads as follows: "How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow: therefore shall her plagues come in one day, [year], death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

Rome's pride has culminated, and she hath opened her "mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name," (Rev. xiii. 6) by claiming the Divine attribute of "infallibility." By such an assumption God's authority is set at nought where it comes in conflict with Papal dictation. No sophistry of Romanists can whitewash this last blasphemous claim of Papacy.

Hence we are prepared to see the cup of Divine wrath poured upon her, and upon all those who worship this last "mark of the beast;" for inspiration hath said, "The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of His indignation, and shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels and of the Lamb."—Rev. xiv. 9, 10.

In this executive judgment "the harvest of the earth is ripe," and the angel which "came out from the altar, which had power over fire; cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God," etc.—Rev. xiv. 14–20.

Our Lord Jesus Christ declares himself to be "the true vine," and saith, "my Father is the husbandman." But here is a vine which is "of the earth;" not planted by Heaven, but has originated with harlotism—a coalition with carnal weapons, such as Rome has long used, claiming temporal power or authority, to rule over men with fire and sword. Is she not, clearly, "the vine of the earth" whose "grapes are" now "fully ripe;" and has not the time arrived for them to go into the "wine-press of the wrath of God?" We think it has: and hence look for events in the near future which shall raise the cry, among her worshippers, "Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come . . . The fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all." And to symbolise her utter destruction, "A mighty angel took up a stone, like a great mill-stone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." Rev. xviii. 10, 14, 21.

Such we are satisfied is soon to be the fate of the Roman harlot; and she will not perish alone. The kings, or rulers of the earth who have "committed fornication with her," by upholding her, or courting her support, will be taken with her and "cast alive into a lake of fire, burning with brimstone." Rev. xix. 20. The harlot and the rulers who have upheld her are both to be destroyed by a war of the most appalling character; the destructive weapons employed in it are fitly and aptly symbolized by "a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Such a scene will be manifested in the war that is to destroy thrones, dynasties, overturn kingdoms, bury papacy, and bring in the kingdom of God, now nigh at hand; for the "voices" will surely soon be heard "in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever:" . . . "for the nations" are "angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi. 15–18.

Is the time for these things to take place now upon us? We must wait and see; but they are sure to come at no distant day. The indications are strong that these things are now at the door; and that many now living will see the day both of the wrath and glory. Happy shall we be, if found watching and keeping our garments unspotted from the spirit of the world and the spirit of war. Let us look for the advent of the Prince of Peace; and do all our work in view of His speedy, glorious and eternal reign. May such be the condition of us all in these days of peril and war.

MAN'S ORIGIN AND NATURE.

THE notion that man, by creation, is possessed of an immortal entity called soul: and that he was created holy, originally, we think, is the foundation of nearly all the theological errors and superstitions that have bewildered, blinded, and made infidels of, a large part of Christendom, or those where this corrupt theology has been promulgated.

The account of man's creation, as given by Moses, is very simple and easy of comprehension; and when duly considered commends itself as the only rational account of man's origin and nature: especially when we gaze on the facts in man's death, or disorganization.

Man's origin is the same as that of any other of the animal creation. Compare Gen. ii. 7 and 19, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." . . . "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air."

Thus it appears the origin of man is precisely the same as that of other living creatures on the earth. The only real difference is this—Man's organization made him capable of a higher intellectual development than any other of the animal creation; and for this reason he was placed at the head of all the others, and to have "dominion over" them.

As to holiness, there is no evidence in the Mosaic account that man was in possession of any such quality more than other animals. "God saw everything that he had made, and behold it was very good."—Gen. i. 31. All were alike good, but not a word of the holiness of any of them. Holiness is not a creation—it cannot be created—but it is a development. As such it can only be produced in a created being by trial. In order to its development there must be law to which the creature is required to yield obedience; and there must be intelligence sufficient to comprehend that law, without which no law can have any claim to active obedience. Where such intellectual capacity does not exist—whatever the nature of the life in possession—there can be no claim for moral obedience, and hence neither holiness nor sin has any existence in that being—the thing is impossible.

Man, of all the animal creation, alone, so far as we know, had intellectual capacity sufficient to understand law, requirement, or prohibition—addressed to mind; or a capacity to determine from words addressed to his understanding what his course of conduct should be. This capacity was the basis or foundation for the development of a moral character above that of a mere animal. But such development could not be made without a law addressed to man's intellect; and that law must be adapted to his understanding or comprehension. As yet he is but an animal, and can only be approached as an animal man. Hence the law must relate to the action of his animal nature. In harmony with this fact we find his Creator thus approaching him, having provided for the new formed creature "every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food." He placed man in the midst of these delights and bid him regale himself without restriction with one exception. That one exception constituted the law—a law the highest of which man's nature was then capable, and yet the most trifling that it was possible to give. This law was addressed to man's intelligence, and related to the regulation of his animal appetites; or was addressed to him as an animal, such as he really was.

Hence he was tested, or tried as an animal for the development of a moral character; which trial, if man obeyed his CREATOR, would have raised him above a mere animal—or above the government of animal appetites—and would have constituted him holy. It would have developed a mind having a supreme regard to his MAKER'S will. This is holiness. Such a development would have—if persevered in—proved him worthy of continued life; hence would have secured him access to the "tree of life," and he would have "lived forever."

But a contrary development would unfit him for life by making him out of harmony with the CREATOR, preferring his own will to that of God's; hence the propriety of its being distinctly stated to the man, that if he did show himself determined to make his own will supreme he should "surely die:" discord under the government of God could not be tolerated. Everything that has life must come into harmony with God or discord be eternal. Hence, when Adam developed the fact that he chose to give the supremacy to himself, or to his animal being, rather than to his CREATOR, he, in fact, chose death rather than renounce animal gratification. Thus Adam had "life and death set before" him. He chose the latter—fell under his animal nature, and shared the fate of all other animals; but death was just as much more to be dreaded by him as his intellect was greater than theirs. Not, however, because he had any sufferings to endure "beyond the grave," for his CREATOR made no such communication tohim: It was, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." So far as we have any inspired authority, such was to be the end of the animal man. In unbroken and eternal death and silence he was to remain.

In the whole account, man is spoken of, treated as, and his destiny decided as, a unit: not a part mortal and a part immortal. Such a position is a pure, unfounded, unscriptural, and mischievous assumption: and has filled christendom with superstition, notions about purgatory, ghost-worshippers, worshipping the dead, spirit-rappers, doctrines of demons, and infidelity; all the natural result and offspring of corrupting the word of God in relation to man's origin, nature and destiny.

Adam's posterity are on trial as animal beings like as he was. They are indeed, under another and different dispensation. His failure was final by one transgression, and the penalty certain to follow; admitting of no remission. His posterity have been subjected to death "in hope." That is, though they die, their death may be abrogated or abolished by a union with the second Adam, Jesus the Messiah. The animal nature must be subjected, or brought under "subjection" to an intellect purified by the Spirit and word, or will of God. The dispensation we are under admits of repentance toward God for past failures, and remission of past sins, through union with the second Adam—the LIFE-GIVER—so that death may be abrogated or annulled. By this union with the second Adam the Spirit of God is received, the intellect or mind becomes in harmony with God, and is subjected to his will, denying the animal nature, keeping it under and bringing it into subjection to the will or word of God.—See Rom. viii. 9–15; 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27. Thus living—thus dying—death cannot hold them; it cannot prevail to keep them under its power; they are members of the second Adam, and must share in his revival into life, clothed with incorruptibility and immortality.

It will be seen that men are still dealt with as units, and as animal beings; naturally subject to mortality, corruption and death; and that in order to escape these, the animal, or flesh, is to be mortified—made to keep its place as a servant, while the will of God is to be supreme, and the animal be made to give way wherever it sets up a plea opposed to the will of God, as revealed in his word of truth. Those who thus act during their probationary state, continue to be temples of the Holy Spirit, which dwelleth in them, and whereby they are sealed unto the day of redemption.—See 1 Cor. vi. 19; 2 Tim. i. 14; Eph. iv. 30. "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 11.

The great work of redemption is to redeem or deliver men from sin—the dominion of the flesh or animal nature, and from corruption, or death. To puzzle men with metaphysical and theological notions about immaterialism, immortal souls, undying souls, half alive and half dead, part in the grave and a part in heaven, or hell, or purgatory, and all such anti-scriptural fancies, is to "shut up the kingdom of heaven against men" by bewildering their minds, and making the impression that religion is all fancy, about which the priest alone has any concern; and in the final result to land men in utter indifference to all religion. Shall men continue to be thus deceived by traditions?

FROM JACOB GRIM.

BR. STORRS: I drop a line to inform you that Sister MARGARET HANNA died on the 23d inst., in the 78th year of her age. She was sister to Sister Cobb, and mother of Br. George Hannah. She has been a great sufferer; has been confined to her bed for several years; at last, she sleeps. She died in full faith in the Life views, and made her last request that Br. Storrs or Grim would attend her funeral and tell the people the truth of what she believed. As you could not be present we endeavored to stand as her representative and speak for her. We presented our views, or the Life views in as plain a manner as we were capable.

The war question is assuming a very queer phase to the world at large; but to the Bible student it is only beginning to take shape. It reminds me of the business of the undertakers; they say they are doing a splendid business, so many are dying. So the world's downfall is the Christian's hope and glory.

Yours, in the hope of a speedy downfall of all the world's tyrants, and the exaltation of the loyal King.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.. July 30, 1870.

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

THE anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 25, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the HERALD OF LIFE and the TRACT cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

STEWARDSHIP.

"Of thine own have we given thee."—1 Chron. xxix. 14.

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of Hosts."—Hag. ii. 8.

"Give an account of thy stewardship."—Luke xvi. 2.

"It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."—1 Cor. iv. 2.

"As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, good stewards of the manifold grace of God."—1 Peter iv. 10.

THESE Scriptures need no commentary. Where all is plain, interpretation is impertinence. But a word or two on stewardship may be of service. The Lord, to whom we must give account, is coming; that is the grand central doctrine of this magazine, around which all its other doctrines revolve as planets round the sun, and it is a special honor as well as a sacred privilege to dedicate to his service some of the gold and silver with which he has entrusted us, for the purpose of piercing the thick darkness of the world with the light of his blessed truth, that when he comes, we may be able to render such an account of our stewardship as will draw from his lips the commendation, "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

What the actual result of any Christian gift may be in relation to the object the giver seeks to promote, we cannot know, nor is it necessary, for results are not the rule of duty in the service of God. Consecration, willingness, gratitude, the heart, these are the things he asks: leave results with him. We really doubt whether posthumous gifts to the service of Christ can come under the head of stewardship at all. Bishop Sherlock uttered a wise thing when he said, "Testamentary charities are no better than dead sacrifices." A man who realizes the responsibilities of his stewardship will be his own executor. The cause you wish to help by "will," derives no present benefit from your purpose, and to give your money to the service of God when you can no longer use it yourself is, to say the least of it, an act of homage with a shadow on it.

The case, however, is entirely altered if there has been benevolence, according to ability, during life, and if at death a legacy is left to aid works of Christian charity in which the testator can no longer take a personal interest. It is when men give little or nothing, during life, to uphold the cause of truth in an error-smitten world, and attempt to atone for their neglect by testamentary bequests that severe criticism fairly comes in. When a man holds all from God until his fingers, rigid in death, can hold no longer, he fails miserably in the duties, and tastes none of the pleasures of stewardship, whilst the money he leaves can in no sense of the word, be termed a sacrifice. However large the sum, or however noble the object to which it is bequeathed, he has given nothing to the Lord. Duty deferred is duty neglected, and he is an unprofitable servant who neglects God during life, although he leave him many thousands in his will.

It is the cheerful giver that the Lord loves; it is the living sacrifice that is pleasing to him: and surely a moment's reflection is all that is needed to show the beauty and propriety of the fact. He who gave heart and hand for us—his heart to be broken, and his hand to be pierced as a part of the great mystery of redemption—asks loving hearts and willing hands for his service. It is but a small return that any of us can make for the great love wherewith he loved us, but oh, let it be made cheerfully, gratefully, and in full view of infinite obligations, not grudgingly or of necessity, for that robs service of its charm and stewardship of its privilege. Whatever we do by speech, or pen, or purse, let us do it "heartily as to the Lord," and when the blessed hope of his return shall be realised as a glorious fact, we shall feel that the deepest consecration of our lives was but feeble and faint compared with his wonderful worth.—EDITOR of The Rainbow.

FROM MRS. J. E. PECK.

BR. STORRS: I have been "sojourning" in this place since the 10th of February last. It is a post-village of McLean Co., on the Central R. R., two miles north of Bloomington, and 61 miles north-east of Springfield. The Chicago, Alton and St. Louis R. R. here intersects the Illinois Central. It is the seat of the State Normal University, which is attended by about five hundred students. The building cost $175.000. The University also has an endowment of $200.000. There are two churches, Congregational and Methodist. The Baptists have just commenced building. There are some Presbyterians also, who, I am told, meet regularly for worship.

On some accounts I like my present place of abode much. The society is good, intellectual, &c., exerting a good moral influence, that seems to make itself felt; and there are here some good earnest souls, who I believe are sincerely inquiring, "What is truth?"

I attend the Congregational church. They have no pastor at present, but we generally have preaching from ministers passing this way, and (occasionally) by President Edwards of the University. When there is no preacher, we have a sermon read. Immediately after morning service, there is a meeting of the Bible class, consisting of adult members of the church and congregation. It "is a place for free discussion," and any one present has the privilege of asking questions or making remarks. The class is led by President E., generally, but he went to Europe a short time ago to spend the vacation. In his absence members are chosen from Sunday to Sunday. Last Sunday week we had the ivth chap. of Romans, and it seemed to me there was more than usual interest manifested by all. There was much talk about "faith" and works, as to which was the means of "salvation;" some claiming that Paul said it was faith alone, while others thought we must also have good works to be justified or saved.

There was a little confusion in some minds, it seemed to me, and a very indefinite idea as to what "salvation" really meant. So, when I came home in the afternoon, I wrote out my own ideas and understanding in regard to it, a copy of which I send with this for your inspection. If you think there is anything in it, or in this letter, that will interest any of the readers of the HERALD, you are at liberty to make use of it.

My paper was read last Sunday by a young lady, and it certainly was not spoiled in the reading, whatever else may be said of it. I noticed that she held in her hand an open sheet of paper, as she took a seat near me, but I had no thought of its being that little effort of mine, at first, as I supposed that would be read by the leader of the class. But pretty soon it was passed to two or three ladies near us, with the questions—"Did you write that?" The answer was, "No." "Do you know who did?" "No." I confess that my heart beat a little faster than usual, during this operation, but I do not think I betrayed myself. Unfortunately for my secret, the number present was unusually small that day, and I suppose I shall soon be found out. It was signed "Truth Seeker;" as I wanted to remain unknown as the writer for a little while.

Well, the reading was listened to with marked attention, and caused some little commotion. One gentleman wanted certain parts of it read again; others could not understand it, and the leader of the class gave it as his opinion that the lady who could write such a paper ought to have an opportunity of explaining her views more fully, and he hoped she would do so. I have already written a reply to all the questions and comments, I remembered; and it will probably be read next Sunday. Will send you a copy in a day or two. This is said to be a meeting for free discussion. Now we shall see. But if I never write or say another word in this place, I feel that I have presented some Bible truths in a new light to those that heard, and have given sincere and unprejudiced minds something to think about; shall, also, have prepared the way for some of those "Campaign Documents," which I intend to send for soon.

Yours, waiting for the coming of the LIFE-GIVER.

NORMAL, Ills., July 27, 1870.

The following is the document read in the Bible class, to which Sister Peck refers.—EDITOR.

MR. LEIPER: Will you and the class allow a few words from a much interested listener at your last meeting? My heart burned within me as we were studying together the words of the great Apostle, and it seemed difficult at times to remain silent. But there were many anxious to speak, and now, it seems to me, that I can better express my thoughts on some points in writing, and perhaps occupy less time, than in any other way. So if you think best, please read to the class the following expression of a few thoughts that came to me during the discussion of the questions for last Sunday.

I believe the first question asked was this: Can man do any thing to merit salvation? or, is his Creator under any obligation to him on account of any thing he may do? Before attempting any answer to this, I want to inquire with Mr. Cook, "What is meant by the term "salvation?" From what does Christ save us? My reply is, Not from "endless torment in hell;" for I, with some others of the class, cannot understand this to be the penalty of God's law; and we will not waste time, at present, in talking of salvation from a punishment that the Creator of man never so much as mentioned to him, and of which he cannot possibly be in any danger. Let us search the Scriptures together, and there try to find a plain answer to this intensely interesting question. But perhaps it will be well to inquire first, From what did God the Father save his only begotten, and well-beloved Son? Not from his sins, surely, for he "was without sin, neither was any guile found in his mouth." He offered himself without spot to God. We read in Heb. v. 7, "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplication, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared." Doddridge says of the words, "In that he feared," "he was delivered from that which he (particularly) feared."

Again, in Psa. xxi. 4, we read, "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days forever and ever." It is needless to multiply texts on this point, as it is clearly evident, both from the Psalmist and the writer to the Hebrews, that the Father saved the Son, not from dying, for that was the end of his incarnation: nor was it from suffering, without which his death would have been no atonement, but, from death eternal, which it seems to me he particularly feared. From the time of his yielding up his spirit on the cross, to the moment of his resurrection, he was as completely dead as any human being that had ever died. But he was delivered from the power of death and the grave, and exalted to the right hand of God, till his enemies be made his footstool; and, "because he continueth forever," he hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able to save to the uttermost, them that come unto God by him.—Heb. vii. 24, 25. And this brings the question, "From what will he save them?" We must go again "to the word and to the testimony" for an answer. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—Ver. 36. "Verily, verily I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." "I am the bread of life. This is the bread that cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die. Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever."

These are the words of Jesus; and Paul says, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die." "For the wages of sin is death." Surely this is enough to show us that Christ will save his people from death, from perishing, as his Father saved him.

Can man do anything to merit this salvation? He cannot. "The gift of God is eternal life." It does not read—The wages of righteousness is eternal life. "By grace are ye saved." But if I am asked, Is God under any obligation to reward his children according to their works? I answer, Yes; believing with Deacon Smith that he is under obligation to fulfil his word. Our Lord has promised to appoint unto his apostles a kingdom. When he comes to take possession of his kingdom, they are to sit on thrones, judging or ruling the twelve tribes of Israel, and are to have the honor of eating and drinking with their Lord at his table. We (Christians) must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. All who add unto their faith, virtue, and to virtue knowledge, &c., shall have an abundant entrance ministered unto them, into the everlasting kingdom, while there is another class that will be saved so as by fire. Some build upon the only true "foundation," which is Jesus Christ, gold, silver, precious stones. These will receive a reward. Others build upon the same foundation, but their works, (wood, hay, and stubble,) will not stand the fiery test which is to be applied to every man's work; consequently, they shall suffer loss, though they themselves will be saved. The great Shepherd "is able to save to the uttermost," and he will save the life of all his sheep, the most imperfect, as well as the fairest and best.

IMMORTAL: IMMACULATE: IMMUTABLE: INFALLIBLE.

BY J. PARRY.

WHAT other attribute will vain man dare to appropriate to himself that belongs only to God? Four hundred and fifty-eight of Rome's greatest men have pronounced, before all the world, the palpable blasphemy that the poor old imbecile, at Rome, is "Infallible!" This surely is the climax of folly, arrogance and infatuation! This is surely the "Man of Sin," who, "as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Is not his cup of blasphemy now full? Is there any other attribute of Deity for him to claim? If he is Almighty, why does he need so many French bayonets to sustain him in his state? As for the attribute of love, it would be too much to claim this, by one "drunk with the blood of saints, and the martyrs of Jesus."

1st. Immortality.—The serpent in Eden gave him this attribute in common with the race, "Ye shall not surely die."

2d. Immaculate.—"His Holiness," the Pope, must surely be without sin; and the poor woman, taken in adultery, would have had a poor chance had his holiness been on hand.

3d. Immaculate.—It has always been the boast of Rome, that it is unchangeable; and as the Pope seems determined not to learn any thing of science or theology in these last days, let him enjoy the bliss of ignorance; it will be short-lived, if the signs of the times have any meaning.

4th. Infallibility.—This is the top-stone to the monument of human pride and arrogance: it is top-heavy; tottering to its fall. When He comes to shake terribly the earth, this second Babel will fall to rise no more. Amen. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly.

SANDY HILL, N. Y., July 24, 1870.

P. S.—BR. STORRS: These are fearful times in which we live; great events are about to take place; men's hearts are failing them for fear, and all is doubt and uncertainty.

What manner of persons ought we to be, looking for that blessed hope, the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to bring light out of this darkness, and order out of this confusion. May we be found ready to welcome his advent, with our loins girt and our lamps trimmed and burning.

Yours, in hope.

FROM ELD. S. BRAGG.

BR. STORRS: We have been laboring in N. H. for the last two months. Have had some blessed good meetings. Quite a number have been reclaimed from a backslidden state; the saints have been comforted, and we are of good cheer in the Lord. Though we are weary in the way, we are not tired of the way. It truly looks to me that we are almost through this state of things. Everything, to my mind, looks that way. Well, it will be a blessed thing to meet all the ready ones. O yes, then we shall rest in the kingdom forever. How very blessed it will be to meet all the family in glory to part no more forever. But we must be very humble to be saved in the kingdom. It is going to take a very pure, humble and peaceful people to get into the kingdom. Well, dear children, it is time we all awake. The night is far spent and the day is at hand. The Lord is soon coming, and all who are ready will go into the marriage and the door will be shut. The Lord help us to be all ready, is my prayer. May we be found living in the bonds of peace; baptized by the one Spirit into the one body; having the same care one for another, as the members of our body care for one another; without preferring one before the other. If one member in the body of Christ be honored, all members rejoice with it. If one member suffers, all suffer with it. And we shall be one, as Christ and his Father are one; and by love serve one another, and so fulfil the law of Christ, and be all ready for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ, when mortality will be swallowed up of life eternal in glory.

Yours, in hope and love,

LEWISTON, Me., July 27, 1870.

FROM LEANDER H. ROWE.

BR. STORRS: The cause of truth is advancing, and the friends of Jesus, the great LIFE-GIVER, "speak often one to another," while, in thunder tones, transpiring events bespeak the nearness of that day which all the humble saints of God desire so much to see. Blessed be God, even forevermore, the Christian's hope will ere long be consummated; their blissful visions of "earth restored to its Eden beauty" will soon be reclaimed; and we shall soon "behold the King in his beauty," and rejoice in his presence, where "there is fulness of joy, and pleasures" that will never end. O, happy thought! How it makes our poor hearts leap for joy when we contemplate the glory that is soon to be revealed. It bids the down-cast followers of the once despised Nazarene to look up, and lift up their heads, for their redemption draweth nigh.

The Son of man will soon set on the throne of his glory, and then men will be judged with righteous judgment, and justice will be done in the earth. The sleeping saints, who now lie entombed in the lap of mother earth, will soon spring into life, blooming with immortal vigor; eternal life will then be ours; then we shall be beyond the tempter's power, for the works of the devil will have been destroyed, and him that had the power of it.

O, consoling thought! is it possible that weak and sinful mortal can ever attain unto such a state as this? Yes; glory to God and the Lamb forever, we may be overcomers, "through the blood of the Lamb and the word of our testimony." Then, brethren and sisters in Christ, let us be faithful a little longer in the service of our Divine Master; and when he comes he will save us with an everlasting salvation.

And now a word to sinners, if perchance some may read this. Christ has died for you as well as for me. You may possess this hope which "is an anchor to the soul," if you will surrender yourselves unreservedly to the Lord. O, be constrained to call upon the Lord and be saved ere the door of mercy is closed, and that forever. If you die in your sins, there is not a ray of hope for you; for "the wicked shall remain in the congregation of the dead"; therefore, they will have no resurrection to life, notwithstanding "die twice" believers argue to the contrary. But God's word is true, and you must abide the result. May the Lord in infinite mercy draw you by his Spirit to see your true condition, that you may become a disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and be saved when he comes, is my earnest desire. Amen.

LEWISTON, Me., July 25, 1870.

PERVERTING THE WORD.

PAUL foresaw distinctly what would come. He knew that "evil men and seducers would wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Hence he solemnly charged Timothy "before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who should judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom, to preach the Word. Be instant in season, out of season, reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine, for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." 2 Tim. iv. 1–4. How literally has this prediction of the Apostle's been verified. All over the world do we witness that state of confusion and darkness consequent upon men departing from the truth. The time has come when men will not endure sound doctrine. They get impatient and angry when the truth is presented to them, and so intolerant that they will not permit others to hear it. They "heap to themselves teachers after their own lusts, having itching ears." Look out upon Christendom at the present time, and behold what a vsat army of religious teachers. Besides there are hundreds constantly emerging from the various theological institutions throughout the world. Paul and Timothy rightly divided the Word and taught the truth. They spoke the same things. They were harmonious in their teachings. But not so with the multitude of religious teachers who lead the people at the present time. They do not speak in harmony, nor do they agree as to what is truth. They teach for doctrines the fables of men, such as sky kingdom, immortal-soul-ism, purgatorial fire, and hell-torments. Some of them deny the resurrection of the dead in plain terms; others teach what is equivalent to such denial by affirming that men get reward as soon as they die. Paul taught that the wages of sin is death. But those who pervert the truth say it is eternal torment. Paul taught that immortality was brought to light through the Gospel, and to be obtained by a patient continuance in doing well. But those who have erred concerning the truth say that all men are by nature immortal. Paul taught that Jesus would return to this earth, at which time He would fashion our vile bodies like unto His own glorious body. Modern teachers claim that we put on the heavenly likeness at death. Paul looked for the establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth. Popular teachers claim that the earth will be burned up, and the kingdom of God will be in the heavens above.—Selected.

THE VICTORY.

"Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. xv. 57.

Victory over what? There seems to be a contest implied; who or what is that contest with? By looking back to the 54th and 55th verses of the same chapter, we find that "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Here it appears that the grave is a contestant for victory. Now what kind of beings can the grave be master over? plainly, dead ones. And what could the grave do as victor over dead beings? it could merely hold them; but so long as it did hold them it would be the victor. As the grave can only be victor over dead beings, then "when this mortal shall have put on immortality," death will be "swallowed up" and the grave can have no longer a victory. The victory passes over to the subject, on its reception of immortality. Hence, the grave cannot have any power, even temporary, over anything endowed with immortality. The Apostle says, "Thanks be to God who giveth us (he is addressing believers) the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Now, as we can only obtain this victory over the grave by "putting on immortality," and as we obtain it "through our Lord Jesus Christ," is it not clear that the reception of immortality and the victory over the grave is one and the same thing? And when Paul says we receive this victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, is it not equivalent to saying we receive immortality through him, at the same time?

Further; orthodox Christians of every sect claim that all men will have a victory over the grave. If this is true, and believers receive their victory only through the Lord Jesus Christ, please inform us through whom unbelievers receive their victory. It cannot be through their supposed inherent immortality; for if so, the believer could obtain the victory in the same way, and Christ would be made of none effect.

The unbeliever has no promise in Christ, and derives no benefit from him, whatever. Jesus came to give life to the world (all mankind being under sentence of death) but on the specific condition of belief on him. John the Baptist, who was sent to manifest the Messiah to Israel, bore this testimony concerning him; "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

The execution of all judgment has been given into the hands of the Son, and it is written that "He quickeneth (makes alive) whom he will." Jesus himself says: "This is the will of my Father, that whosoever seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." This raising up at the last day is given here as the will of God toward those who believe on his Son; it is a peculiar favor —a "victory" over the grave, in which death is "swallowed up"—through our Lord Jesus Christ, and not an universal gift thrown out unconditionally. It is only for those who are "children of God, being children of the resurrection."—The Nazarene.

THE FINAL ISSUE.

THE Scriptures speak with one voice regarding the purpose which God is working out in the history of this world; the intimation, that the seed of the woman shall bruise Satan's head, furnishes a key to the whole of it. Those who are content to walk by the light of revelation, need be in no doubt as to whither all things tend—as to what is the final destiny of the earth; what shall be the issue of the last great struggle; and what is the glory and blessedness which is to succeed the present sin and sorrow. The Son of Abraham, the Son of David, Jesus the Christ, has appeared in this world and has been manifested to Israel. Israel has rejected him; and as man's guilt and failure has ever been the occasion by which God has promoted his great design, in this case also their guilt has been overruled as the instrumentality by which a propitiation for sin is set forth. They killed the Prince of life; but, as God made the crime of their fathers against Joseph the means of their temporal salvation, "for they thought evil against him, but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass to save much people alive," so in Jesus, whom they crucified, God found a sacrifice for sin, and raised him from the dead for our justification. "Those things which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise again from the dead on the third day, and that repentance and the remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." This purpose is now in course of accomplishment. His messengers, rejected by their country, turned to the Gentiles whom God hath visited, to take out of them a people for His name. The preaching of the gospel is maintained, and will be continued until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. He, meanwhile, sits at the right hand of God, the advocate and intercessor of his people, whence also he hath sent the Comforter, until his enemies be made his footstool.

Whatever the details of the intermediate conflict, and over whatever period its sorrows may extend, this we certainly know lies beyond it: "God will set his King upon his holy hill of Zion." The word of God also teaches us to anticipate still abounding crime and ungodliness, until "that wicked be revealed whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming;" and still deepening sorrow, till the long woe of earth swells into the great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be—a tribulation which shall close in the breaking of the enemies of our Immanuel with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken in shivers. The last remains of earthly empire, the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, shall be broken to pieces, and become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor, and the wind shall carry them away, and no place shall be found for them; and then shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed.—Waymarks in the Wilderness.

WANTS TO HEAR JESUS SPEAK TO HER.

IN one of the schools at Newbern, there is a pious old woman of eighty years. She had been very constant in her attendance, and earnest in her efforts, but could not overcome readily the difficulties. Her eyes were dim with age; it was with great difficulty she saw the letters in the large Testament, and still greater that she remembered them. After two or three months she could call all the letters, and she was delighted. Their combinations, and their sounds, syllables, words, were mysteries too great for her to master. The patience of her excellent teacher was nearly exhausted one evening when she said to her,

"Aunty, I don't think you can ever learn to read."

"Mity hard, missus; my poor ole eyes dark."

"Well, aunty, I reckon you had better give it up."

"'Pears like I mus', missus. O honey, wants to read heap!"

"Well, I'm sorry, aunty, it is so; but you need not come again."

After three or four evenings, the old woman appeared again in school. When the teacher came to her she said, "Well, aunty, here again, are you?"

"Yes, honey, please, I mus' read; mus' hear Massa Jesus speak to me from word his self; 'pears like I shall die. I mus' read de word ob de Lord, I mus'," and the tears ran down her cheeks like rain.

The teacher could not resist the appeal, so she opened the Testament at the fourteenth chapter of John, and read to her three verses with great deliberation and care, and then left her to attend to others.

Aunty bent over her book, and fixed her attention on the second and third verses. The letters she knew, the words were familiar to her; but to pick them out then was to hear "Massa Jesus speak to her." After a while she got the word prepared so she could put to "I go;" then the rest of the verse followed as if by inspiration; and, in an hour of the most intense effort she had ever made, she could read the two. When the teacher came to her again, she said, "Missus, 'specs can read 'em now."

She began, and, with intelligent deliberation, read, "I go to prepare a place for you," etc., to the end of the third. The teacher, surprised and pleased, asked her to read them again. Aunty did, with great clearness and propriety.

"Yes," said the teacher, "you have read the words of our blessed Lord yourself."

Aunty's eyes filled with tears, her face brimming with delight; she broke out, "Yes, bres de Lo'd! he speak to me, to me poo ole slave; he tell me go prepa' a place for me; he go, come again take me, me poor brak woman; prep'r place me; O, bless Massa Jesus."

Her heart was full, her eyes overflowed. It seemed to her Jesus had spoken to her. So these disciples wait to hear the Master speak.

THE COMING AT THE SEA.

I SUPPOSE there is no event in the whole life of Christ to which, in hours of doubt or fear, men turn with more anxious thrist to the close facts of it, or with more earnest and passionate dwelling upon every syllable of its recorded narrative, than Christ's showing himself to his disciples at the lake of Galilee. There is something pre-eminently open, natural, full, fronting our disbelief in this manifestation. The others, recorded after the resurrection, were sudden, phantom-like, occurring to men in profound sorrow and wearied agitation of heart; not, it might seem, safe judges of what they saw. But the agitation was now over. They had gone back to their daily work, thinking still their business lay netwards, unmeshed from the literal rope and drag. "Simon Peter saith unto them, 'I go a fishing.' They say unto him, 'We also go with thee.'" True words enough, and having far echo beyond those Galilean hills. That night they caught nothing; but when morning came, in the clear light of it, behold a figure stood on the shore. They were not thinking of anything but their fruitless hauls. They had no guess who it was. It asked them simply if they had caught anything.* They said, No. And it tells them to cast yet again. And John shades his eyes from the morning sun with his hand to look who it is; and though the glinting of the sea, too, dazzles him, he makes out who it is, at last; and Simon, not to be outrun this time, tightens his fisher's coat about him, and dashes in over the nets. One would have liked to see him swim those hundred yards, and stagger to his knees on the beach. Well, the others get to the beach, too, in time, in such slow way as men in general do get, in this world, to its true shore, much impeded by that wonderful 'dragging the net with fishes;' but they get there,—seven of them in all; first the deiner, and then the slowest believer, and then the quickest believer, and then the two throne seekers, and two more, we know not who. They sit down on the shore face to face with Him, and eat their broiled fish as He bids. And then, to Peter, all dripping still, shivering and amazed, staring at Christ in the sun on the other side of the coal fire,—thinking a little, perhaps, of what happened by another coal fire, when it was cooler, and having had no word once changed with him by his Master since that look of His,—to him, so amazed, comes the question, "Simon, lovest thou me?" Try to feel that a little, and think of it till it is true to you.—Ruskin.

INQUIRIES.

CAN there not be a Tent meeting in this vicinity? Also, can there be a Tent of Life believers at the Alton camp-meeting?

JOHN HAYES.

EPPING CORNERS, N. H.

If any one can answer Br. Hayes' questions, let them do so: we cannot.—ED.

TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM.

WE have substituted the above name for the Campaign Document No. 20, instead of "RICH TRACT." Some have thought, that, as all our Tracts are rich, it was "invidious" to call only one by that name. Hence it is changed as above.

FALSEHOOD, like the dry-rot, flourishes the more in proportion as air and light is excluded.

EARNESTNESS.—No man can ever become eminent in anything unless he work at it with an earnestness bordering upon enthusiasm.—Robert Hall.

CAMP-MEETING IN MAINE.

THERE will be an Advent Camp-Meeting in North Hermon, on the ground we occupied last year, commencing Sept. 5. It is five miles from Bangor. A boarding tent will be under the direction of Br. Charles Philips. Board for man and beast at a reasonable rate. Those coming with tents will find lumber and straw on the ground. Preaching brethren generally, are invited to attend our camp-meeting. We would say, This meeting is to be a free one, for all. There will be no one to dictate the preachers what they shall or shall not preach. We hope to see a large gathering of the dear saints at Camp Hermon this year. Come, brethren and sisters, filled with the Spirit and love of God; then we can labor for the perishing, and strengthen the weak.

CHARLES E. PHILIPS,
LIBERTY WETHERBEE,
GEO. W. BROWN,
DANIEL E. IRELAND,
WILLIAM PATTEN,
} Committee of Arrangement.

Remarks by the Editor.

A free meeting, like what these brethren propose, is desirable, if camp-meetings are to be held at all. Still, it is important there should be some ground of agreement; yet the one grand point must be, that no one should seek to exalt himself. It is too true now, as it was in Paul's day, "That all seek their own; not the things that are Jesus Christ's." No real lover of Jesus will be concerned for his own aggrandizement: he wishes Christ magnified. Let that be the aim of us all.

THE SUNDAY MAGAZINE for August is received, profusely illustrated.

CONTENTS.—Episodes in an Obscure Life; Sundays on the Continent; The Affliction of Moses; John the Zealot; On the Miracles of our Lord; How to Study the Old Testament; Christ's Invitation; Was it a mere Coincidence? The Struggle in Ferrara; Questions that are always Turning Up; "The Gallant Goodriou;" The Splinter and the Beam; Diana Coverdale's Diary; A Sun-Dial in a Church-yard; Supplement—Notes for Readers Out of the Way.

For sale by all periodical dealers.

TERMS.—Yearly subscriptions, $3 50. Single number, 30 cents. Liberal clubbing rates. Specimen number mailed, postage paid, to any address on receipt of 25 cents.

J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., Publishers,
715 and 717 Market st., Philadelphia.

GOOD WORDS for August is r ceived. Published by J. B. Lippincott, 715 and 717 Market street, Philadelphia. Perms, $2 75 per year. Single number, 25 cents.

CONTENTS.—Fernyherst Court, Part iv.; Half-hours in the Temple Church, by C. J. Vaughn; Sketches from Orkney; Wanderings in the Desert of the Exodus; Our Plates and Dishes; In a Corn-Field; Dorothy Fox; Two Dreams; Our Better Selves; Two Poems by Jean Ingelow; Jewish Burial Rites; Letters from the Tropics.

GOOD HEALTH for August is received. Every family would do well to subscribe for it.

CONTENTS.—Means of Preserving Health; Muscular Motion; The Mineral Constituents of Vegetables; Getting Cured; Woollens and Worsteds; Snake Bites and their Antidotes, Part ii.; The Circulation of the Blood, by Robert White, Jr., M. D.; The Eyesight and the Microscope; Cocoa; New Bread; Summer Complaints; Balloons and Ballooning; Instinct and Reason.

Published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass., at $2 per year.

APPOINTMENTS.

NEW YORK, (Cooper Institute, room 24), Sunday, Aug. 7.

WM. STUART.

KENDUSKEAG, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.
SURRY, Me., Sunday, Aug. 14.
No name sent with the above.—ED.

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT

CASH RECEIPTS.

ONE DOLLAR EACH FROM—J. L. Allen, Amanda Babcock, Russell Barnard, L. F. Arnold.

TWO DOLLARS EACH FROM—C. C. Webber, Susannah Blodgett, S. B. Emmons, Mrs. J. E. Peck.

VARIOUS SUMS—Joel K. Winter, $15 on pledge: S. Bragg, $5; Jas. Ham, Jr., 50 cents; R. H. Waldo, $5; Daniel Parsons, $5; Polly G. Pitts, 50 cents; H. N. Hazard, $1 50; Lewis Morgan, $3; Thomas J. Harris, $5.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

"W. H. T." $15.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

Timothy Wheeler, Elijah Bullard (book), R. H. Waldo (book), A. Boynton.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

S. COOPER.—If our entrances are correct there is still $5 due.

H. N. HAYWARD.—We have none of Judge Halsted's work. Any of our subscribers who wish his work should address "HON. O. S. HALSTED, Box 91, Newark, N. J.," and enclose $2, stating the fact that they are subscribers of the HERALD OF LIFE, and they will receive a copy. To others the price is $3.

S. B. EMMONS.—We have none of Bishop Whately's work, and know not where it can be had. Try your "clerical friend" with Judge Halsted's work entitled "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE." See directions to the foregoing correspondent.

The Fast Age.

To be slow, and be sure, was once the rule;
In State, and in Church, in Shop, and in School.
A seven years' hole was made in man's life,
To learn a good trade or get a good wife.
Two knots an hour, by land, or by sea,
Was all that old Darby and Joan could gee.
But times are changed in our latter day school,
And "neck or nothing," is now the rule.
The whizzing Steam car, whirls over the rail;
The news flashes by ahead of the mail.
Job's leviathan is but a fable
Of the Great Eastern, laying the cable.
No man can be wise who now dares to say,
There's nothing new under the sun to-day.
The church too now has caught the infection,
And drives Jehu like, fast to perfection.
Fairs, festivals, picnics, are all the rage,
To build up the church, in these latter days.
What would the good old John Wesley now say,
Could he take a peep at his church to-day?
Ribbons, and flounces, and simpering chits,
Would scare the poor man, clear out of his wits.
Such a sight as this, who ever did see?
I surely must have barked up the wrong tree.
Instead of a church, where good people pray,
It seems to me, I have gone to a play.
The church could boast of converting the world;
But now, it seems clear, the Tables are turned;
The good old cause is now left in the lurch;
The world has, alas! converted the church!
The word of the Lord to fables is turned.
The plain simple truth indignantly spurned.
Human traditions from heathenish lore,
Have buried the truth, God laid up in store.
Deep in the debris of ages long dark,
The true light extinguished to the last spark.
A pall of thick darkness covers the earth;
Long groaning in anguish for its new birth;
When all who sleep in the Lord, shall arise,
Their Bridegroom to meet, descending the skies.
Then darkness and sin, and sorrow shall cease;
The prayer shall be answered, "Let us have peace."

J. Parry.

Sandy Hill, N. Y.

What is Life?

Br. Storrs: The above question was asked and answered by Br. W. Fenn, satisfactorily to himself, in the "Crisis" of June 29th and July 6th, to whom I would like to present a few thoughts through the Herald of Life.

Br. Fenn: You ask "What is Life?" and give us your view of the question, with remarks which I purpose to notice, but shall not quote from yours verbatim in all cases; but shall not misrepresent you intentionally.

You say, "We think life is a state or condition, and it must be defined agreeable to the state or condition enjoyed." Do you mean "enjoyed" by life, or by the creature that lives, has life? If the latter, then the kinds of life are almost infinite as the "state or condition" of animals that live, have life, are beyond numbering by man. Therefore I think life cannot be "a state or condition." But you appear to reduce them, or life, to two kinds; one you say, is "mortal blood life." How is this? The term mortal belongs to that which is corrupt or corruptible and dying; and nothing can die that has not life, or does not live; and that which lives is an entity or being: therefore life must be an entity, if mortal as you say. "The term mortal expresses at once its nature." Again you say, "What kind of life did Adam have? A mortal one. Why so? Because he was subject to death." But was his life necessarily a temporal one? No; for he could have lived forever as an obedient subject; hence his life was not necessarily temporal by being mortal. Strange indeed that a mortal life, which must die "is not necessarily temporal!" Is it eternal? But you have just said, "the life of man is temporal because its (life's) condition is mortal. How do you forge the two together? But what is yet a mystery, if true, you say, Adam could have lived forever by a mortal temporal life, as you have intimated no necessity of a change. You say, "the nature of life is mortal." Again I ask, How is this? Every thing works according to "its nature;" and if the nature of life is mortal, as you say, its tendency is to work death, destroy itself; and there must be some other element or principle than life which gave and sustained animation in Adam 930 years warring against the life, if that is mortal, as you say it is. Will you please tell us what that something is, if you can find language that will express it?

You ask, "Is there no difference in a mortal and immortal life? Yes. One is the blood or mortal life, rendered temporal by prohibition; the other is immortal, rendered eternal by virtue of condition or state in nature." Would that "blood or mortal" life have been immortal and eternal had not that prohibition "rendered it temporal?" Surely I am aware that Adam was under "prohibition," but did not suppose that life was. But man is not the subject that you are treating upon at large, but life. Following the above quotation you say, "One is a living mortal being, and the other is a living immortal being." I might with propriety ask, where do you get your authority? For the scriptures never speak of a mortal nor immortal life a sa living being, element or principle. Your language makes every thing which has life a dual being.

Again you immediately say, "Life is a state commensurate with our nature, and that is mortal, hence the life is mortal." You have just said life is a living being, but now say it is a state. I think it cannot be both a mortal state and a living being. But that man is mortal we do not question. That life is a state, or "living being," is without proof. You quote several texts to show that Christ was made under the law to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." . . . "Having obtained eternal redemption for us." "Us" you have used several times. Who are the us and the we? As many as those terms embrace are redeemed and saved with an eternal salvation. You say Christ "redeems us by taking upon him our nature and obeying the law and suffering the penalty for sin." This penalty you say is eternal death, and the law knows no mercy, no forgiveness. Then it follows that Christ is and will be eternally dead, else he does not suffer the penalty. Again you say, Christ as a substitute for man suffered the penalty for sin, which is "eternal death," which leaves Christ forever dead, else he is not a substitute. You say, "The facts are these: a mortal life or state is by man eternally forfeited, and Christ comes in the same state and with the same life in kind and proves his right to an eternal preservation and perpetuation of that life and state," which is mortal corrupt and dying. "And unless that mortal life and state is restored to Christ (which he had a perfect right to) justice must be satisfied. How is this, that what Christ has a perfect right to, justice is not willing to grant, i. e., the mortal life and state? Therefore justice and right are at variance, according to your language, and how, I ask, can a corrupt, mortal, temporal life be eternally preserved and perpetuated? I know of no rule or principle that will reconcile or show many of your statements truthful.

But I must pass on, for the culminating point (a mortal resurrection) is before us. Again you say, "The blood of Christ has sprinkled the eternal mercy seat for the race, the penalty for the Adamic sin ("eternal death") is proved, and all the race are entitled to Adamic life." But can they get any other? Yes, by patient continuance in well doing, seeking for glory, honor and immortality they (the race) get eternal life, at the sounding of the last trump and the resurrection of the dead. They will all be changed from mortality to immortality, and fashioned like unto his (Christ's) glorious body."

Well, Br. Penn, if you are correct, then there is full and complete universal salvation, which I think you do not believe. Again you say, "the sacrifice Christ made was a mortal blood life, which calls for the redemption of a mortal blood life only." . . . "What man gets over and beyond what he lost (i. e., a mortal blood life) is not redemption, but a gift for other considerations; than that embraced in the sacrifice of Christ." You say, the race is represented in the sin of Adam. Then, assuredly, "The race is represented in the fall and loss sustained by Adam. Now the question is, what did Adam lose and what are the consequences of the fall?

Here, my brother, is where you have greatly erred in assuming erroneous premises, and by unscriptural terms have tried to sustain an unscriptural theory. Will you please look at this matter, presented in a different light, with christian candor? As you say, if man gets any thing more than a mortal blood life, it is what is not called for, or embraced in the consideration of the sacrifice by Christ, which was only a mortal blood life. I ask, Is not such corrupt and impure? Certainly it is, if mortal. Will God accept of such to make an atonement? Was he given us an example of that kind? But let us look at the "considerations" of the sacrifice and see what redemption is "called" for.

As far as we can know, it was God's original plan to people the earth with a holy family, which would beautify the earth, and delight themselves in a state of purity and holiness, or innocency, walking and talking with their Creator. It was such a state that Adam and Eve enjoyed before he transgressed the "prohibition" that was upon him. He sinned; mortality began its work, producing a physical change; dying began developing itself in the sweat of the face; a conflict ensued between the mortal dying element and the life principle which sustained animation for 930 years when the mortal so corrupted and weakened the physical man, Adam, that he died, according to the threatening annexed to the prohibition. Here, in the death of Adam and Eve, forever ended the Adamic penalty, the threatening being fully executed.

As Adam became mortal he could not transmit immortality to his posterity; they follow in the wake of sin and death. Iniquity abounds, with pains and groans, stripes and contentions, wars and fighting, persecution and death has filled the land. The earth is cursed with briars, thorns and barrenness; and racked with eternal commotion is groaning for deliverance. What has caused all this which has sunk man from his high state, cursed the earth and filled the world with suffering and sorrow? It is sin. You say, "the race is represented in the sin of Adam." Then they are equally represented in the loss by the fall, and redemption calls for a restoration of man to as high a state of purity and intimacy with God as that from which he fell, and also an end of sin. The earth freed from the curse, made new, wherein the righteous will dwell, a holy family, in harmony with his purpose, will inherit the earth forever. That God, who hath no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, might not perish, but have everlasting life. Here is the condition of redemption, and the three great considerations of the sacrifice, 1st, the removal of sin and its consequences, 2d, the peopling of the earth, and the manifestation of the boundless love of God to man in the gift of his Son. "God now can be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus" . . . "unto the justification of life." There is no other ground of life or justification mentioned in God's word. This is a redemption from sin that is worth talking about and becoming the character of a God of infinite love and goodness.

O, my Br., talk no more of the sacrifice Christ made as of little worth, merely "a natural blood life, which has the taint and curse of sin upon it, and no better; but the same as that which sinful dying men possess, and only of a hand's breadth." Talk no more of redemption which has no immortality and eternal life in it, but merely a dying blood-life: say not again, if men get any thing more than that, it is what was not embraced in the consideration of the sacrifice and redemption's plan. Such my Br., is not God-honoring.

I could say, Let my right hand forget her cunning, and my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth rather than advocate such as being redemption, which is not redemption. But when I look at the high state of purity in Eden, when in innocency our first parents walked and talked with God, and basked mid the pleasures and enjoyments of the garden, and the prospects or design of a holy family on the earth, then see the suffering, degradation, ruin and death, the fruit of sin which cast man from the presence of God; then think of the love of God in the gift of his Son, and the plan of redemption to bring fallen man (through faith in Jesus) from the dead into the glorious immortality and eternal life, and Eden restored. I feel that to join the song, "Thou art worthy . . . for thou wast slain to redeem us to God" (not into a corrupt sinful "mortal state") will be the delight of the saints, and in harmony with God's word and God-honoring.

While on the other hand, to say, redemption, and all the sacrifice calls for, and all that is embraced in the consideration of the sacrifice Christ has made, is, that all that have fallen beneath the power of sin unto death, shall be brought back into a living "mortal state," under the power of sin (for such are, who are in a mortal state) and must again enter the same death state except there be a Divine interposition in their behalf,—I say, to say such is redemption and all the sacrifice calls for, it looks to me, to be without due consideration; far from the truth, and a dishonor to God.

I shall defer for the present noticing the concluding portion of your article in the issue of July 6. Your Br., in hope of life.

S. Cooper.

Woodstock Valley, Conn., July 25, 1870.

For Whom it may Concern.

A SERMON BY A WOMAN.

I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet; neither has the consecrating oil touched my head; nor hand of priest, or presbyter: and yet, a "dispensation of truth" has been committed to me which I dare to present.

"Small arms" are intended for instant use, and are not expected to "kill at long range;" so I shall come to my subject without circumlocution, and endeavor to bring it close home.

My text may be found in 1 Pet. i 22. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth, through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently."

Whatever else the text may contain, the subject I shall draw from it will be presented under two heads; First, Soul-purity: Secondly, Brotherly love as a consequence.

It seems almost superfluous to remind Adventists that the souls here spoken of, are not mythical, imaginary beings which haunt the minds of our orthodox brethren. And yet, (judging from certain habits indulged in by too many of them,) if they aspire to be classed with the soul-purifiers of my text; an inside ghost, having as little connection as possible with the outward man, would be a convenience, not to say an absolute necessity!

But the apostle does not accommodate them, neither must I. The doctrine of the text evidently is, seeing ye have purified yourselves—your whole beings, composed, if need be, of soul, body and spirit—all that goes to make you what you are, "in obeying the truth." If this is so, if personal purity, not merely of an inside ghost, but of an outside man, is here recognized, and by implication enjoined, where then is that filth-producing, God-dishonoring, civilization-disgracing, and Christianity-scandalizing tobacco-habit, which has become so alarmingly prevalent among us? "It is excluded!" And why not? A thousand reasons could be given, why this loathsome habit should become "like chaff before the wind, and a thistle-down before the whirlwind,"—why it should be "rooted out of its place and chased out of the world!"

But this does not agree with my present purpose. I shall not now speak of its evil effect upon the human organism; though no intelligent physician would risk his reputation for a moment (whatever his own practice may be) by claiming that it is not highly injurious, especially to the nervous system. But when men sin against their own souls, though "punishment for an evil work" may not be "executed speedily," yet sooner or later, nature herself rises up to avenge the insult; and her retribution, though just, is sometimes terrible!

Neither will I speak of the expensiveness of this habit. Yet with full knowledge that widows are burning the midnight oil to obtain food for their little ones, and orphans crying for bread "out of their desolate places," I marvel that Christians can chew up and spit out, and "into smoke consume away," the means which God has made them stewards over, and which if rightly used, would make the widow's heart sing for joy; to say nothing of sending the truth of God to the perishing, which is now crippled for lack of means.

But a personal purification is in the text. I shall, therefore, resolutely keep to the point; and though the monster's sins are legion, I shall only arraign him as the deadly foe of purity and decency—a very Goliath of corruption.

But, says a friend who rolls this sin as a sweet morsel under his tongue, "It is not that which entereth into a man that defileth him; but that which cometh out." Thank you, sir! It is just that which now claims our attention. Were it not for "that which cometh out," we, who have not known the depths of satan by experience, would never have dreamed how vile, and unutterably filthy is that abomination that goeth in.

It is "what cometh out," that causes us to cross the street so hastily that if possible we may escape the sickening odor that has, in defiance of all rules of good breeding, dared to pollute our atmosphere.

It is that, which causes us to "shake hands like a backslider," and limit our friendly and Christian greeting to the short space of time during which we can hold our breath. And (softly in your ear if you please,) it is that which sometimes leads the thoughts irreverently from the human face divine, to the horses seen in the vision, out of whose mouths proceeded "fire, and smoke, and brimstone!"

It is "what cometh out" that creates those little pools of filth which ladies have to take such pains to avoid in stores, and depots, and rail-cars. And worst of all, it is that which desecrates the house of God, entering even into the sacred desk and polluting the very steps of the altar! "Tell it not in Gath! publish it not in the streets of Askelon! Lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice!" Nay, verily; even Philistia's unregenerate daughters love purity and cleanliness too well to rejoice at such a spectacle. But rather, lest they become hopelessly disgusted with a religion which fails to do what they know a noble manhood, unassisted by divine grace should do—break every yoke and let the slaves of a depraved appetite go free.

A precious brother, whose praise is in all the churches, and who is himself an example of purity in this matter, once said in a social meeting, that he "desired to appear pleasant in the eyes of his brethren." This is a laudable desire, and promotive of brotherly love.

But if this principle is correct, and it is, that our abhorrence of evil is in exact proportion to our appreciation of good, how can brethren appear altogether pleasant in the eyes of those in whose hearts "whatsoever things are pure, or lovely or of good report," and find joyful recognition, while they cling to practices from which we turn with loathing and disgust? The thing is simply impossible; and the ease and grace, with which the apostle steps from personal purity to brotherly love, in our text, suggests the thought that in his own mind, there was a legitimate connection between the two.

Another thought, (which is, however, but carrying out the principle named above), the clearer our perceptions of the pure, the true and the beautiful, the more painful do all opposite developements become; and the more we love an individual, the greater our grief that he should not strive to become altogether lovely.

My thoughts revert now, to brethren with whom I have been associated; men of large minds, and large hearts, whose presence would command my admiration, and their memory seem like the perfumed breath of clover-blossoms, were it not for this cruel stain upon their manhood.

But alas! alas! I can but adopt the language of the weeping prophet, "How is the most fine gold changed! The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they (become) as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!"

But is there no remedy? Must brotherly love be strangled in this way, when we are bidden to let it continue? There is a remedy, and it is indicated in the text. "Seeing ye have purified your souls . . . unto unfeigned love of the brethren." Purification comes first, and brotherly love follows easily, naturally and legitimately.

Let us imagine for a moment, the Saviour of men, with all his matchless moral perfection, seated on the Mount of Olives, giving utterance to these beautiful words, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth;" and then stopping to eject a mouthful of tobacco juice before adding, "Blessed are the pure in heart." Do we not start back horrified, and feel that the thought is sacrilege? And yet who of us has not seen the precious truth of God, issuing from polluted lips, even the lips of those who think they are walking in his steps?

"My brethren, these things ought not so to be." I appeal to your manhood, your Christianity, to your love of God, and the honor of his cause, to let this things have an end. Put away this abomination from you. Cleanse your hands, and purify your hearts, so shall the words of my text lovingly enfold you, and press home to your grateful hearts its gentle admonition.

Remarks by the Editor.

The "woman" who wrote and sent us the foregoing "sermon" is no fanatic, but one of the most sound and judicious among the "Mothers in Israel." How far our brethren are guilty of the practice of using tobacco, we do not know, but we fully agree with her who wrote the above sermon, it is one of the most filthy of all practices; and we feel, almost daily when in the streets (for it has no place in our house), as we think Lot felt in Sodom, when his "righteous soul was vexed from day to day with their unlawful deeds;" or some like Jonah, when he said, "I do well to be angry." We abhor the practice; and we have dodged, run, and turned every way to keep clear of the filthy atmosphere of tobacco smokers, and to avoid "that which cometh out of their mouths." Our only comfort in this matter is, we shall have no such dodging to do after Christ's return. Let all who are expecting a part in that blissful state put the abominable tobacco weed from their habitations.

Children's Department.

Children's Sayings.

"A friend of mine has two bright little boys—Freddy, between three and four years old, and Willie, about five. A chronicle of their doings and sayings would fill a volume, but two specimens must suffice:

"Both were very fond of milk, and a mug of it always completed their supper. But, while in the country last summer, it so chanced that they one day saw the girl milking.

"'There, Willie," said Freddy, 'you see that, do you? I don't want any more milk after the cow's had it;' and he withdrew very much disgusted.

"That evening, when their mugs of milk were placed on table, both stood untouched. A reason of this phenomenon being asked, Freddy simply declared that he didn't want any milk after the cow had had it, but further refused to explain. Willie, however, told of the discovery of the morning.

"The mother then explained to them that the milk did not come to them second hand; that the cow ate grass, which was changed into milk by a wonderful chemical process, akin to that which produced every thing in nature. In the light of this explanation, Willie was satisfied, but Freddy still turned up his nose at milk, sticking to the original proposition.

"After supper, Willie, who, on these important occasions, always acted as expounder, took his brother aside into a corner.

"'It's all right, Freddy,' he said, 'and you can just go on drinking your milk again. The cow eats grass, and that's what makes it. Now, if the cow didn't eat the grass, you'd have to, you see. That's what the cow's for.'

"Freddy resumed his evening draughts. To his mind, the only alternative was eating grass, and from that he shrank.

"'Mamma, mamma,' cried a little boy, when the sun set gorgeously red, one Christmas eve, 'see how hot heaven is over there. Santa Claus is baking, I guess.'

"In manner somewhat like, did one of these natural philosophers account for another phenomenon. Hearing a man dump coal in the bin one day, with a terrible rumbling, he shouted:

"'O mother! now I know what makes thunder; it is God putting coal on.'

"Children are great realists, interpreting things in the most literal sense. To the infantile mind, the beautiful metaphor of the Lord walking in the garden in the cool of the day conveys the idea of a tangible presence.

"'I know,' said a little boy, to whom the passage was read; 'just as papa does, with his hands behind him, and an old coat on.'" —Selected.

Love is the Best Force.

Once two little boys were on the way to school. They were brothers, and their names were Frank and John. John was the older of the two and he liked to rule Frank by sharp words; but Frank did not like to be ruled in that way.

"Come on quicker. What a slow coach you are!" said John.

"It is not too late, and the day is hot," said Frank.

"I tell you I want to get to school in time to clean out my desk," said John. "Come, you shall come."

And then John tried to pull Frank along by main force; but the more John pulled the more Frank made up his mind not to yield. While the dispute went on they came to a place in the road where a man was trying to make a horse pull a great load of stones. The horse had stopped to rest, when the man began to beat him. This the horse did not like, for he had tried to do his best; so he stood stock still. In vain did the man lay on the lash; the horse would not start. In vain did he swear at him; the horse did not mind it.

Just then a young man came up, and said to the man with the load of stones, "Why do you treat a good, brave horse in that way? He would pull for you till he died if you would only treat him kindly. Stand aside, and let me show you how to treat a good horse."

So the man stood aside, and the young man went up and put his arm around the neck of the horse, and patted him on the back, and said: "Poor old fellow! It was too bad to lash you so when you were doing your best, and just stopped a minute to take breath."

And so the young man soothed the poor beast by kind words and soft pats with the hand, and then said to him, "Now, good old horse, see what you can do! Come, sir, we have only a few more steps to the top of the hill. Get up, now. Show you will do for love what you would not do for hate." The horse seemed to know what was said to him, for he started off at a strong, brisk pace, and was soon at the top of the hill.

"There, my good friend," said the young man to the driver, "I hope you see now that love is the best force; that even beasts will do for you, when you are kind, what they will not when you are harsh."

John heard all these words, and they set him to thinking. At last he said to Frank, "It is a hot day, and it is not late. Let us walk by the lane to school."

"No, John," said Frank, "I will take the short cut, and will walk just as fast as you want me to go. So, come on."

"Frank," said John, "love is better than hate, isn't it?" "O, a thousand times!" cried Frank.—Selected.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

On the Inquiry—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on Christ the Life Giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

Immortality. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by George Storrs. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	Life from the Dead, etc.,	5 cts
2.	A Defence of the Bible,	3 "
3.	The Judgment,	2 "
4.	The Living Soul,	2 "
5.	God is Love,	2 "
6.	Man's Nature and Destiny,	2 "
7.	The Atonement and Gospel Hope,	2 "
8.	The Doom of the Ungodly,	2 "
9.	Six Sermons, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	Devil—Satan—Demons,	5 "
11.	Soul Saved or Lost,	2 "
12.	Earth, not Heaven, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	Moral Depravity,	2 "
14.	Letter to a Clergyman,	2
15.	The Essential Baptism,	4 "
16.	Watch Tower (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	Constitution of Man (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	The Wicked Dead,	2 "
19.	The Future Life,	2 "
20.	Truth vs. Man's Wisdom,	2 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)
NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York,
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1870.

VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 42.
WHOLE NUMBER 328.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed:

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658,
NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

THAT BIBLE CLASS.

WE published last week a letter from Mrs. E. H. Peck, of Normal, Ill., followed by an article she addressed to the Bible Class in the Congregational Church in that place. She has written a reply to the questions that arose after the reading of her article, which she has sent us, and we insert, preceding it with a note she sent us accompanying it. She says:

Perhaps it will be well to state that Mr. Cook, the gentleman who asked what was meant by "salvation," gave his opinion that it was being kept from sin, and in proportion as we are kept every day from sin, in the same proportion we are ready to "shuffle off this mortal coil," and enter upon a future state.

I have not given his exact words, but think I have given their meaning. This did not quite satisfy me. It seemed to me that this was not exactly the "salvation," though I know full well, that in the glorious future God's children will be holy as well as perfectly happy.

TO THE CLASS.

I certainly did not expect to occupy any more of your time for the present, but feel called upon to answer a few questions and comments, drawn out by my paper of last Sunday. Deacon Smith wanted to know what the writer understood by the terms "perish" and "death." I could not very well give my idea of their meaning in that paper, without introducing the subject of future punishment for the wicked; and I believe it was decided by the class, a short time ago, that a discussion on this point would not be profitable. For one, I felt sorry for this decision. All admit that it is a subject of immense importance, and if we are not afraid of it, why not take it up? I should particularly like to hear Mr. Leiper's views in regard to its nature and duration. When he was asked if he believed in the everlasting punishment of the wicked, in the sense of the popular understanding of the words, his reply was something like this—I have nothing to do with that; I believe that just as long as the sinner is out of harmony with God, so long he will be tormented. This seemed to me rather evasive and unsatisfactory; so, for the present, at least, must say of him what was said of me last Sunday, "I cannot tell what he believes." I do not know that any member of this church firmly believes in the final restoration of all men to holiness and happiness; but I suppose it is well known that there are those who some times take part in our discussions that entertain this belief; and I have heard that at least one member of this church is inclined to receive it as truth; and if Mr. Leiper does not give a more direct answer to that plain question asked of him, I shall think that he, also, inclines very far in the same direction. Though regarded with considerable favor by many good and intelligent men, among whom, if I mistake not, may be mentioned Bishop Newton and Dr. Watts, this is a doctrine that I cannot find in the Bible. It seems to me to be entirely at variance with all the teachings of God's word, which I desire to take as my only rule of faith and practice.

Deacon Smith and I do not differ in regard to the duration of the "punishment." He believes it is everlasting, final, from which there can be no recovery. So do I. But we differ materially as to its nature. I think I understand him perfectly, and am willing to express my own views (in writing) at any suitable time. Even now, this much I will say in answer to the question—Do I understand "death" to mean annihilation? I think it means something very much like it. Philosophers tell us that not a single particle of matter can be annihilated. I shall not attempt to dispute this, but take the position that, as a tree when burned up "root and branch," can never again be a living tree, so, wicked men who are "destroyed by the Lord," can never, no never, again, have a living existence. The Bible teaches me that if we die out of Christ, there is no future life whatever for us. I will only give two texts, at present, in proof of this position; one from the Old Testament and one from the New, which agree perfectly. The LIFE-GIVER himself says, "He that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36: and in Job xxiv. 19, we read, "Drought and heat consume the snow-waters; so doth the grave those which have sinned." I believe that all who have the offer of the gospel and reject its free salvation through Christ, are in the same condition as though there had never been a Redeemer provided. They will "die in their sins," and "utterly perish in their own corruption." And this would have been the doom of all the race, but for the resurrection of Christ, as Paul plainly tells us in 1 Cor. i. v., "But now is Christ risen from the dead," and says to all that are his, "Because I live, ye shall live also."

Deacon Smith says, There is a death that never dies. Will he please tell me where in the Bible he finds those words? Of one thing I feel certain, either final restoration is true, or the utter destruction of all the wicked; for, sometime in the future, God will have a clean universe. Proof: "And every creature which was in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." The place of "everlasting torment" cannot be on the earth, for the earth is to be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the great deep. Nor can "the lake of fire be in the "bowels of the earth," for then it would be under the earth, where every creature is to be heard praising. Some have imagined it to be in the moon; but the moon is "in heaven." Then can it be in the sea? I think not, for John, looking far down along the ages into the future, says, There was no more sea. I think all must admit that Rev. v. 13 seems not to agree with the teaching, that somewhere in God's dominion, there will forever exist a great multitude that no man can number, which will continue throughout the countless ages of eternity, to blaspheme and curse their Maker. We are told "the wicked will never cease to sin in a future state, and therefore their torment will never cease." To my mind this seems like another plain contradiction of Scripture, unless it can be proven that the wicked are immortal, and this would be a rather difficult undertaking, as, according to Webster, "immortal" means "undying," "imperishable," and I can but believe that the wicked dead are dead, and have "utterly" perished "in their own corruption." Well, then, Paul tells us, He that is dead is freed from sin. (I am aware that these words may have an entirely different sense, but they will also apply here). And Solomon says, The dead know not any thing; and that there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave.

I was much interested in the discourses we had two weeks ago, from the man with silvery locks. But when he remarked, in the evening, that "demons" were supposed to be the spirits of the wicked dead, I could not accept it; as the Book does not say any thing like it, and I am not willing to receive as truth all the suppositions of men. If Solomon is right, if there is absolutely no knowledge, no device or work in the grave, I cannot imagine how the wicked dead can devise and work wickedness. But if President Blanchard is right, it seems to me very strange that an all-wise God should command Moses, "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death." And what an unspeakably awful thing it is to hang a man now, even for the most heinous crimes.

I believe the principal object of capital punishment in all civilized countries, is, to secure protection to society at large; and the life of the wilful and deliberate murderer is demanded of him, that he may not have it in his power to repeat the crime. But if, when wicked men are dead they have more "knowledge" than ever before, and larger capacity, not only for sinning against God, but working untold mischief and evil among the living of earth, it must be dreadfully wicked, even to send murderers out of this world. But my belief is, that we have "unclean spirits" and "devils" enough here, without going to some imaginary "under-world," or anywhere else to look for them.

Deacon Smith thinks if Christ does not "save us from our sins," he saves us from nothing. Does he mean that we are absolutely, and at all times, saved from sinning in this present life? Can he, can any one of the Class say, I am perfect—I sin not—my Saviour saves me from sin? "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves."—1 John i. 8. My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not (that is, wilfully and deliberately); and if any man (fall inadverdently into) sin (by reason of great trial and temptation, or through lack of watchfulness and prayer), we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.

I have thus given my understanding of John's words, from which I believe that Christ saves his people from the curse of the law, which is death, notwithstanding their sins; or in other words, in spite of their sins.

What does the devoted and self-sacrificing Paul say about this? Look at the viith chap. of our Epistle. Does he not represent the Christian's life as a continual warfare with sin? He could say, My heart is set, O Lord to do thy will. "With the mind, I myself serve the law of God: for I delight in his law after the inward man. But I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin and death." And this causes the cry, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me?" Who but Jesus Christ his Lord? "The law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, hath made us free from the law of sin and death;" and to them which are in him, there is, therefore, now, no condemnation.

He leads us on
By paths we did not know,
Upward he leads us, though our steps be slow,
Though oft we faint and falter on the way,
Though storms and darkness oft obscure the day,
Yet, when the clouds are gone,
We know He leads us on.

He leads us on
Through the unquiet years:
Past all our dream-land, hopes, and doubts and fears,
He guides our steps. Through all the tangled maze
Of sin, of sorrow, and unclouded days,
We know His will is done:
And still He leads us on.

And He at last,
After the weary strife—
After the restless fever we call life,
After the dreariness, the aching pain,
The wayward struggles which have proved in vain,
After all our toils are past,
Will give us rest at last.

It only remains for me to notice the remark made by some one in the class, that "the Father did not raise the Son from the dead;" that "he raised himself," repeating the words of Jesus, "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it up again." Far be it from me to wish to detract, even in the least degree, from the dignity and glory of our blessed Redeemer. But let us finish the verse, and I think we shall find that he did not claim to be altogether independent in this matter. He adds, "This commandment have I received of my Father."

We will now look at some texts which expressly teach that God raised him from the dead. Whom God raised up, having loosed the pains of death.—Acts ii. 24. The God of our fathers raised up Jesus.—V. 32. Unto you first, God having raised up his Son Jesus. —Acts iii. 26. God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again.—Acts xiii. 33. Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep.—Heb. xiii. 20. Who by him do believe in God, that raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory.—1 Pet. i. 21. Paul, an apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead.—Gal. i. 1. We have testified of God that he raised up Christ. —1 Cor. xv. 15.

I do not know the young lady who so beautifully read my paper of last Sunday. She certainly brought out all the merit it possessed, for which she has my sincere thanks.

TRUTH SEEKER.

THE GOSPEL HOPE A RESURRECTION FROM THE DEAD AT THE LAST DAY.

"He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36.

LET us consider the church of Christ as a unit; and all men most assuredly will just as soon as they are brought into the real Gospel liberty—that is, when they no longer look out on the things pertaining to the kingdom of God from a denominational stand-point. For not until men become willing to receive as divine truth only such things as come through the agency of the Holy Spirit, can they find that rest of faith upon which the Apostles relied, and upon which alone true believers ever since could with safety rely.

When this glorious state of mind is attained; when men seek truth with only one object in view—that they may fully understand God's will concerning themselves, and how to apply the truth for His glory, that men may be born again, and placed in the kingdom of Christ, and not to make them members of this or that sect; then, and not until then, will they be prepared to admit the truthfulness of the most simply spoken Scripture. Let us then not only take Christ for our Priest and King, but especially listen to him as our Prophet, that he may teach us how unwilling we are to give up our many opinions in regard to divine things. In our own opinion we are very wise; yet the Scriptures are very decided in telling us, 1 Cor. iii. 18, 19—"Let no one deceive himself. If any one seems to be wise among you in this world, let him become a fool, that he may become wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness before God." And in another place it is written, "the world by wisdom knew not God."

Let us now consider the passage which heads this article. It seems too plain to be misunderstood. If we admit a truthful translation is given us, are we not to understand that our salvation depends on Christ alone; that if we believe He is the Son of God, and that "He poured out his soul even unto death" for us, such belief will entitle us to everlasting life—after Christ has raised us from the dead. On the other hand, does it not as plainly teach that if we do not believe on him, but reject him, we shall never see life, but at death cease to be—the wrath of God abiding on us, preventing us from seeing life again of any kind: not to dwell in torment, this most certainly would be life; but the wicked who die in their sins "shall not see life."

"The wages of death."—Rom. vi. 23. Certainly we understand this to mean the opposite of life; that if a man spends his life in sin and disobedience, the wages God will pay him will be death; he shall not inherit what Christ will give his followers—everlasting life. If Paul meant us to understand by this passage that the wages of sin was everlasting torment, is he not greatly to blame for not saying so? All admit Paul's honesty in all he said. In his letter to the Romans, he declares himself willing to be "accursed from Christ" for his brethren's sake, and finally laid down his life for the sake of the truth.

But let us look further at what Paul says in 1 Cor. xv. 21: "For since by man (Adam) came death, by man [Jesus Christ] came also the resurrection of the dead." This is too plain to need one word of comment. Verse 22: "For as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive." Does not Paul plainly say in this verse, that when we depart this life and are laid away in the grave, if we have not been "begotten of the Spirit"—that is, if we die out of Christ, taking only the sinful nature of Adam with us to our graves —we cease forever to be; are, so far as life is concerned, annihilated. On the other hand, "So in Christ shall all be made alive." That is, if begotten by the Spirit, if adopted by our Heavenly Father, if the atoning blood of Jesus has cleansed their hearts, they (the righteous), for and in consideration of thus being "in Christ," shall live again—to use Paul's own words, "be made alive." But the 23d verse especially demands our attention, as it tells us there are but two orders of the resurrection of the dead—not three orders, which would be necessary to include the wicked dead. Paul is quite emphatic, asserts but two orders—Christ the first order, afterward they that are Christ's at His coming. Surely any one who will read carefully the whole xvth chapter will find no difficulty in settling the question of the resurrection of the dead. It is plainly set forth that only by being in Christ can such a thing possibly take place.

Man sinned, according to the Bible account; for this God sentenced him to death —claimed his blood, which was his life. That life could not be taken again by Adam himself; but God gave him a Redeemer, whose blood, when offered up once for all (which blood was the life of Jesus), entitles all who die believing in his atonement to a new life from the grave—when he comes "the second time, unto salvation."

How sad to reflect on what is now preached as the Gospel. Little or nothing said about this, the only Gospel hope—man dead, man living again through a resurrection from the dead. In exchange for this great triumph of the cross, going to heaven at death has been substituted—a doctrine not taught in either Old or New Testament, while the former looms up on a hundred pages to cheer and encourage those who look for Jesus the second time, unto salvation. In Luke xiv. 14, the Saviour says to those who should call the poor and not the rich to their feasts, that they should be recompensed, not in going to heaven at death, but "at the resurrection of the righteous." In John vi., although not one word is said about going to heaven at death, Jesus repeatedly tells his disciples that he will "raise them up at the last day." "I am the resurrection and the life," said Jesus to Martha and Mary; said nothing about Lazarus being in heaven, but told them their brother should rise again.

In Acts xxiii. 6, Paul says: "For the hope of the resurrection of the dead I am called in question." That is what Paul preached; that was the hope of the Gospel. In the xxvith chapter, he says, "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made to the fathers; for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews." This was the same charge referred to in the preceding quotation, only a different hearing. Paul had been telling the Jews that all their hope was in Christ, no longer in the law; that all Jews as well as Gentiles would be utterly destroyed unless "engratted" into Christ. For preaching this, the hope of the Gospel, he stood before his accusers awaiting whatever punishment should be put upon him.

In 1 John iii. 2, 3, that Apostle writes: "Beloved, now are we the Sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Oh that the poison were taken away from the Gospel, that men could believe its plain teachings, that Jesus died for the "redemption of our bodies" from the grave; and not to take our "immortal souls" to heaven at death. O God, send down the light of truth, is the prayer of

A. N. B.

—The Nazarene.

MEN miss truth more often from their indifference about it, than from intellectual incapacity.

ABRAHAM'S FAITH AND OBEDIENCE.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

"Now the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed. So Abram departed as the Lord had spoken unto him."

What previous knowledge Abram had of the Lord we cannot tell, or what was his youthful training we cannot tell, but one thing he shows, wonderful faith and confidence in the Lord; also, a readiness to obey God at once, which can be seen throughout his whole history.

God is pleased with this simple faith of Abram's, and promises all the land as far as he could see it; also promises him seed as the stars that cannot be numbered.

These promises to a faithless one would seem impossibilities; for Abram had come a stranger from Ur, of the Chaldees, and how was he to get the land, all of it? Besides, he was childless. Nevertheless, he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness. O Abram, thy faith, thy simple childlike faith, and how it pleased thy Father and God.

By and by, we find Abram advanced in years, ninety years old and nine, and the Lord occasionally appearing to him. The Lord knew Abram and loved him, and loved to appear to him and talk with him. He again and again repeated his faithful promises to his servant, making them every time more full and emphatic. One time he changes his name from Abram to Abraham: For, God says, a father of many nations have I made thee. A question here. Why did God repeat those same promises to his servant so often? For the same reason that we need to read the promises of the word over so often. To have them always in rememberance.

Again we find God promising a son to Abram and Sarah under seemingly impossible circumstances. Sarah was faithless; but Abraham believed the word the Lord had spoken, and got the promised son, Isaac, with whom the covenant should be established.

Did God see that Abraham's faith was established now, without any further trial? No; the severest test was coming. And it came to pass after these things that God did tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham: and he said, Behold here I am. And he said, Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of. What, Isaac! Is it not a mistake? Is it not rather Ishmael, to get him out of the way lest he contest the inheritance with Isaac? Did the tried patriarch talk thus? No. No staggering. Not a word. And Abraham rose up early in the morning and saddled his ass, and took two of his young men with him—and Isaac his son, and clave the wood for the burnt offering, and rose up and went unto the place of which God had told him.

Abraham leaves the young men behind, but he and Isaac come to the place of which the Lord had told him. And Abraham built an altar, and laid the wood in order, and bound his son Isaac, and laid him on the altar upon the wood. And Abraham stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son.

O what confidence, what steadfast, beautiful confidence in his God, ("he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." Jesus). Here his God is is satisfied; and the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven and said, Abraham, Abraham. And he said, here am I. In the spot where God could speak to him. And he said, lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: And he took the ram and offered it up for a burnt offering instead of his son. And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, In the mount of the Lord it shall be seen.

Abraham has now stood the most severe test. He withholds nothing, and God comes freely out to him, and says, By myself have I sworn. This is God himself. He could swear by no greater, and by this earth he again repeats the profuse promises: Because thou hast obeyed my voice.

Afterward God himself says, "Abraham my friend." What a position to arrive to; to be called the friend of God! How did Abraham arrive at it? Not by great acts, but by simply hearing the word of the Lord and obeying immediately. Rising early in the morning to obey, not putting off till a more convenient season.

Have we audible and distinct talking from God as Abraham had? We have his written word, wherein is revealed his will toward us; and if we are his children, we have his Spirit to illuminate our minds, so we might know the things which are freely given to us of God. If we have not his Spirit dwelling in us, then we are living after the flesh, and shall die. Striving to attain to the resurrection of the dead.

RACINE, Wis., Aug. 1870.

A WORD ABOUT SACRIFICING.

UNDER the Mosaic Law, the first fruits and the firstlings of the flocks and herds, without spot or blemish, was requir ed for sacrifice to God. Although "whatsoever things the Law saith, it saith them under the Law," yet there are certain principles underlying the whole that apply to all mankind, and are eternal in their nature. The principles of the justice and goodness of God, and his claims upon the adoration and obedience of his subjects, as set forth in the Law, are just as prominent and important under any other dispensation. Those under the Law were "debtors to keep the whole Law," but the indebtedness of those under the liberty of the Gospel is far greater. "To whom much is given, of him much will be required." Suppose an Israelite had kept the best of his fruits and his flocks for his own use, and offered the refuse (that he could make no other profitable use of) as a sacrifice to God, no one will claim that the offering would have been at all acceptable. It would have been as palpably a violation of the Law as if no sacrifice had been offered. Now, as God is unchangeable, how may we suppose he receives the same kind of service now, from those who are favored with the extraordinary privileges of the Gospel? Do we render proper service to God when we spend all our time and talents and substance for ourselves and the world, without offering any portion of his bounty in any manner of return? Do we honor God when we, as individuals or as organizations, give even largely of our first fruits apparently for the glory of God, but in reality as an advertisement for public favor? The real sacrifice required is that of a "broken and contrite heart;" all other sacrifice without this is unavailing. Is it not the meanest kind of selfishness to devote all the energies of youth and manhood to the gratification of fleshly lust, reserving in contemplation for the service of God only the feebleness of old age, or perhaps a deathbed, when this world can no longer be enjoyed?

Reader, we sincerely urge you to consider this subject. Make a personal matter of it; the responsibility is personal, and the consequences will be personal. If you are a professor, you have no excuse for not devoting your first and best energies to God's service. "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." "Having food and clothing, be therewith content." "Your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of these things," and "he is more ready to give than you are to ask."

If you are not a believer on the Lord Jesus Christ, and a future life through his resurrection, remember that you owe something to God for his tender mercy and providing care even in this world. But whether you will hear or whether you will forbear, God provided for you a life beyond the grave, with which this life can in no way be compared. You are now under sentence of death—eternal death, and God has "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." Jesus died a sacrifice for your sins, and God raised him from the dead, according to the Scriptures, and has promised to "raise up at the last day" whosoever believeth on the Son. And he has promised his Holy Spirit to them that ask it, to "lead them in the way of all truth." Be candid with yourself, and answer this one question: Is it not better, wiser, more profitable, to sacrifice the uncertain enjoyments of this uncertain life, and in the end gain an eternity of real life and real enjoyment? Think on these things. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."—The Nazarene.

"CHRISTIANS have Christ's intercession in heaven for them.—Rom. viii. 34. The Spirit's consolation in all their troubles.—1 Pet. iv. 14. The beneficial ministry of angels, who are sent forth on their account.—Heb. i. 14. A stock of prayers going up for them all the world over.—Eph. vi. 18. And multitudes of precious promises in the Scriptures, for every line, word, and syllable of which the faithfulness of God stands engaged."

CLOUDS WITH SILVER LININGS.—Sorrows are like tempest clouds; in the distance they look black, but when above us, scarcely gray. As sad dreams indicate coming joy, so will it be with the so often torturing dream of life when it hath past.—Jean Paul Richter.

ITALY, ROME AND THE POPE.

It is understood that in the absence of the French troops the King of Italy is to take care of Rome. The Holy Father will doubtless consider this the admission of the wolf into the fold; for the Italian State within the last five years has appropriated, sequestrated, taken and absorbed in monasteries, convents, etc., millions of the property of the Church, and in a recent supplemental act of the Italian Parliament, called by the indignant clergy the "Ecclesiastical Spoliation bill," pretty much all that was left of their Church property and incomes has been swept away. The law makes a great reduction in the number of ecclesiastics of all degrees in all parts of the kingdom, and reduces the pay of the reserved force to the smallest possible allowance. In this business the revolution in Italy has been more sweeping even than that under Juarez in Mexico, and it has been carried out professedly in obedience to the injunction of the New Testament, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust do corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in the kingdom of heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal." Hard as it may be, however, for the Holy Father to accept the protection of Victor Emanuel as a State necessity with France in the shape of a concession to Italy, we fear that the good Pio Nono will have to submit. His only alternative will be to protest and thus become a Protestant, and leave the Holy City to the spoiler.

It has been intimated, too, from Rome that the persecuted Pope contemplates this course, and a temporary refuge under the protection of Protestant England in the island of Malta. This, too, may possibly come to pass; for if turned over by Napoleon to the tender care of Garibaldi, the Holy Father, in leaving Rome, will hardly fly to the soil of France; nor, after the abrogation by Austria of her Concordat, will he seek for protection in that quarter; while Spain, which under the late Queen Isabella and her Bourbon predecessors, was the model of loyalty and pious devotion to the head of the Church, has hardly now a corner in which he could rest in contentment. In truth, should Pio Nono resolve to fly from the protection of Italy, as the lamb flies from the protection of the wolf, such is the condition of things in the Catholic States around him that he may go to the protection of Protestant England at Malta, or to Protestant Prussia as an exile; or, peradventure he come to the free land of America, where there will be none to molest him or make him afraid.

We rather incline to the opinion, however, that, reduced to the choice of the protection of Italy or a flight from Rome, the Holy Father, fortified with his infallibility, and strong in the faith of St. Peter, will stick to the Vatican and bide his time. We rather think that he will do this from considerations of policy and of duty, and patiently as possible await the issues of this Franco-Prussian war. In sore distress he is doubtless now meditating upon the alarming aspect of European affairs, and over the sorrowful difference in the power of the Holy See when Ferdinand and Isabella I. of Spain apprised the Pope of the discovery of a new world and asked the temporal jurisdiction over it from the temporal king of kings, and compared with this epoch of unbelief when Isabella II. and the most devoted daughter of the Church is an exile in foreign lands. There remains still, however, this great and precious consolation to the faithful Pope in the Church of Christ, that he is the successor and representative of St. Peter; that St. Peter is the rock upon which the Church is built; that "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," and that from the blessed Peter his living successor in office holds on earth the keys of the kingdom of heaven, which neither Victor Emanuel, nor Garibaldi or Mazzini, nor Francis Joseph, Prim, Bismarck, nor Napoleon can take away. Lastly, let the Holy Father forget not that as head of the Church he is infallible, and therefore has nothing to fear, whether as ruler or guest in Rome or as an exile in Malta, the United States or the remotest corner of the globe.

The foregoing we copy from the "N. Y. Herald" of the 7th inst. Poor old Pope, his "infallibility" seems likely to be followed by infallible ruin. "Her plagues shall come in one day," saith inspiration. Have they begun? It looks like it. "Strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Let us wait patiently the Lord's time. The prophecy "will speak and not lie." JEHOVAH reigns.

CAMP-MEETING IN MAINE.

THERE will be an Advent Camp-Meeting in North Hermon, on the ground we occupied last year, commencing Sept. 5. It is five miles from Bangor. A boarding tent will be under the direction of Br. Charles Philips. Board for man and beast at a reasonable rate. Those coming with tents will find lumber and straw on the ground. Preaching brethren generally, are invited to attend our camp-meeting. We would say, This meeting is to be a free one, for all. There will be no one to dictate the preachers what they shall or shall not preach. We hope to see a large gathering of the dear saints at Camp Hermon this year. Come, brethren and sisters, filled with the Spirit and love of God; then we can labor for the perishing, and strengthen the weak.

CHARLES E. PHILIPS,
LIBERTY WETHERBEE,
GEO. W. BROWN,
DANIEL E. IRELAND,
WILLIAM PATTEN,
} Committee of Arrangement.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 10, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

ZION'S HERALD: DON'T BE IN HASTE.

WE learn from the "Advent Herald," that "Zion's Herald" (both Boston papers) is expressing its "happiness" at "the return," of one who has been a prominent Life preacher, "to our church: and states,"

"At a late preacher's meeting in this city (Boston), he made a full retraction of his views on the mortality of the soul, and other views of the destructionists, and was cordially welcomed by the brethren:" and adds—"We hope" one "who once was high in our church honor and love, Rev. George Storrs, will come and do likewise."

We thank Zion's Herald, or its editor, "Rev. Gilbert Haven," for the kindly wish; but he may be assured we shall be in no hurry to follow such an example as he speaks of. Thirty years experience in the Life views, with much study of the Scriptures, are not to be thrown away by us for the honor of being "cordially welcomed by the brethren" of the Methodist E. Church, much as we may esteem them. No, Br. Haven, we are too well rooted and grounded in the doctrine of "Life only in Christ," to sell our birthright for any thing man, or any body of men can give us, however honorable or respectable they may be.

We counted the cost, thirty years ago, when we first set out in our present course. We knew, well, we were to lose our position as a minister not only in the Methodist E. Church—but that we were to be rejected from all existing church organizations; and that we must travel alone, having no expectation that our views would, in our lifetime, receive many adherents.

We received our views not from man; for we were not taught them by men; but we received them from the living oracles of God, by a patient and protracted search of the Bible; and have been led on to our present stand-point in the same manner: and having passed the point where we suffered the loss of all things, temporal and social, and having been sustained by God through it all, and having known the heavenly peace, love, and joy which the truth and its experience brings, and the power of Divine grace to sustain us amid all the conflicts against popular errors, we shall not be likely to make a "retraction" in any meeting of "preachers," however honorable their body, or however "high" it might exalt us in their estimation.

The "hope" of our kind Br. Haven, therefore, is not likely to be realized. We doubt if his "hope" in this matter is not as baseless as the "orthodox" hope of "going to heaven at death." One element of hope may exist, viz: desire: but the other element, viz: expectation, has, we believe, no basis. Because one here and there turns back to Egypt—and we have seen several such cases—that forms no ground for expecting that "George Storrs" should follow them. We lived and were advancing in the Life views before they were born in the things of religion; and find ourself unmoved and unterrified by their "retractions." We have seen stars fall from heaven, and the firmament was just as luminous after it as before: the loss was not perceivable, and it will not be if more fall away. We can well afford to part with such as are not of us. "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us they would have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us."—1 John ii. 19.

We have said thus much on the supposition that "Zion's Herald" has made a true statement in regard to the "retraction" spoken of: but without insinuating that it has made a misrepresentation designedly, we put it to the respected editor of that paper—"Rev. Gilbert Haven"—if he or some of his correspondents have not stated, in the article named, that which is not true? Did not the person, said to have made the "retraction," state, definitely, in a Methodist pulpit, in Boston, two Sabbaths since, "Your dead friends are asleep; and their future life depends on a resurrection?" Did not the supposed "retraction" proceed from the wish, on the part of the "Methodist Preachers' Meeting," that the person spoken of would really abandon the Life views soon, rather than from any actual present abandonment? Was not "the wish father to the thought." Was there not too much "haste" in "Zion's Herald's" announcement? We think there was; and therefore we repeat our caution to that paper, and all our Methodist friends, "Don't be in haste" to proclaim "retractions" of Life Views, lest your character for accuracy suffer by it. Depend upon it, such statements, if proved incorrect, will damage yourselves more than us; and the more you blazon them abroad at your campmeetings—as has been done—and in your papers, the more you injure yourselves rather than us.

OUR METHODIST FRIENDS.

IT was several years before we could get an exchange with "Zion's Herald," of Boston, and the "Christian Advocate" of this city. After awhile they came regularly for two or three years, and we endeavored to treat them with christian courtesy. True, we noticed their remarks in relation to our views; especially those of "Zion's Herald," as we held that paper in higher esteem than the "Advocate," because when we resided in New England that was our favorite. But, for some cause, both of them have ceased to visit us. Well, we do not intend to blame them. Ours might have been an annoyance to them; and as "Rev. N. D. George," of their Church, has come out in a book against us, they may think further intercourse with us is not desirable. We submit to their decision, but give them our parting salutation in the language of ISAAC TAYLOR, in his "Wesley and Methodism." He says:

"When once this weighty question of the after life has been opened, and when it shall have come into the hands of well-informed Biblical interpreters, a controversy will ensue, in the progress of which it will be discovered that, with unobservant eyes, we and our predecessors have been so walking up and down, and running hither and thither, among dim notices and indications of the future destines of the human family, as to have failed to gather up or to regard much that has lain upon the pages of the Bible, open and free to our use. Those who, through a course of years, have been used to read the Scriptures unshackled by systems, and bound to no conventional modes of belief, such readers must have felt an impatience in waiting—not for the arrival of a new revelation from heaven, but of an ample and unfettered interpretation of that which has so long been in our hands. . . .

"The past Methodism was far from being a message of wrath, proclaimed by men of fierce and fanatical tempers: it was a message of joy, hope, and love; and it made its conquests as such, notwithstanding those bold and unmeasured denunciations against sin which it so often uttered. And so it will be with the future Methodism; and although it will rest itself upon a laboriously obtained belief concerning the 'wrath to come,'—a belief that will heave the human mind with a deep, convulsive dread,—yet, and notwithstanding this preliminary, the renovation which we look for will come in as the splendor of day comes in the tropics;—it will be a sudden brightness that makes all things glad!"

PROF. C. F. HUDSON'S POSITION.

[A few weeks since, we gave some statements of his position on the resurrection question. As he was unquestionably the most able writer that has appeared in the defence of the resurrection of the wicked dead, we have thought best to reproduce a notice we took of his position in the "Bible Examiner," Sept. 1863, while the Prof. was still living, and to which he never replied, that we are aware of. Our notice was as follows:]

LIFE FROM THE DEAD.

UNDER the head of "The Resurrection of Condemnation" Prof. C. F. HUDSON published five articles. We have no intention of reviewing them, being willing they should carry all the weight they are entitled to; but as he published an article in the "Bible Examiner" in 1857, pp. 122–125—to which we made no reply at the time—and has now reproduced that article entire in his recent effort in defence of the resurrection of the unjust or wicked dead, we have thought best to place some extracts from it again before our readers, that they may judge of the value of his position on the question. He speaks as follows:

I will offer what I regard as the true view of the resurrection of the unjust, and, taking the doctrine out of its old theological connection, will try to give it a new setting, in which it may even reflect the divine goodness and love. . . .

Respecting the resurrection of the unjust, then, I can heartily say, that if they are raised up for the sake of being punished, then I know not how to vindicate the goodness of God. He might be just, but He would not appear great or magnanimous. . . .

The wicked dead are raised, then, not for the sake of their punishment. Rather, "the second death" is the result of their resurrection; and the reason or design of that resurrection is to be sought elsewhere. The Bible never speaks of the wicked as being raised up in order that they may be punished, or that God may collect his dues in their sufferings, or for any other need of justice. The justice of the Infinite, or of the Universe, is not so poor as this.

Thus he seems to reject, entirely, the idea held by all, or nearly all future torment theorists, that the wicked dead are raised in order to, or for the sake of inflicting torment on them as a punishment. If this point is accepted as truth, a very natural inquiry is, For what then are they recalled from death, when once dead? He responds as follows:

The resurrection of the wicked is rather, in common with that of the righteous, the effect and the token of man's deliverance from the power of death. It comes as the natural sequel of man's rescue from that doom—of his release from that bondage—of his redemption from that condemnation—of a proclaimed remission of the sins that are past, and a respite granted, so that personal faith and union to Christ alone are now wanting, that the new life-power may be a life possession, an inheritance of immortality. The prison doors are opened, and the convict is let out to see the light of day. He is told that the sentence of the law is annulled, so far as God is concerned—he has only to accept the Deliverer as his Lord, and death hath no more power over him. And though in this figure we may date the time for the sinner's choice after the limit which God has fixed yet it may illustrate the actual relations of the Redemption and the Resurrection. The latter appears to us the natural outgrowth of the higher life-power which accompanies the former.

That is, if we understand his last remark, "The Resurrection" is "the natural outgrowth of the higher life-power which accompanies Redemption." In other words, the life-power in redemption has so far affected the sinner, that, though he dies in his sins, this divine life-power is so inwoven in him, somehow, that it naturally brings the sinner up from the dead: yet, strange to tell, this divine life-power is not strong enough to keep him alive, but a second dying is the "result of life" from the dead. Or, the sinner has received, in this life, just enough of the "higher life-power" to open his "prison doors" and be "let out to see the light of day," and to know what he might have had if he had improved the means employed to bring him the full strength of the higher life-power.

If such a manifestation is not "being punished," it would seem difficult to tell what punishment is: and if it is not being "raised up for the sake of being punished," we cannot see for what "sake" it is. All that is to result from it, according to this statement, has been revealed to the sinner before his death; and the Prof. is obliged to make his "figure date the time for the sinner's choice after the limit which God has fixed." Surely, one would suppose that fact would have opened his own eyes to see he had placed the sinner where God has not placed him, and where there is, therefore, no warrant for himself or any other man to place him. We regard the Prof., however undesignedly, as having clearly reversed God's order in His manifestation of the work and order of redemption: that manifestation is not after this life, but in this life: and it is only those who believe on the Son of God—where He is proclaimed—that He will "raise up at the last day." If the wicked man has enough of "the higher life-power" to raise him up at the last day, he may be assured the same life-power is fully equal to keeping him alive eternally; for to give life requires more power than to preserve it; and besides, that higher life-power never dies: the law cannot kill it. Prof. H. says:

There is some indication in the Bible, that the resurrection is not absolutely universal, but is limited to those who have known the revealed will and good pleasure of God. "They that have sinned without the Law shall also perish without the Law; and they that have sinned in the Law shall be judged by the Law." The distinction here made, while it seems to preclude the judgment of the heathen, after a resurrection, "by the Law"—may expressly denote such a judgment of the ungodly in Christendom.

Thus he gives up John v. 28, 29 as proof that all in the graves shall live again, and admits "the resurrection" may not be "absolutely universal." And, as "they that have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law," will he, or any one else, please give us chapter and verse "in the law" where the "judgment" of any man is said to be "after a resurrection?" Where is the law? Just give us the statute. Can it be done? We know it cannot. Do not tell us it "may denote such a judgment of the ungodly of Christendom." It may not denote any such judgment. Where has the law said it does? We cannot take conjectures for evidence. Prof. Hudson in closing, speaks thus:

I conclude then, the resurrection of the unjust has precisely the same relation to the "second death," that their present life has to the first death. Life is not for the sake of death, just the opposite—yet death is here in this world the common result of life. So the resurrection of the unjust is not for the sake of their aggravated death. It is given to them, freely as this life is—it is the index of many blessings which the Gospel has brought them—and condemnation is the result.

Truly, this is "the conclusion of the whole matter." He says, "Life is not given for the sake of death, just the opposite." Then it must be given for the sake of life. "Yet," he adds, "death is here in this world the common result of life." That is, we suppose, if we did not have life we could not die. How self-evident. "So," saith the Prof., "the resurrection of the unjust is not for the sake of their aggravated death." But he has said, "The wicked dead are raised not for the sake of their punishment;" yet death to a sinner is the "wages of sin"—the punishment; and the "second death," as held by him, could not occur without the resurrection, and that death he has elsewhere told us, is "the death of the soul," which did not die with the body in the first death, and so he maintains a resurrection of the wicked dead in order to kill the soul. He says, "My view is simply this—that there are two instalments of death: the death of the body kills it:" . . . "this death also deprives the soul of its action:" . . . "the first death destroys the body and not the soul:" . . . "the second death kills finally and forever."—See Bible Exr., vol xiii. pp. 282–3.

"The wages of sin is death," and he affirms the first death does not kill the soul; it is to be killed by a "second instalment of death." As in order to this, the wicked must have a resurrection, must not that resurrection be a necessity, according to his theory? or, must it not be "for the sake of death?" How else can the soul be made to die, if his view of "two instalments" is the truth? And if life from the dead is necessary in order to kill the soul—which is a part of the punishment for sin—is not life from the dead given "for the sake of death?" Yea, are not the wicked "raised up for the sake of being punished," notwithstanding the Prof.'s disclaimer? And, though he says, if such is the case, "I know not how to vindicate the goodness of God," is it not manifest his theory makes the resurrection of the wicked dead a necessity in order to complete their punishment? and therefore they are "raised up for the sake of being punished." Can he escape the dilemma without abandoning his theory? We think not. Take the following syllogisms:

The wages of sin is death in two instalments.
The first instalment does not kill the soul:
Therefore the wicked dead must live again for the sake of killing the soul.
Or, The soul is not killed by the first death:
But the death of the soul is a part of the punishment for sin:
Therefore the reliving of the wicked dead is a necessity for the sake of destroying the soul.

Would not the Prof.'s idea of the matter involve him, necessarily, in a syllogism much as follows—

Without a resurrection of the unjust the soul would not be killed:
But the resurrection is not for the sake of killing the soul:
Yet the death of the soul is the second instalment of the punishment for sin

Or thus—

The soul can only be killed by a second instalment of death:
Therefore the wicked dead will have a revival into life:
But, "if the unjust are raised up for the sake of being punished, then I know not how to vindicate the goodness of God.

Would the Prof.'s philosophical mind think this a logical argument? We confess it looks to us like the predicament of the man who maintains man is wholly governed by motives; and getting between two motives equally powerful he cannot move at all.

He continues—"The resurrection of the unjust is not for the sake of their aggravated death." If it is in order to give them the "second instalment of death," viz., the death of the soul, will he tell us whether it is, or is not harder to kill the soul than the body? And if it is harder, whether a resurrection to kill the soul is not a "resurrection of the unjust for the sake of their aggravated death?"

Men cannot kill the soul, but can kill the body:
Therefore the soul is harder to kill than the body:
Hence the resurrection of the unjust, to kill the soul, is for a more "aggravated death."

To talk of life from the dead being "given to them freely, as this life is;" and of its being "the index of many blessings which the Gospel has brought to them," to us, looks so unlike God that we do not believe Prof. H. can ever "vindicate the goodness of God" to other thinking minds, if he can to his own, with such a theory. He has evidently become entangled in an inextricable dilemma by trying to avoid the torment theory, on the one hand, and the non-resurrection of the wicked dead on the other.

He says, "Life is not for the sake of death, just the opposite—yet death is here in this world the common result of life."—The "result" of a thing, if we understand it, is that which it produces. It is that which proceeds from it as a consequence. Can it be said, in propriety of language, that death thus proceeds from life? Death proceeds from sin: in man, it is the "common result" of sin; "sin entered into the world and death by sin," etc.

Again he says—The resurrection life is "given," the unjust, "freely as this life is" . . . "and condemnation is the result." Here he seems to hold, condemnation is the consequence of their resurrection: i. e., the condemnation proceeds from a "freely given life" from the dead. The present life is given to men to improve so as to secure an endless life: but the future life is "freely given" to the unjust for no such purpose—their case is helpless and hopeless from the moment it is "freely given." We see no analogy in the gift of the two lives. In this life they may secure the free gift of justification: in that life they can secure nothing—not even condemnation, for that had been secured before this life ended; for, "he that believeth not is condemned already," saith the Saviour.

After all the Prof.'s struggles we think he will find, life from the dead to the righteous only—life from the dead as a peculiar gospel benefit, conferred on the good alone—is the only Bible theory, and the theory which harmonizes all the perfections of God, humbles man, and exalts our Redeemer and LIFE-GIVER.

"Asleep in Jesus: blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

No: they shall hear no more sorrow or sighing; none shall awake except those who "awake and sing," [Isa. xxvi. 19, and 1 Cor. xv. 53–57,] God shall have wiped away all tears forever. No wailing of awakened and despairing sinners shall grate on their ears: no horrible sights are to mar their joys: for the wicked "are dead: they shall not live: they are deceased; they shall not rise." Amen.

THE JUDGMENT: HEB. IX. 27, 28.

"It is appointed unto men once to die. After this" appointment "the judgment." God appointed death once, and only one death: after this appointment He institutes the judgment, or trial of each individual in his probationary state, which was to decide who should live again: and He caused the proclamation to be made of life through Christ to them who would accept it as a gift in him. To give this life, He is coming again, and will give it to those, and to such only as "look for him." At that hour all others are condemned to abide in death and "not see life." Such we regard as the true sense of the word of God.

The term judgment is not to be understood as having one unvarying sense in the Scriptures. Its sense is various, and one sense of it is, clearly, that of the gospel proclamation. Thus Isa. xlii. 1–7. "Behold my servant." . . . "I have put my Spirit in Him. He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles" . . . "He shall bring forth judgment unto truth." . . . "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth." . . . "I the LORD" . . . "will give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open blind eyes," etc. Matthew reiterates the Prophet's language—"A bruised reed shall He not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory: and in his name shall the Gentiles trust."—Matt. xii. 20, 21.

Is not here clearly brought to view the gospel proclamation and is not that proclamation the judgment spoken of in these texts and others of like character? One definition given of the term judgment by CRUDEN is, "The gospel, or kingdom of grace." We use our God-given right to express our conviction that the judgment spoken of by Paul, Heb. ix. 27, is the dispensation of God's grace, introduced after He had appointed the race of Adam once to die? Death was "appointed" to Adam's race without regard to what their moral character might be: after this appointment of death, God instituted a judgment dispensation, or a dispensation of love in the second Adam, who should bring forth this judgment, and set it in the earth for the benefit of all men. Those who accepted it, and developed a moral character such as God should require, were to have the benefit of Christ's second appearing, as they had had of his first: such should live from the dead: the others had "judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life" (Acts xiii. 46), and live no more: the appointment "once to die" is confirmed on them and made eternal.

Does any one ask, "What is meant by the judgment coming after the appointment" once to die? and say, "We are told the judgment occurs some time after that." We reply, the judgment of which we speak, could not in the nature of the case be till after this appointment to die; for the judgment, or gospel proclamation, is appointed as a means to deliver man from death, and he needed no such deliverance till after he was appointed to death. We are satisfied our exposition of the text is in harmony with the general tenor of the Scriptures and cannot be proved to be erroneous. Besides, the whole argument of the apostle, in the previous part of this chapter, goes to show his mind was on the work of redemption by Christ, and not on judgment in the popular sense of that term.

TRIALS.

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth: . . . if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Heb. xii. 5–8. Again, when was our Lord's greatest suffering and agony? When was his soul exceeding sorrowful even unto death? When did he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground?

Was it not at the closing up, or near the closing up, of this state of trial? Was it not a short time previous to his being glorified? May it not be, then, as his saints draw nearer to the period of their glorification, that they also shall be called to drink of his cup and be baptized with the baptism wherewithal he was baptized? Would it be strange if their Master and Lord should thus give them practical and experimental knowledge that they must sympathize with him in his humiliation before they can be prepared to share his glory? Sufferings and distress will show to ourselves and demonstrate before our Lord whether we love Christ, and his coming and kingdom, more than we love the present world. From the latter we must be weaned before we are prepared for the glory of Christ's fellow heirs. Many of us may painfully find that we were more joined to the world, and the things of this present time, than we were aware. Happy shall we be if the distress and trials crucify us unto the world and the world unto us. No matter from what source the trials come, let us give ourselves to God and we shall be purified by them. But if we fret, murmur, and repine under them, we may suffer loss; or if we do not lose ourselves, the merciful God will have to keep us under the rod all the longer or more severely, to save us from perishing with the ungodly. Yet, we have need to sympathize with one another as members of Christ, and to pray one for another. Most sincerely do we say in the language of Paul, "Brethren, pray for us." We feel the need of the prayers of praying souls. May God, the Lord, keep his tempted, tried ones, and guide them safe to life eternal.

The Papal Roman Power,

AND THE NAPOLEON DYNASTY.

What are the Positions and Prospects of these Two Powers, as indicated in Prophecy?

In 1859 we published a pamphlet of 36 pages, with the above inquiry. For some years, it has been out of print. If we were to republish it to-day we would not wish to alter anything except a suggestion, thrown out near the close, that possibly Louis Napoleon might be developed the Antichrist. That suggestion we have long since abandoned as not likely to occur; and recent events, at Rome, have settled our mind that the Papacy is now the developed Antichrist, though it may yet be completed in another Pope, viz., Charles Bonaparte, who is "Cardinal Van Lucini, which would virtually, make Louis Napoleon head of the Romish Church. In no other way do we now believe he will ever be the Antichrist. His doom is, he "goeth into perdition."—Rev. xvii. 8, 11.

We have recently been requested to republish the pamphlet above named, and possibly we may do so, if there should be such a desire extensively expressed.

The War in Europe.

The "New York Herald," of Monday morning last, summed up the war news as follows:

THE WAR—A GREAT VICTORY FOR PRUSSIA.

At last there has been something like fighting; nor is there longer any doubt that on Saturday night, when the darkness put an end to the combat, the Prussians so far had been completely successful.

The details which we publish this morning show that the fighting on Saturday in the neighborhood of Woerth was long and bloody. It would seem that the Crown Prince, vigorously following up his victory, pushed on to Haguenau. In spite of the determined resistance of the French the place was gallantly captured by the Prussians, the French retiring in disorder. As proof of the severity of the fight and of the completeness of the victory we are told that four thousand of the French were taken prisoners, and that the retreating army left in the enemy's hands two standards, thirty pieces of artillery, including six revolving cannon, or mitrailleuses. Late last night a rumor prevailed in London, said to be based on a despatch from Baden, to the effect that a large body of South Germans had crossed the Rhine, and that they were moving rapidly toward Strasbourg. Later dispatches from Berlin and Cologne confirm this news in every particular. King William telegraphs to the Queen: "Good news. A great victory has been won by our Fritz. God be praised for His mercy." It is said that Marshal MacMahon had been repeatedly reinforced by divisions from the main army. Rumor has it that McMahon is wounded. Napoleon himself confesses the defeat of the gallant Marshal in the series of reports from his pen which we publish. The Prince Imperial has returned to Paris. The Empress Eugenie has issued a proclamation to the French nation. The crisis seems to be serious and imminent for the Bonapartes.

It is said also that the French have evacuated Thionville. It seems perfectly clear that the tide of battle has fairly turned against the armies of Napoleon. Several of the dispatches distinctly state that the French have retreated along the whole line, and that the Emperor is concentrating his troops for the purpose of defending Paris. It is undeniable that, although we cannot give to Saturday's fighting the importance of a general engagement, it was fighting on a scale of such magnitude and with such a result as to compel us to admit that Prussia has gained a great victory, and that France has suffered a serious defeat. The moral effect on both sides will be great. Prussia is jubilant. France already begins to despond. The authorities in Paris are at their wits' end. Every precaution is taken to preserve the peace of the city, but serious apprehensions are entertained that the unfavorable news may lead to a rising of the disaffected classes. At a council held in Paris on Saturday, the Empress Regent presiding, it was deemed necessary to have the guards of the Palace at hand and under arms. As another proof of the excited and dangerous mood of the Parisian populace, it has to be noted that all secret assemblages of the people have been prohibited.

The "New York Herald," yesterday (Tuesday morning), in giving a further account of the disastrous defeat of the French by the Prussians, and the possible complications that may arise, says:

"The Bible prophets, who see in this fight, the battle of Armageddon, may not be far wrong after all."

The Prussians are pushing forward against the French centre, and threatening Paris itself; while Napoleon is taken suddenly sick; and the poor old "Infallible," at Rome, is crying out piteously to the French Empress for help. The statement in yesterday's papers was as follows:

Advices from Rome state that the French disasters cause profound terror, and that the Pope has asked Eugenie for just one ship to defend him from the Italians now organizing for an attack on the Papal dominions and authority.

"Perilous Times Shall Come."—Paul.

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were but for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast; for, behold the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth also shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain."—Isai. xxvi. 20, 21.

That the foregoing prophecy will have a fulfilment at some period of this world's history, no believer in the Bible will question. If it be said, "We do not know when"—the reply is, So much the more need that we watch and pray, lest the "indignation" overtake us off our guard. That the troubles among the nations indicate the possibility of our being in the vicinity of "the great day of judgment" on the Gentiles—i. e., on the nations to whom the gospel was sent, after it was rejected by the Jewish nation—which is to close up this age and bring in the reign of Jesus Christ, on the throne of his father David," no believer ought to question. If, then, there is any ground for such a possibility, how does it become all the people of the Lord to heed the words of prophecy we have quoted above. What we ask of all is, think of those words—ponder them in thy heart—ask thyself, Am I seeking security in God—retiring as far as possible from all exciting causes which may lead me to occupy a place or position not within the "chambers" of God's protection? "Indignation" is certainly to come; much of it has already been manifested in the past few years; and God's people are only safe by taking heed to his direction and counsel. Above all things, then, the higher commotions rise, the more seek to "hide thyself" in close communion with God in Christ. So shalt thou be safe; not otherwise. But while hidden, fail not to do thy duty both to God and men. The hiding is not one of inaction; but do all as for God, and as in his sight.

Responses to the Herald.

Mrs. R. W. Pierce, Milwaukee, Wis., writes: I suppose you wish to know how much each one can give for the support of our paper. I will give $25, and pay $5 for my copy of the paper. Also, $10 to the Tract Fund. I do not know how I should get along without the Herald of Life; I feel that it will be sustained as it has been.

Thomas J. Harris, Harrisburgh, Pa., writes: I hope to do more for the Herald next year, than the past. At all events I will pay $10 for my two copies, and more if I can spare it, besides buying Documents. I have been well satisfied with the Herald heretofore, and trust it will continue to improve. We need it yet, as we are not yet made perfect, and we must occupy until He comes; and as we are near the "Shining Shore" and the signs thicken upon us, it is necessary to give warning, trying to save some, even pulling them out of the fire.

Freeman Gladding, Albany, New York, writes: I should be very sorry to have the Herald of Life suspended, as all the preaching I have comes through its columns. I am well satisfied with its management, and will do all I can to sustain it. I lend my papers and give them away soon after reading.

Hiram Drown, Coventry, Vt., writes: I pledge $5 for the support of the Herald of Life the next volume. I love the paper; it is the best one I ever read. It brings the glorious tidings of the coming kingdom, when Christ will descend from heaven and reward his saints, and destroy the wicked from the earth, and establish his kingdom: and it shall stand for ever and ever, and not be left to another people. May the Lord bless you and all who are laboring to spread the truth. Yours, looking for Christ the Life-giver.

Polly G. Pitts, Fredericksburg, Iowa, writes: I cannot bear the thought of doing without the Herald of Life, and I do not believe that God will let it go down. It shall have my best efforts and prayers for its life and prosperity, and that God may hold you up, strengthen you for your race, harness you for the battle, fill you with His Spirit, and keep you at your post, till He shall say, "Lay down thine armor, take thy crown." Your sister, waiting for deliverance when the Life-giver comes.

Miscellaneous Jottings.

BY WM. H. SPENCER.

Br. Storrs: Again in taking my pen to write to you, the multitude of thoughts which rush forward for utterance, produce a longing for a retreat this evening to your quiet home, whither I used to spend such pleasant hours, and once more enjoy that communion of spirits which the children of the kingdom alone can feel. But perhaps a sweeter and more blessed communion—one which all the heavenly hosts will behold with mingled joy—may be ours soon to share, and to gather around God's throne with those precious pilgrims whose names now, like some pleasant dream, haunt memory's by-ways.

THE COMING STRUGGLE.

Your cautious yet outspoken words regarding "The battle of that great day," did my heart good, as possessing so much truth that this generation should now understand. When that great storm bursts forth, in the mighty wreck of human governments, there will be millions of whom it can be said as Christ spake of the antediluvian world, "they knew not"—they are wilfully ignorant, refusing to see the signals hung in the heavens, and discard those mighty revolutions which shall immediately precede their "sudden destruction," when, like the wretched inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, they will sink to rise no more. Mankind never witnessed a greater sign of the nearness of that great day than the approaching European conflict. The last universal war in this world's history seems to me to be at hand; a universal war on the territory of the old Roman monarchy, once mistress of the world, seems inevitable. I see no way in which it can be stayed. That it will result in the long predicted overthrow of Papal Rome, and the destruction of Daniel's great image—the divine symbol of earthly governments—in my mind there can be no doubt. Oh, how much it behooves all professed Christians to see that they have on the wedding garment, and to watch, "lest coming suddenly" the Bridegroom should find them "sleeping." But as "children of light" we must "not sleep as do others," but "watch and be sober."

BR. WOLCOTT'S ILLNESS.

My heart has been greatly pained by the failing health of dear Br. W., who has so greatly endeared himself to the Lord's children, and has done so much for the Master's cause. Our heavenly Father's power is unlimited, but his providence to our feeble, short-sightedness is mysterious. But I cannot become reconciled to believe that God will permit our dear brother to fall into the hands of that merciless enemy, death, whom he will so soon destroy. The merciful goodness of my dear Father in restoring me to health, when physicians declared I was beyond the reach of their skill—delivering from the very jaws of death one so unworthy, so unprofitable, and capable of doing so little in His cause, impresses me with the belief that our brother will be spared, in his very hours of usefulness, as an eye-witness of the grand scenes in the closing hours of this world's history, and behold the rapturous glory of our descending King—the rightful heir to David's throne. Brethren, in pleading with God for the restoration to health of this dear brother, we should not be forgetful of the power of prayer, and that God has given us great assurance that "the prayer of FAITH shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."—James v. 15.

IS HENRY WARD BEECHER A SPIRITUALIST?

In an article by Henry Ward Beecher, which we accidentally noticed in the "New York Ledger," he says:

Why should we be left struggling on in this life in doubt, and often in despondency, when one word, one single word (from the dead), would reinspire the soul, and that word never be spoken? The dead beneath the feet may be silent; but over our heads, in the spirit land, is there no voice there, and none to call and comfort?

If at the same time man can be "silent" in the grave, and yet alive in a "spirit land," why could not a voice [a spirit voice, of course], "reinspire the soul" with words of comfort? Spiritualism is but a short step in advance of Mr. Beecher's position; indeed, in essence they are one. But how truly he intimates that this theory of the soul's immortality produces "doubt" and "despondency" regarding the future. This is but the legitimate result of all speculation which ignores the plain testimony of inspiration. In the gospel hope of life only through Jesus Christ, there is no "doubt," and it produces no "despondency." It fills the heart so full of joy and peace in waiting for the Life-giver's return that there is no room for speculation about an unknown "spirit land," or to seek comfort from supposed departed spirits. "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, . . . hath given us everlasting consolation and good hope through grace."—2 Thess. ii. 16.

"Lord, shall it be forever said,
The race of man was only made
For sickness, sorrow and the dust?
Are not thy servants, day by day
Sent to their graves and turned to clay?
Lord, where's thy kindness to the just?

Forever blessed be the Lord,
That faith can read his holy word,
And find a resurrection there."

Rochester, N. Y., August., 1870.

"Is it so?"

Some one in New England wrote us: "It is said, Eld. Wm. Stuart has given up the the non-resurrection doctrine;" and asks, "Is it so?" We answer, No: it is not so. Br. Stuart assured us, in our office, last week, that he was unmoved on that doctrine, and has no misgivings as to its truth, not in the least; and authorizes us to contradict the report, if we judged best. We gave no heed to the report, at the time, not crediting it, at all. A man once thoroughly settled in that doctrine is not likely to be removed from it, if he retains his reason.

"Hold fast that which is Good."

The same Mr. Cook, of whom I have spoken, [see first page of this paper.—Ed.,] made some remarks that I liked very much; and they really did me good. I will repeat them as well as I can, thinking they may help some other weak disciple of our common Lord. He said, "When God commanded us to love him with all our heart, and with all our strength, he meant with all our present strength. Not the strength we might have had, under different conditions and circumstances, nor that we may possibly have sometime in the future." I have now in my mind some of our friends, who have recently been sorely afflicted. Perhaps all they can say just now is, "I sink in deep waters." "My soul is poured out upon me; the days of affliction have taken hold upon me."—Job xxx. 16. My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death.—Job xvi. 16. But "though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." And this is all that is required of you now, O ye afflicted ones. "Stand still," just where you are, for the present, and you shall soon "see the salvation of God."

Yours, in Christ,

Mrs. E. H. Peck.

Normal, Ill., July 29, 1870.

From Mrs. D. C. Corwin.

Br. Storrs: Enclosed find two dollars. Please send me one set of Campaign Documents, and put the remainder into the tract fund. I find great use for tracts and papers; and think this, Washington, Ill., might be a good place to plant the standard of the cross and proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord in his glorious second coming.

Far as I can learn, there has never been an Advent sermon preached in this place. Certainly not by an Advent minister. I feel much for our brethren and sisters in affliction, as one after another asks the prayers of God's children. Dear brethren Campbell and Wolcott, God graciously give healing mercies to those dear faithful brethren, and any others in like affliction, and sustaining grace to their families. I can't help naming dear sister Campbell who took such good care of us in the Life Tent last campmeeting. Though separated by distance, my heart is warm to them, and many others, too numerous to mention—as sister Wood and sister Maria Weaver, etc., God bless them all. How I wish I could be with you in the coming campmeeting. I pray that you may be "filled with all joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost." "Christ formed in us the hope of glory." "Ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will be their God and they shall be my people." "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

If we do His will, we shall know of His doctrine. "For we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory even as by the spirit of the Lord."

Then we know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge, and are filled with all the fulness of God. How my heart leaps up with praise to Jesus as I read these precious promises. How I desire anew to be crucified to the world and the world crucified to me that I may reflect my precious Saviour's image, indelibly stamped upon my heart, and so be ever ready and waiting for his coming. Amen. Even so, come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Yours in the best of bonds.

Washington, Ill., August 1870.

From James H. Jacobs.

Bro. Storrs: The time for the Life believers to meet at Springfield, Mass., for consultation and action, is close at hand; and may all who meet there have the spirit of wisdom and of kindness; for that was the spirit of Christ; and the people generally know that the Spirit says, by the Scriptures, those who have not the spirit of Christ are none of his; and if men can live and not be Christ's, and die so, they must be none of his while dead. Then, surely, he cannot be their Saviour. Then how can he give them common salvation, or special or eternal salvation. If men should vote that he should give them salvation or life in any sense, it will not make it so.

In the efforts put forth by Life believers I do not see much chance for striving for the mastery; for they all claim to be brethren. I love to see men ranked according to their ability; but I hate the pope's infallibility.

I should like to be with the friends at Springfield; but cannot; for I am one of the poor of this world, but sometimes think I am rich in faith, and an heir of a kingdom to come; thank God. Now, I hope that all who can go to the meeting, will go if they can do good by so doing. If those who have business so they cannot go, but have money, they can surely do good with the money they would have to spend to go to the meeting, by giving it to the dear Herald or to the Tract Fund. Oh, may all Life believers be able to rightly divide the word of truth, i. e., place the truth that is past in the past, and truth that is present in the present, and truth for the future in the future. It seems if we could do so, that no one would ever think of placing the judgments that are past, over into a future judgment. I will let this thought pass, for fear I shall not rightly decide the word of truth.

The next thing for us rightly to divide is our money for the truth we so much love; and also with the poor. The next thing for us is to rightly divide our time, i. e., give to our families so they can have food and raiment, by the favor of God. Then go and tell the good news; not stay in one place. Oh how I wish some Br. or Sister, had the time and money, and would come out here, where I live, and proclaim the good news of life from the dead by one Jesus. It seems, too, that if some one could travel through here, that good might be done.

There is but one Br. in Cortland County that preaches life from the dead, and no dying to those who live by a resurrection from the dead; and his circumstances are such that he cannot give much time to the cause. But there are a few who believe the doctrine, and are talking it to the best of their ability, and are living like Christians.

I am giving what time I can to tell the people who are in the valley and shadow of death, that they need fear no evil, only by disobedience; for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth, i. e., obeys, should not perish (though they are in the valley of death) but have everlasting life. This life comes by obeying God through his Son. God has no other life to give by his Son.

God the Father gave to Christ to have life in himself. John v. 12. He that hath the Son hath life. Then those that are in him will have the life that is to come, or that is in him: Tim. iv.; so Paul says by the Spirit of God: he also says, in Col. iii. 3, 4, by the same Spirit, that when Christ, who is our life, shall appear; then will the life that he will give, appear. Has he promised or threatened to give a life to any son or daughter of Adam that will appear for a little season, and then vanish away? If he has, O tell me where!

Bloodgetts Mills, N. Y., July 28, 1870.

From L. W. Bragg.

Dear Pilgrims in the Lord: Feeling the salvation of the gospel of the soon coming kingdom, never did the peace of God more sweetly and freely flow than of late. We have truly been blessed of the Lord. On the 4th we had a most blessed melting time in Jesus' worthy name. With much comfort and joy of the Spirit of God, we rejoiced together in hope of speedy deliverance, when mortality will be swallowed up of life eternal in glory. My heart is truly glad in the Lord through the power of the Spirit; and I am loving and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, when we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known. O blessed hope of life eternal with all the glorious and glorified.

Dear pilgrims, do let us start anew for glory, and purify our hearts by faith in the love of the gospel and bonds of everlasting love divine. In this there is no strife, hatred, or feeling of enmity against any person; but love in all our actions run.

O Lord, sanctify me wholly, soul, body, and spirit. Let me be singular, if need be, for Jesus' sake. Anyway, is the language of my heart; only fit me for the soon coming glory. Pray for us, that we may be wholly detached from earth; all ready for the last flight from earth to glory. The Lord help us to be ready for every good word and work.

From a pilgrim in hope and love.

Mechanic Falls, Me., July 26, 1870.

From L. F. Arnold.

Br. Storrs: I hope the Herald will not stop, for I love its weekly visits and should not know what to do without it. I am in hopes, should it continue, to send you another subscriber soon. Life believers (so called) are few and far between here. It is hard to make them see that "The wages of sin is death." I want some more of your tracts, and so does my father, who is a reader of the Herald of Life; and as soon as I can obtain a list of what he wants we will send. I want some to give to the ministers of this place. I don't expect to convert them at once, and perhaps not at all; yet where discretion is used they are powerful agents, sometimes of doing a great deal of good. I find that most of the people here do not believe in eternal tortures, which is a little mitigation of the punishment in their old theology; but believe that the punishment is the gnawing of a guilty conscience: a thing without a shadow of foundation in the word of God; and when asked to give a text in proof of the vain assertion, they are at once muzzled.

I hope in future to do more towards the advancement of the cause of Life only in Christ. Yours in hope.

East Hampton, Conn., July 31, 1870.

The Life and Advent Union.

The anniversary of this body is drawing nigh. It is in contemplation, now, to have it meet in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 25, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the Herald of Life and the Tract cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

Truth vs. Man's Wisdom.

We have substituted the above name for the Campaign Document No. 20, instead of "Rich Tract." Some have thought, that, as all our Tracts are rich, it was "invidious" to call only one by that name. Hence it is changed as above.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

Article I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same, and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Business Department

CASH RECEIPTS.

One dollar each from—Israel Camp, Mrs. S. N. Colby, P. Barnes.

Two dollars from—Phebe W. Fuller.

Various sums—Carrie C. Belden, $5; Hiram Drown, $5; Betsy M. Murphy, 50 cents; Peter Kemp, $20 on pledge; A. Logan, $5 on pledge.

RECEIPTS TO TRACT FUND.

Hiram Drown, 50 cents.

PLEDGES FOR HER. V. 8.

Mrs. R. W. Pierce, Milwaukee, $25.
Thos. J. Harris, Harrisburg, Pa., (2 cop.,) $10.
Hiram Drown, Coventry, Vt., $5.
Thomas Apthorpe, Rouseville, Pa., $5.

W. S. Olmsted, Hartford, Conn., writes: You may enter my name, as a pledge for the Herald of Life, Vol. 8, $100; and for the Tract Fund, $50.

We thank Br. Olmsted for these words of encouragement. Let all our friends remember, that pledges made immediately will determine whether you have the Herald another year. It cannot be continued without donations.

PARCELS SENT SINCE LAST ISSUE.

O. F. Yale, Mrs. S. N. Colby, Mrs. D. C. Corwin, Paul D. Salter, H. Rude, Esther A. Brown, John Buttolph.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Betsey M. Murphy.—Your paper is paid for to No. 346.

THE PRICE OF TRUTH.

BY REV. H. BONAR, D. D.

GREAT truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walk of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Bought in the market, at the current price,
Bred of the smile, the jest, perhaps the bowl;
It tells no tales of daring or of worth,
Nor pierces even the surface of the soul.

Great truths are greatly won. Not formed by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer dream;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mart, 'mid corn and wine;
Not in the merchandize of gold and gems;
Not in the world's gay hall of midnight mirth,
Not 'mid the blaze of regal diadems.

But in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God, put forth in might,
Plows up the subsoil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

Wrung from the troubled spirit, in hard hours
Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain;
Truth springs, like harvest, from the well plowed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain.

Selected by MRS. W. S. CAMPBELL.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF JESUS.

CHRIST admits his disciples to companionship. They are his friends, and they can claim him as their friend. Friendship implies the most intimate, affectionate, and enjoyable relation possible between two beings. The relation of God and man, of Creator and creature, of sovereign and subject, of parent and child, of husband and wife, of benefactor and beneficiary, may exist without mutual or reciprocal enjoyment; but where there is true friendship there must be esteem, confidence, and congeniality. Two persons thus joined mingle happily together, and are perpetually giving and receiving from each other. They exist for one another, and delight to do so, feeling that each sorrow is too heavy to be borne alone, and each joy only partially possessed unless freely shared.

The idea of companionship, and consequently, in some important sense, that of equality, obtains in the proper conception of friendship. The dignity which Jesus thus puts upon his people in uniting them to himself cannot be overestimated. "I have called you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth." The believer as the friend of Christ is allowed to know his thoughts, to enter into his plans, and to be enlightened by his divine wisdom. There is nothing which men of the world crave more than to be regarded the friends of the great, to be reputed as intimate with them, to be sharers in their most secret counsels, and to be supposed to have influence upon their conduct. This is usually deemed the highest attainment with those who are ambitious of distinction. And certainly such an ambition is not wholly empty.

It does imply the existence of qualities which commend themselves to the consideration of those who are supposed to be capable of sound judgment, and therefore augurs well for the recipients of favor. To be exalted to the favor of Christ is no unmeaning thing—it is no semblance without reality; he does see in those whom he takes to his heart qualities which are worthy of his approval and love. These qualities may be of the creation of his own grace, but they are not the less the free, accepted, and cherished influences of his Spirit in his people. These influences have become incorporated into them by their own consent and cultivation.

Where love leads, all else follows. In asking our love, the Saviour means to ask all we have. And in bestowing upon us his love, he gives all he has. Here is a Friend, then, who puts his infinite resources at the disposal of those whom he calls his own. Equally with the free communication of his knowledge is the communication of his power, to be exercised in whatever direction they may need it. "Command me when you will and where you will," says the heavenly Friend to all his followers. There is no limitation such as embarrasses human attachments. It often happens that, when we are most needy, our friends are most empty; so that in our extremity, while they have every wish to relieve us, they entirely lack the means. But Christ's hands, as well as his heart, are always full. Though continuously open, they are never exhausted, but, by divine spontaneousness, they multiply in their richness with their generous giving. O! it is good to have one friend whose ability knows no failure.

This heavenly Friend is always accessible. Those who have his affection have him ever at hand. No business, no pleasure calls him away; no hindrances of circumstances or law can exclude us from his presence or sympathy. The obligations of life, the inexorable necessities of duty, sometimes separate chief earthly friends, and they must be sick and suffer apart; when, if they could be with each other, the touch or look of love would lift a load of pain and sorrow. Furthermore, the human soul is so constituted that it must often be alone, so far as human companionship goes. There were times of solitariness in the Master's career, when he had to tread the wine-press alone, and of the people there were none to help him. In its measure, every heart must have a like experience—times of loneliness, when misunderstood and perhaps neglected by the nearest friends; of conflict with self, its secret sins—sins which no other soul can know or can conquer; times of proving, when the innermost mind is grappling with root errors of faith, and death would be a glad escape from the responsibility of a conscientious solution; times when the great and fearful alternative of slowly approaching but certain death first confronts the soul as a reality, and all the lingering tender cords of earthly loves are felt to be snapping, and the shadowy mists of an impenetrable, unknown future stand out definitely as at hand—such times come to all, and involve processes and issues which constitute the deepest mental solicitude. There is no loneliness comparable to this. Talk of solitude in the desert, on the sea, in the city—it is nought to the loneliness of the soul in the fearful wrestle with itself! But even here the friendship of Jesus is available. He compressed in the sufferings of his infinite mind the universal woes of humanity, and, by virtue of his headship, feels what every member bears. He knows and feels what is in every man. Nothing can separate his friend from his love. No gloom of doubt, of fear, is so thick that his tender sympathy cannot penetrate it. In the darkest valley, said the Psalmist, "thou art with me." When the disciple steps down into the cold river, and the dearest earthly friends can only weep upon the brink, the heavenly Friend goes in and through, sustaining the object of his love.—The Methodist.

THE GOSPEL ITS OWN ATTRACTION.

THE numerous worldly attractions attached to and thrown around the so-called churches and the so-called preaching of the Gospel in the present day, would lead one to suppose there were no attractions in the Gospel itself. The house of worship must be constructed on an aristocratic basis, with everything to make it a centre of fashion—no matter what a burden of debt it may entail—on the plea of attracting men "under the sound of the Gospel." All manner of worldly entertainments are put upon the tapis by professors, to show that "Christianity is not all gloominess," and that Christians may enjoy themselves as others do. Even the children of the Sunday-schools are about one-half of the year kept under the excitement of drilling for public attraction at the Christmas entertainment, benefit concerts and the May-day festival. All this is supposed to be the attraction of the Gospel. Now the fact is, all these things only tend to allure the mind away from the Gospel, and to inculcate the idea that without these additions the Gospel has no attractions; that of itself it is a gloomy, monotonous proclamation that needs the skilful manipulations of the architect, painter, upholsterer, musician and dramatist to make it at all presentable to the refined sensibilities of proud humanity. These worldly follies create by far more spiritual death in the church than spiritual life out of it. It is "giving the trumpet an uncertain sound." Men, women and children, attracted by means of such machinery, are generally interested only to the extent of the attraction.

But can the teaching surrounded and overhung by such attraction be properly styled the Gospel? Can those who sanction such things preach a pure Gospel in the midst of them? Is not their preaching, to a great extent, like their paraphernalia and religious revelings, executed with a view to pleasing the multitude? Do they who think the Gospel needs these worldly additions to make it attractive, really appreciate what the Gospel is? Do they honor the Saviour with their lives, who still "count reveling for a day pleasure?" Let the Scriptures answer: "They that are Christ's have crucified" the world, with the flesh and the lusts. "The lust of the world and the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, are not of the Father, but of the world."

We cannot see wherein is the Christian's self-denial, if he is to live on in full fellowship with the world, and if pomp and gaiety are to be the attractive features of the Gospel. Let the Gospel stand on its own footing. "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial?" We cannot imagine any thing more attractive to man under sentence of death, than the proclamation of life—eternal life. What is the Gospel? It is simply the glad tidings of life from the dead. The plain publication of the fact of eternal life through the resurrection of Jesus Christ, that is God's appointed way of converting men to Him, and we have no assurance that men can be converted by any other means. The principle laid down in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus ("they have Moses and the prophets, if they will not hear them they will not believe though one rose from the dead") holds good to this day.

Men are not convinced of sin by means of architecture and drapery, nor by fashion and music, nor by creeds and litanies, nor by religious theatres and social revelings, nor by any other man-made scheme. "By grace ye are saved, through faith;" "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." All Judea followed John the Baptist into the wilderness, attracted by the simple truth; the multitudes followed Jesus from place to place, attracted by the plain tidings of salvation, without any modern embellishments, whatsoever. Peter spoke but a few words of plain truth on the day of Pentecost, when three thousand were turned to the Lord. Paul entirely ignored "vain philosophy" and the "enticing words of man's wisdom," as well as every kind of ostentation and worldly folly, yet his preaching proved to be "the power of God unto salvation." Yes, the Gospel is brilliant with attraction, when preached in its purity, untrammelled by human improvements and substitutes.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publish peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth."—Isai. lii. 7.—The Nazarene.

FLEE TO THE REFUGE.

COULD you have seen a manslayer of old fleeing before the avenger of blood toward the city of refuge, you would have been convinced of two things—his firm belief that safety was to be found in that city, and that he was in earnest to get there. His constant running, his persevering night and day, showed his faith and zeal. He did not halt, nor linger, nor turn aside, nor seek some other refuge, enter some thicket, or secrete himself in some cave; but he took the nearest road, went as the sign-posts directed, and tarried not till he found himself safe within the gates of the city.

So let the sinner, against whom the sentence of death is passed, and who is exposed every moment to execution, flee to the gospel refuge, Jesus Christ. Let him flee with all his might, neither lingering by the way, nor looking behind him, nor vainly seeking shelter in his works, duties, and performances. Let him not rest satisfied till he is safe in Christ, who alone can save him from death.

Of old, no persuasion could stop the man from fleeing to the city of refuge. His wife and children might hang about him, and wet him with their tears; they might point him to his home and its comforts, and tell him he must not leave these and his acquaintances, and fly to a strange city to live among strangers. But what were lands, houses, or friends, in comparison to his life? A few moments' delay might be his destruction. And if his family could not go with him, he must leave them behind. With such earnestness let the sinner flee to Jesus. Let not the world, nor love for sin, nor wicked habits, nor your own heart, nor ungodly friends, turn you aside. Say to them: "Get you hence! I am fleeing for my life. Life is worth more than you all,

'Thou, O Christ, art all I want,
All in all in thee I find.'"

One of the old fathers once said: "If my father were weeping on my knees before me, my mother hanging about my neck behind me, my brothers, sisters, and kindred howling on every side to retain me from Christ, I would cast my mother to the ground, run over my father, and despise all my kindred, tread all under my feet, and run to Christ." And a greater than man has said: "Whosoever forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Let nothing then, dear friends, keep you a moment from this refuge.—Selected.

AN UNEXPECTED TEST.

"JAMES, I found you and Mr. Cooper together this morning, as I entered the office. I knew that my name was upon Cooper's lips. Was it not so?

The young book-keeper trembled and was silent.

Thomas Landrove and Albert Cooper were partners, and sole proprietors of one of the heaviest wholesale manufacturing establishments in the west, and their business was increasing day by day. Landrove was a New Yorker by birth, and Cooper came from New Hampshire. James Worcester was a youth of nineteen, from Western Massachusetts, and having gone out into a new country, with a letter of recommendation to Landrove, from an old college-mate and chum of the latter, he was at once employed; and thus far, during the space of six months, he had proved himself worthy and well-qualified.

The partners—warm-hearted, but quick and impulsive—had fallen into a misunderstanding. They had, on the previous evening, almost come to blows; and were now as unhappy as it were possible for two well-meaning men to be who have both been very foolish.

"Was it not so?" repeated Landrove.

"It was, sir."

"And what did Mr. Cooper say of me? You need not be afraid to tell me."

James Worcester became calm and self-possessed, though a trifle paler than usual. He knew that Mr. Landrove had hired him—that to him he owed his success, and that to him he must look for the retaining of his situation. And yet he has resolved to be a man.

"Mr. Landrove, you must excuse me."

"Ah! Did he place you under the ban of secrecy?"

"No, sir."

"Then what did he say to you of me?"

"I cannot tell you, sir."

"Cannot? You mean you will not."

"As you please, sir."

While Landrove was silent with amazement at this department on the part of the creature of his bounty, the youth proceeded:

"Mr. Landrove, as God is my judge, I am your humble friend and most obedient servant, and if I have a love more strong for one of my employers than the other, that love is for you. But, sir, even to please you, I cannot do a mean or unmanly thing. Whatever Mr. Cooper may have said to me was said in confidence. I know that he would not like that I should repeat his words. I hold them as I would hold money that had been placed in my keeping."

Mr. Landrove swore a big oath, and demanded again to know what Cooper had said of him. But Worcester was firm. Then the manufacturer threatened to discharge him.

"I came to you with an honor untarnished, sir," said James, "and if I must leave you, I wish to take the same priceless possession away. When once I have betrayed a trust, I can no more have confidence even in myself."

"Then you flatly refuse?"

"I refuse to betray the private speech of Mr. Cooper, as I would refuse to tell him, were he to ask me, what you have now said to me."

"Very well: you may close up your accounts and pass your books over to Mr. Nickerson; for—" and here Mr. Landrove, with a fierce oath, swore that the reticent youth should leave on the morrow.

"I will go, sir; but O! why cannot I see you and your partner reconciled before I go? You love him; I can swear, before heaven, that no man lives whom he loves better than he loves you."

Landrove would listen to no more.

That very night the two impulsive men met and their ill-will was blown to the winds as quickly as it had been engendered. Over a bottle of wine Landrove told his interview with young Worcester.

"Of one thing I can assure you," said Cooper, "he loves you truly and devotedly. I know it from words which he spoke this morning, and from the warm tears that crept out upon his lashes as he gave them utterance. His refusal to repeat my words was from principle."

"Aye," cried Landrove, "and from principle very seldom found in its purity in this poor world of ours. By my life, Albert, he will be worth his weight in gold to us. We can trust him."

Mr. Nickerson took James Worcester's books, as Landrove had threatened; but it was only that the younger book-keeper might be transferred to the inner office, or sanctum, where he was installed as confidential agent and correspondent; and whence in time, he stepped forth into a share of the business.

This little sketch bears a deep and valuable lesson for those who have eyes to see, and hearts to understand.

CHINESE PROVERBS.

To feel after a pin on the bottom of the ocean—(to try to do an absurd or impossible thing.) A cat leading a rat to view the feast of lanterns—(one bad man deceiving another with specious pretensions.) A tiger eating a fly—(disproportionate.) A wooden tiger—(an unsuccessful plan to frighten people.) A basket of grain producing only a pound of chicken-meat—(indicates a money-losing business.) A toad in a well cannot behold the whole heavens; to look at the heavens from the bottom of a well—(contracted ideas.) Climbing a tree to hunt for fish—(to look for things where they can by no probability be found.) In a melon-patch do not stoop down to unloose your shoes; under a plum tree do not lift your hand to adjust your cap—(avoid appearance of evil.) Don't tell a man with a full stomach that you are hungry—(one just after a plentiful repast does not readily sympathise with the feelings of a hungry man.)

A CHRISTIAN mother was once showing her little girl, about five years old, a picture representing Jesus holding an infant in his arms, while the mothers were pushing their children toward him. "There, Carrie," said her mother, "this is what I would have done for you if I had been there." "I wouldn't be pushed to Jesus," said little Carrie, with a beautiful and touching earnestness; "I'd go to him without pushing."

BE PLEASANT.—Many a marriage begins like the rosy morning, and then falls away like a snow-wreath. And why? Because the married pair neglect to be as well pleasing to each other after marriage as before. Endeavor to always please one another, but at the same time keep God in your thoughts.

DECISION.—We are afraid of being desperate Christians. O, let us be desperate! The Church needs extremity—a great tug out of the world.—Lady Powerscourt.

IF this life were our all, we might complain that it makes our bed so hard; but it is only our night quarters on a journey, and who can expect home comforts?

CHILDREN'S DEPARTMENT.

FRED AND HIS FRIEND TOWSER.

"DOWN, Towser! down sir!" and the round fist fell heavily on the dog's head. He shrank back a minute, but immediately began to lick the hand that had struck him.

Fred Warner, the owner of the hand, didn't seem to care that he had really hurt the poor brute, but went on with his play. He was a careless, impatient little boy, and, though he wouldn't wilfully harm a dumb beast, he never stopped to think whether he had or not.

Towser was a great, black Newfoundland, owned by a neighbor of Mr. Warner; but, as there were no children in the family he belonged to, he used to spend almost every day with Fred, for the dog loved the boy very much. As soon as he had eaten his breakfast, he would trot over to Mr. Warner's, stretch himself on the door-step, and lie there till Fred came out. If Fred had gone, the dog would wait for hours, and never leave unless called by his master.

Fred was fond of the dog too, in his fashion; but his fashion was to strike Towser whenever Towser played a little too roughly, and to kick him when he failed to do what Fred directed. Fred would have been very lonely but for the dog, as he had neither brother nor sister, and there were no other children in the neighborhood.

Behind Mr. Warner's house was a very pretty pond, where, during the summer, Fred and his father bathed, and rowed about in boats to gather water-lilies. It was very lovely, and was known as Silver Lake, though hardly large enough to deserve the name. Pleasure-parties from the adjacent towns often went there to fish and have picnics, making the warm season very gay and interesting. But when winter came, and the water was frozen, it looked dreary enough to Fred. This year, however, it didn't seem so dreary, for the boy expected to have a pair of skates, and go alone to the pond. Last year, as his parents had thought him too young to be trusted by himself, he had been on the ice only when his father was with him. This season, however, if he were very good, he was to have all his winter wishes realized.

How his eyes sparkled with delight at the prospect, and how eagerly he watched the forming of the ice!

The first morning after he had found the water coated with filmy ice, he and Towser went every day to inspect it; and, as it grew thicker and thicker, he cut out little bits with a hatchet to carry home and show his father.

At last, the day before Christmas came, and with it glorious ice, sunshine, and weather.

"Now," thought Fred, "if I only had my skates, what a splendid time I'd have! It's so warm, it's a capital day to be on the ice. I wonder if father'll give me the skates to-morrow. Maybe I shan't get them at all. I wonder if I've been good. I don't believe I have, for mother told me I mustn't strike Towser, and I have lots of times since. You don't care, do you, old fellow? I don't hurt you, do I?"

Fred forgot how one of his blows had closed the poor dog's eye for several days. Not meaning to hurt him, he thought he didn't.

If Towser had bitten Fred, or retaliated on him in any way when the boy struck him, Fred would have understood it; but Towser only licked his hand affectionately as ever, and so the boy was hardly conscious of doing wrong.

That day, Fred and Towser went again and again to the pond, "to make sure," Fred said, "that the ice was really there;" and, at night, skates and ice, dogs and boys, were strangely mingled in his exciting dreams.

When he waked next morning, he found the sun glancing and shining on the steel runners of a pair of the nicest skates he had ever seen.

Out of bed in an instant, he put his boots on the first thing, and tried the skates. They fitted exactly. He jumped about in delight. Dressing himself quickly, he hurried down-stairs to thank his father.

There had been quite a thaw during the night, and his father was almost afraid to let him go on the ice; but it was such a disappointment to Fred, that at last his father said Fred might go if he wouldn't pass beyond a certain line which his father marked out.

The day was warm, and the ice was melting quite fast; but Fred didn't mind it, and skated in high spirits, with Towser at his side.

All at once, a tremendous crack was heard, and Fred saw the ice parting under him. He started for the shore, but Towser, supposing it was only such a race as they had had many times that morning, jumped about and got in his way. Fred gave the dog a kick with his skate, and fell backward with great force.

The ice opened, and he went through into the cold water. He struggled to get out, but every piece of ice he seized broke off, and he became more and more frightened and exhausted. His head went under; the water roared in his ears; then he seemed to see a great, green light, and to hear strange sounds. Then all was dark, and he lost consciousness.

After a long while, the sounds came back, but they were less strange than before. He did not feel the water, and, putting out his hands, he found he was lying in bed. He opened his eyes, and saw his father and mother leaning over him with anxious faces and tearful eyes.

"What's the matter?" he faintly asked.

"You've been nearly drowned, my darling boy," replied his father.

"Oh! yes, I remember," said Fred, and closed his eyes again.

Pretty soon he looked up and asked:

"Who saved me?"

At this question, Towser jumped up, and, with his fore-feet resting on the side of the bed, replied:

"Bow, wow, wow!"

Fred threw his arms round the great shaggy neck, kissed the great hairy head, and, in the excitement of the moment fainted away.

When he recovered, he found Towser wagging his tail, and gazing wistfully at him.

"Towser has spoken truth," said Fred's mother, kissing the boy tenderly. "He saved you. He first drew you in shore, and then ran up to the house. He seemed to look all round for your father, but not finding him, he began to pull my dress and whine. I didn't notice him much at first, but, accidentally turning toward the door, he seemed so pleased I determined to follow him. I met your father in the yard, and told him I was going to find out what Towser wanted. He thought at once something had happened to you, dear, and we both hurried on to find you unconscious on the bank."

"Dear old Towser," exclaimed Fred, patting the dog's head; "and it was trying to kick you made me fall into the water. I never shall hurt you again, old fellow;" and once more he wound his arms about the shaggy neck, and kissed it, and said: "God bless you, Towser, if you are a dog!"

Fred's father and mother then put their arms around the dog and the child, and said, with grateful tears:

"Yes, my son, God made Towser, as well as you, and, in restoring our darling boy to us, he has indeed blessed us all this day."

And once again Towser, in a subdued key, made his "Bow, wow, wow," as if, in his dumb way, he was trying to say amen! to the silent prayer of their grateful hearts.—The Methodist.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all Books and Pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

SIX SERMONS

ON THE INQUIRY—Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a Sermon on CHRIST THE LIFE GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidelity. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage, 4 cts.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made fifteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER,

Or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life. A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "Spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price 20 cents; postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD,

Or, the Righteous only will Live Again. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents; postage, 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.

This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1; postage, 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death 3. Who will live again? These questions are taken taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.

IMMORTALITY. The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEORGE STORRS. Price, in pamphlet, 30 cents; postage, 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The argument from Nature;" and second—"The Argument from the Scriptures." The first of these appeared in "The New Englander" of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the Argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

THE BIBLE VS. TRADITION.

In this work the true teachings of the Bible is manifested, showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Cheap Edition. Price bound, 70 cents; postage 12 cents. In paper covers, 40 cents postage 4 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help in understanding the Scriptures. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENTS.

These works are sold at the mere cost, and got up as cheap as possible.

No.
1.	LIFE FROM THE DEAD, ETC.,	5 cts
2.	A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE,	3 "
3.	THE JUDGMENT,	2 "
4.	THE LIVING SOUL,	2 "
5.	GOD IS LOVE,	2 "
6.	MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY,	2 "
7.	THE ATONEMENT AND GOSPEL HOPE,	2 "
8.	THE DOOM OF THE UNGODLY,	2 "
9.	SIX SERMONS, (Cheap Edition,)	16 "
10.	DEVIL—SATAN—DEMONS,	5 "
11.	SOUL SAVED OR LOST,	2 "
12.	EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, Saints' Inheritance,	2
13.	MORAL DEPRAVITY,	2 "
14.	LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN,	2
15.	THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM,	4 "
16.	WATCH TOWER (Cheap Edition)	10 "
17.	CONSTITUTION OF MAN (By Dr. Finley)	10 "
18.	THE WICKED DEAD,	2 "
19.	THE FUTURE LIFE,	2 "
20.	TRUTH VS. MAN'S WISDOM,	2 "
21.	LIFE AND DEATH REAL,	2 "
22.	MAN'S DESTINY; OR, Review of Dr. Post,	14 "

No discount can be made on these works, and the purchaser must pay the postage.

Persons sending for any of them should state which they want, designated by the figures at the left hand, and how many of each. Do not fail to attend to this.

All letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed

GEORGE STORRS, Box 4,6[illegible],
NEW YORK.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

GEORGE STORRS, Editor. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1870. VOLUME VII.—NUMBER 43. WHOLE NUMBER 329.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

206 BROADWAY, (Room 7,)

NEW YORK.

OFFICERS OF THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
WM. H. THORNE, New York, Vice President.
WM. H. H. MCALLISTER, St. Albans, Vt., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

DIRECTORS.

GEO. K. CARROLL, New York.
JOHN KEMP, New York, | WM. ROWORTH, New York.
RICHARD MARTIN, New York, | T. M. REDHEAD, Brooklyn, N.Y.

THE OBJECT of this paper is to promulgate the truth of "Life only in Christ;" or, a future life and a resurrection from the dead are both conditional, and only bestowed at the Second Advent of Christ, "at the last day."—See our Motto.

WELCOMING THE KING.

A CORRESPONDENT has remarked a fact, which we ourselves noticed during the great anniversaries this year, that no reference was made to the coming and kingdom of our blessed Lord. Here were great assemblies gathered in the metropolis of Christian Protestantism for the purpose of promoting missionary labor, Bible diffusion, and tract circulation over the whole world; here were chosen Christian men of blameless reputation and high character, some of them eminent in the pulpit, the press, and the theological hall; here were men of unquestionable zeal and princely liberality, whose names are known and held in honor wherever the English language is read; here were the acknowledged representatives of all the large religious communities of Great Britain; and here were vast audiences of Christian men and women listening with earnest attention to each succeeding speaker as he spoke of Christian obligation and privilege, of trials and triumphs, of work done and work to be done, or unfolded the moral map of the world with its black spots and sun-lit scenes; its strong superstitions or abandoned idols; but nothing was said about the promised return in glory of HIM in whose name and for whose sake this amazing machinery of religious activity has been set in motion!

We were about to say the fact is astounding, but mournful is the more appropriate word, for astonishment is lost in grief when we examine this silence in the light of divine revelation. No "word of bringing the King back," no indication of the real hope of the church in the day of her perplexity, no hint that the perils of the time are proof that the dispensation is near its end, no bright picture of the glory to God and the happiness to man when the great Monarch from his throne in Jerusalem shall order and establish his kingdom "under the whole heaven," no rapid glance at the supreme victory of redemption in the resurrection of the righteous to witness the accession and coronation of their glorious King, no soul-stirring shout of "Hosanna! blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," and no lifting up the eyes to heaven whilst the speaker, with outstretched arms to welcome the Father's Anointed, thrilled the assembly to its heart by calling, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly; even so, Amen!"

No, we heard nothing of the kind at any of the meetings at which we were present, nor did the published proceedings of others contain any thing like it. And yet it is undeniable, that the return to our world, in great power and glory, as its true and eternal Sovereign, of him whose mysterious love led him to give himself for us, is the doctrine of evangelists and apostles. No one denies this. Writers of all schools, whether of theology or neology, admit it, simply because it cannot be denied. It is denied that Christ's biographers were infallibly guided by the Holy Spirit, and it is affirmed that the apostles were amiable enthusiasts who longed for the return of their Lord without any authority for doing so. We shall neither trouble ourselves, nor our readers, with a reply to these denials and affirmation. That is not our object; and it is quite unnecessary in this paper; for the Christian brethren whose speeches gave the London "May Meetings" their attraction, believe that the evangelists and apostles were infallibly inspired by the Holy Ghost. Our faith and theirs is one on this subject, and it is on this ground that we have the right to ask them, in all Christian affection, why, when their minds were fully occupied with the great interests of religion and the future of the church and the world, there was no hearty recognition of the second advent, and no word of devout and earnest welcome to the coming King? Surely the coming of the Son of man in his own glory, and that of the Father, and all the holy angels with him, is an event of such transcendent and unparalleled importance—intended to affect not the church and the world only, but the whole creation of God—that no allusion to it in a series of meetings held in connection with the diffusion of the gospel by the disciples and servants of the Son of man is a fact of most melancholy significance, and demands much searching of heart. Silence on the part of his friends, regarding a subject on which the Lord spoke so frequently, and with such profound earnestness, is shameful if it be the result of ignorance, and sinful if it be the result of design. If men are ignorant that the Lord and his apostles give the second advent the very highest position, it says but little for their Christian light; and if, knowing the fact, they purposely remain silent about it, it says but little for their Christian loyalty. It is obvious to every intelligent reader of the New Testament, that it makes the hope of the Lord's return a most powerful incentive to obedience, holiness, and joy. If all that is said on this subject were removed from the sacred documents, the entire Apocalypse, more than one-half of the apostolic letters, a large part of the book of Acts, and many of the grand utterances of our Lord in the four Evangelists would disappear. Christianity would be shorn of its strength, Christ would be robbed of his reward, and the Church of her blessed hope, whilst the groanings of creation for deliverance from the bondage of corruption, would be turned into the moans of remediless despair.

Are the Christian brethren, who ignore the second advent of our blessed Lord as the Bridegroom of the Church and the Sovereign of the world, prepared for such a tremendous catastrophe as this? Of course they are not; and every man among them would jealously refuse to "take away from the words of the Book." Yet we ask whether, when there is no word of welcome to the King, and no teaching of the doctrine that he is coming to be glorified in his saints and admired in all them that believe, it is not a practical excision of every New Testament document in which that blessed doctrine is taught? If there is much in the book that need never have been written, so far as the teaching of many pulpits are concerned, it is very much the same thing as if the unused Scriptures were designedly avoided, or, after the fashion of Jehoiakim, "cut with the penkife." The loss sustained by the neglect of this doctrine is peculiarly great, for it is in reality the summing up, the culmination, the glorious interpretation of all other doctrines. It is no reply to say that our brethren do not ignore the second advent, for they preach the second coming of Christ to judge the world at the close of the millennium. This is not the place assigned to it in Scripture, and therefore such preaching misleads the hearers. Besides, the coming of Christ is our blessed hope: we are to look for him, which it is literally impossible for us to do if he is not to come for at least a thousand years; and as to those who have the boldness to make the coming of Christ signify the death of individuals, the idea is so utterly absurd, and, at the same time so mischievous as the stronghold of several errors, that it must be rejected with abhorrence. No, no! When Christ our Life comes, he brings with him resurrection, and immortality, and glory. He comes to open the gates of the grave, which shall not prevail against his church, notwithstanding the apparent triumph of the cruel enemy, death, through all generations. When he comes—be it soon, O FATHER!—death dies, life reigns, incorruptibility begins, heaven descends, and the true meaning of human creation and redemption for the first time flashes upon the intelligence of the universe. Come, Lord Jesus! Return, O glorious Master, Friend, Brother! Thy presence is most urgently needed. With unfeigned earnestness, though utterly unworthy of the honor, we welcome the return of the KING!—EDITOR of the Rainbow.

LETTER-SIZE TRACTS.

BR. WM. H. SPENCER, Rochester, N. Y., is getting out tracts of four pages, letter size, convenient for sending in a letter. The following is the matter of one of them:

IS IT INFIDELITY?

Is it infidelity to believe the inspired record that "God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living sol?"—Gen. ii. 7. This is rendered by Dr. Kitto in his Encyclopædia of Biblical Literature—"The man became a living animal," and remarks: "We should be acting unfaithfully if we were to affirm that an immortal spirit is contained or implied in this passage."

As the Scriptures plainly affirm that God "only hath immortality," is it infidelity, therefore, to believe that immortality can only be obtained as a gift from him, and will be bestowed only upon those who "seek" for "immortality, eternal life" by "patient continuance in well doing?"—1 Tim. vi. 15, 16; Rom. ii. 7.

As the Scriptures nowhere assert that man is now in possession of an immortal nature, is it infidelity to believe that he must wait for the bestowment of this gift until the LIFE-GIVER shall appear? Paul says, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."—1 Cor. xv. 51–54; Isa. xxv. 8; Hosea xiii. 8.

Is it infidelity to believe the uniform testimony of inspiration against the mortal resurrection of any of the dead? "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body."—1 Cor. xv. 42–44. Christ says, "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, . . . are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke xx. 35, 36. As the wicked are not "the children of God," should we therefore be charged with infidelity in believing that they will not be "the children of the resurrection?"

Again: Is it infidelity to believe the inspired affirmation that the Holy Spirit is the agent which shall quicken the dead into life at the last day? "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "But if the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. viii. 9, 11.

As the Holy Spirit does not dwell in the wicked, and as they are not members of Christ's spiritual body, is it, therefore, infidelity to believe the emphatic testimony of Scripture that they will have no revival from death? Shall the traditions of men be accepted instead of the plain word of God? "Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth the grave (sheol) those which have sinned." and "he shall be no more remembered."—Job xxiv. 19, 20. "Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." "He shall go to the generation of his fathers; they shall never see light"—(the light of life). "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them; and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning; and their beauty shall consume in the grave"—(margin: "the grave being a habitation to every one of them").—Psa. xlix. 14, 19, 20. "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Prov. xxi. 16. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise."—Isa. xxiv. 14. Thus speak the Old Testament Scriptures regarding the destiny of the ungodly; but the New Testament is equally as plain and positive.

John iii. 36: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him," i. e., he shall not see life of any kind beyond the grave, for no other conclusion can be fairly drawn from the Greek.

John vi. 53, 54: "Then Jesus said unto them, . . . except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." What stronger testimony is needed to show that a revival from death is conditional? According to the teaching of this passage the wicked are necessarily excluded from a future life.

In John xi. 25, Jesus says, "I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." To be in the "resurrection" a union must be formed with Christ. As all men do not "believe" on Him according to this passage, all men will not live again.

"The wages of sin is death," is another inspired declaration regarding the destiny of the wicked. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "For dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return."—Rom. vi. 23; Ezek. xviii. 20; Gen. iii. 19. Thus, according to the word of God, suffering nor dying is no part of the revealed penalty—it is not a thing, but a state of total dissolution. Therefore, as death is the declared penalty for sin, the wicked will have no deliverance from death.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16. Had not God sent his Son into the world the entire race would have perished, as none would have had a revival from death; but now all who believe on Him will not perish, because his mission was to give his followers an imperishable life, viz: "everlasting life," by delivering them from death. Hence, in God's plan there is no reliving of the wicked dead, for by rejecting Christ, who has become the LIFE-GIVER, they perish in precisely the same manner as though he had not come to offer them life from the dead.

If to believe these things be infidelity, then this I confess, "After the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers."—Acts xxiv. 14. W. H. S.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., (Box 547.)

THE QUESTION OF IDENTITY.

BY T. P. LEWIS.

OUR opponents assume that their theory respecting the double entity of man must be true, otherwise man in death loses his identity, and a resurrection amounts to nothing more or less than a new creation. That this question is a nice and intricate one, I will not pretend for a moment to deny. But to me, the double entity theory solves no mystery, and obviates no difficulty pertaining to the question.

If man is a compound of two whole and complete natures—body and soul—the former of which is material, and the latter immaterial, and death is a separation of the two, can the soul be precisely the same when disunited from the body, as it was before such separation? Daylight and darkness, sunshine and shadow, heat and cold, do not differ more widely than an immaterial soul blended with a material body differ from a soul after "emerging from its clay." Here man has muscles, sinews, nerves, bones, flesh and blood, and is a real tangible being; there, a ghost, a spectre, an invisible, intangible, uncompounded, indivisible apparition. We might walk through him, grasp around him, see through him, and yet be unconscious of his presence. He shouts and sings, but we cannot hear him; he moves and walks around us, but we cannot see him. Ah no, he is now a disembodied, immaterial soul, having thrown off his old, worn-out garment—his clog of mortality. Can such a being be identical with what we call MAN here? Is it the same being? Is it not a being differing from man in every particular? And still further, I may ask, if the identity is not entirely lost? It seems to me, if there has been no new creation, a new being, by some means, has been produced. No wonder that in view of such a marvelous transformation the question has been raised, "Shall we KNOW each other there?" My opinion is, if this doctrine be true, we shall not, in fact we cannot, know each other there.

But the chief difficulty in the minds of many is, that if the doctrine we hold, in reference to man's organization, is true, it would be impossible, in certain cases, for even God to raise up the same dust again, so as to constitute the same person. For instance, the dust of some, who died thousands of years ago, may have become incorporated into plants and vegetables, according to the laws of vegetation, and thus enter into and become part of other human beings, so that the same dust may have entered into the composition of different human bodies; and that, according to the laws regulating the waste and separation of the human body, causes its entire matter, once in about seven years, to change, so that a person who dies at seventy has had ten different bodies.

The question is then asked, which of these ten bodies is to be raised? "Is it the body of infancy, of childhood, of manhood, or of old age?" I answer: that the identity of man does not reside in particles of matter, but in his organization, which he retains throughout the whole period of his mortal life. The waste and separation of the body is so gradual and complete, and so wisely arranged, that no new body is formed; and hence our consciousness bears us witness, as long as life continues, that we have the same body and not a new one.

The whole argument, thus presented by our opponents, has its basis in ignorance; and that too among a class of men professing to excel others in point of wisdom. An avowed Infidel could not present an argument more antagonistic to the Bible and Christianity than thie. The real question is not whether God can, or will collect and rearrange the same particles of matter that composed our bodies of infancy, childhood, manhood, or old age; but, can he, and will he, produce the same organization? To say he cannot, is to say, He cannot produce again that which he has once produced; and to say, He will not, throws the question back where it properly belongs to be decided by His own words, as contained in the Bible.

Then what is His will concerning this matter? Christ said of him who believed in him, "I will raise him up at the last day." Or in more exact words, as it stands in its connection, "This is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." This settles the matter as to what God's will is respecting every one that believeth on his Son.

The only question that can remain to be settled is, Has God—Jehovah of Hosts—power to carry out his will? If He has not, he is in a sad dilemma for a being possessing unlimited power. If he has, then believers will every one be raised from the dead; the sophistry and theories of men to the contrary notwithstanding. Please notice Christ does not propose to raise up the body of him that believeth merely; but, saith he, I will raise HIM up—whatever constitutes his personality—the identical man—at the last day. We have already shown that as the particles of matter gradually pass away from our bodies, and as gradually are replaced, without changing our organization, so we claim, God can and will—for his word stands pledged to perform it—raise up the identical organization—the man—though it might not contain one particle of the matter which formed it at death. Paul, in 2 Tim. ii. 18, 19, speaks of Hymeneus and Philetus; "who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some. Nevertheless the FOUNDATION OF GOD standeth sure, having this seal, the Lord knoweth them that are his."

It appears plain to me, that in Paul's day there were quibbles upon the doctrine of the resurrection, as well as now. And that he alludes to the resurrection as the foundation of God, in which Christ is the "chief corner stone." In fact, as he elsewhere affirms, substantially, that unless the dead are raised there is no future life for any one, but all that have fallen asleep are perished. Therefore the resurrection is the foundation upon which all hopes of future life and existence are based; without which death is a dark, unbroken, perpetual sleep. And this foundation he assures us "standeth sure." Notwithstanding men try to reason it away, and make it an impossibility, yet it stands sure. And here is the seal which all true Christians have, and with which we ought all to rest contented: "The Lord knoweth them that are his." Ages may pass, dust return to dust; and, in the sight of men, our very names and places be entirely forgotten, still the Lord knows and remembers us, and in due time will bring all of his children forth from the prison house of death, made "equal unto the angels; neither can they die any more."

HARTWICK, N. Y., Aug., 1870.

SEED GROWS.

A FRIEND in Indiana sent us the following, which he cut from the "Advent Ch. Times." We had not noticed it before, but give it to our readers as evidence that the seed of truth often takes root and grows unseen by us for years. It is more than fifteen years since our discussion with Prof. Mattison, and here is some fruit thereof, of which we had not heard:

LETTER FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

BR. HIMES: Seeing your address in a pamphlet entitled A Sermon on Hell, by Wm. Sheldon, I take the liberty of addressing you. The controversy some years ago between Eld. Geo. Storrs and Prof. Mattison convinced me that the "orthodox" doctrine of present, or innate human immortality, and a present hell, and endless torment, were not only untenable, because unscriptural and unphilosophical; but that they are also the prolific root of much of the profligacy of the times. I am at present a member of the M. E. church, as is also my wife; and I have been with them for fourteen years or more, simply because there was no better in reach, and because their doctrines were more liberal than the older sects around us. My friends were insisting on my preparation to go into the ministry, at the very time this controversy came to my knowledge, which completely settled the matter with me so far as going into the Methodist Episcopal ministry was concerned. I abandoned it then and forever. Since that time, for the last ten years, I have been in the profession of teaching in this my native State; but I have now, and for all the years since I first heard or read of this faith, regarded it as "the more excellent way." And although now thirty-one years old, would gladly go into the ministry of that faith, or assist in writing for its spread and defense. And although in the M. E. church from necessity, yet I have not ceased on all proper occasions to advocate and defend this faith; and I am glad to be able to say to-day, that I have "not labored in vain."

Yours, in the bonds of a common faith.

ALLEGHANY Co., Penn.

REPLY.

DEAR BROTHER: We felt that we should do you no wrong if we gave your letter to our readers, provided your name was withheld; and we are sure they will all be much interested in it. The fields are white to the harvest, and the laborers are few. When, therefore, a new voice is heard, saying—Here am I, send me! it sends a thrill of rejoicing throughout the body of the friends of neglected truth.

Still we would not call you to the ministry. If you are to preach the gospel, we desire you to have a higher call than man can give. Hence, having heard of you and your feelings, we are now praying God to lay the "wo" upon you, if you are indeed fitted to enter his vineyard. Still we urge you to examine yourself and the Master's gifts to you, and see whether your talent is out at interest, or whether it is wholly or partially hid away. If you can write, your services are needed. Let your pen be no longer idle, but let it speak to the audiences the press affords. Can you speak in public to edification and comfort, through the grace given you, then you have a warrant to put the gospel trumpet to your lips and give it a certain sound.

Men are pressing down to perdition on every hand, multitudes of them blinded by false theology and faith-destroying dogmas. If you can speak, then cry aloud, and show them their errors in faith and in life. Embrace any and every proper opportunity to introduce and disseminate the truth concerning the age we live in, and the Bible doctrine of the nature and destiny of man, and the grounds of hope of eternal life. Show the wicked that they cannot live forever if they persist in sin: warn them of the true wages of iniquity.

We need your help, your sympathy, your prayers. The battle waxes hot; we are few, and our opposers are many. "Come over and help us." If your sympathies in the conflict are with us, come over and fight on our side. And may the Lord crown your efforts with success, that you may not fight as one beating the air, but with mighty weapons produce mighty results in the pulling down of the strongholds of error, and the liberation of many slaves of tradition and vain philosophy. Let us hear from you again, as your purposes and plans mature. And that God may give us in you a true yoke-fellow in his precious cause, is our prayer.

THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

TERMS OF THE HERALD OF LIFE.

Two Dollars a Year, or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months, or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York City, 20 cents additional.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2.20 a year, or $1.10 for six months.

We cannot undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers except where the law obliges us to do so; that is anywhere out of the United States.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether business or other matter, must invariably be be addressed;

GEO. STORRS, Box 4,658, NEW YORK.

All names of persons sent us, should be written plain, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also in ordering, the name of the Post Office, County and State must be given, and written plainly, and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

MAN.

BY M. L. F.

WHO can understand him? Proud, arrogant and selfish, crowding everything else to make room for himself—making slaves of those, his inferiors, who have not the power to defend themselves against him: desolating hearts and homes by war, rapine and murder; filling the earth with violence to gratify lust and passion, and, by craft and chicanery robbing all, whom he can, that he may live in affluence.

Is it possible that such a creature can be an object of love? Capricious and inconsistent, yet, demanding stability and consistency of all others, he seems to feel or think that he ought to have the privilege of doing just as he likes without being questioned. Little does he know or care about the misery and degradation of thousands who live within sight of his magnificent home; and when want and poverty present themselves at his door for material aid, they are either unceremoniously sent away empty, or made to feel more than ever the sting of poverty, by insult. Well might the Saviour say to his disciples, "Beware of men;" for of all the animals of earth there is none so treacherous. Yet man is possessed of noble powers. We find him soaring into the fields of science: now delving into the bowels of the earth to read its rocky pages: climbing up to the planets to weigh them in scales, calculating with utmost precision the occurrence of an eclipse or the transit of a planet: harnessing the lightning, and even making rays of light perform the most delicate and exquisite work: accomplishing wonders in locomotion and agriculture: performing in one day, for the wife with spinning jack, loom and sewing machine, with little labor, what would require a whole week of toil; and, indeed, when we begin to think of the wonders of science and art which man has wrought, we are lost in admiration, and we often ask ourselves the question, Will man continue to invent and improve in science and art? If he does, how easy it will be to perform a great amount of work with surprising ease. But men fail; their plans come to nought; yet, notwithstanding all this, we have every reason to believe that man will forever inhabit the earth. God has promised it, and who dare deny it?

Is he—man—immortal? There seems to be a great lack of harmony on this point; some say he is, and some affirm that he is not. If we refer to the Bible for a solution of this question, I am persuaded that we shall be answered in the negative: but men distrust the Bible and will not receive its testimony, but make an appeal to reason for an answer. What a mistake! Reason—in this case, only another name for mind—is formed and controlled by experimental knowledge; there is nothing positive about it; and, say they who make the appeal, we have evidence that man is immortal; "that as soon as he takes his departure from the flesh—never again to be connected with it—he at once enters upon the stage of immortal existence in a spiritual (immaterial) world." Very good; but where does the evidence come from? O, "from spiritual manifestations." How are spiritual manifestations produced? "By the aid of the flesh and material things;" and beside, "We have men who have seen with their own eyes, under certain circumstances, that spiritual world, or a part of it." Indeed, how strange it is, that all who profess to see these things, see them just exactly as they suppose or supposed them to be; or, in other words, as they desire them to be. Having first sat down and concocted in their own brain the plan, lay quietly down to dream about it, becoming more and more infatuated with it, until they labor under the hallucination that they are the most important persons in the world. Now, it is possible to draw on the imagination to that extent that one will become confirmed in the belief that, what he imagines is really true; and sometimes men will tell wonderful stories, of what they have done or seen, over so often that they really suppose them to have taken place. Such people cannot be charged with the crime of lying, exactly, but still it is the worst kind of deception, because the person is deceived himself, together with his dupes.

But to the question—Is man immortal? Not naturally, nor inherently. His immortality is derived. Although man is wicked and selfish, God loves him and has promised to give him an immortal life in his Son, and this derived immortal life is infused into the dead body or flesh of the man, at the resurrection, who has been obedient to his will. Man's noble powers perish ere they are fully developed. In his reaching forth after knowledge he is held back, and in his efforts to discover the secret of the government of the world he is baffled. What hinders him in his progress? Sin. Death! God works by means. Let us ever keep this in sight. Therefore he provided his only begotten Son to bring man to a state of perfection; then, when sin and death are removed, the way will be opened to fill the earth with glory.

Have we any reason to believe that man will be differently organized after the resurrection from what he now is? O, yes. Then he will be spiritual; that is, not carnal, with an endless life before him. Well, what of that? Why, he will then, under the peaceful reign of Jesus, bring into requisition those wonderful powers with which God has endowed him, and, with nothing to retard their progress, will, by the gradual but certain development of them, wonderfully add to that age to come. O glorious age. May the day hasten when the King shall come. We already see premonitions of thy doom. Jesus will accomplish the subjugation of the nations of the earth with his own weapons, fire and hail, while his army of immortal men, look on to behold their King reigning gloriously and triumphantly over all his enemies.

If men are to be men hereafter, who will say that they will not deal with material things? There is a kind of a dreamy notion that when God gives the earth to his saints it will be one vast plain, everything having been levelled or else swept away, while the saints will live upon the spontaneous production of the ground, and do nothing but rest. What a monotonous existence that would be!

Let all those who entertain such a notion read the doings of Israel during the reign of her good kings, and be ashamed. No, there is a work to be done; the earth must be brought to realize that there is "no more curse;" and who knows how much the telegraph, steamship and steam power, in all its forms, together with all sciences under the master hand of God's own anointed King will contribute to bring about that glory which we expect to behold?

Why, we read, "Swords shall be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks." God has placed within the earth all the elements wherewith to beautify it; and it seems to us that when Jesus shall have his throne established at Jerusalem, and begin his glorious reign, then it will be that men will "build houses and inhabit them, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them;" when all selfishness will cease to be, and God will be all and in all, and men will do his will.

THE EARLY HISTORY OF THE BIBLE IN ENGLAND.

THE demand for the Bible among the English people when the early translations appeared was so great that it was found almost impossible to supply it. In most of the editions the copies were large and expensive, yet they were bought up and read with extraordinary avidity. From the time of the printing of Tyndale's New Testament, in 1525, till 1542, according to the London Quarterly Review, no less than thirty-nine editions of the New Testament, and fourteen of the whole Bible were issued. The effect of the circulation of the Scriptures was wonderful. People of every age, rank and class seemed animated by an irrepressible desire to read or hear the word of God. Those who had the means bought it; those who were able and willing to read in public had crowds of eager listeners round them. Boys and old men, girls and matrons, flocked to the churches, where ponderous Bibles, chained to the massive pillars, lay open upon stands for the use of the public. Bishop Bonner, afterwards one of the most active of Queen Mary's persecuting agents, set up six large Bibles in St. Paul's. A still more remarkable example of prelatical inconsistency occurred in the same year. Bishop Tunstall, who had been one of the prime movers in the bonfire of Tyndale's Testament at St. Paul's Cross, was ordered by the King, in 1540, to prepare a new edition of the very book he had burned; and he did so.

In 1542, however, a change took place. The papal party had for a long time been gaining influence in the country, and their rule now became paramount. Tyndale's Bible was prescribed, and no person, unless of noble or gentle birth, was permitted to read the Scriptures, under pain of imprisonment. On the death of Henry VIII. in 1547, the reforming party again rose to power. His successor, Edward, inaugurated a new era. He ordered the Bible to be carried before him at his coronation, uttering, as he did so, these remarkable words: "That book is the sword of the Spirit, and to be preferred before these swords. Without that sword we are nothing, we can do nothing, we have no power; from that we are what we are this day!" During his short reign of six years, no less than thirty-five editions of the New Testament and fifteen of the entire Bible were published. Mary ascended the throne in 1553, and reigned five years. During that time neither Bible nor Testament was printed in England. Rogers, Cranmer, Latimer, Ridley and others, who had so largely assisted in giving the Scriptures to the English people in their own tongue, were burnt at the stake; and some of the noblest of England's worthies were driven from their native country and forced to seek an asylum in Geneva. In 1558 Queen Mary died, and with the accession of Elizabeth the Bible once more became an open book.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, AUGUST 17, 1870.

No Immortality nor future life, except in Jesus Christ alone, and by a resurrection at the last day if dead, or a change if alive.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not, he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.

As we go to press (Tuesday), we have no reliable news as to the exact position of affairs between France and Prussia. There was a battle last Sunday, and both parties claim the victory. It is most likely, however, that the French got the worst of it, as the Prussians seem to be advancing while the French appear to be retreating. The commotions among the nations of Europe evidently increase; but we must wait patiently for the result. God will accomplish his purposes, whatever the designs or efforts of the contending hosts may be. Soon we trust the reign of earth's true and rightful King will commence, and He shall "make wars to cease to the ends of the earth."—Psa. xlvi. 9. Amen. So may it soon be.

BR. WM. H. SPENCER, of Rochester, is expected to be with the friends at Cooper Institute, this city, next Sunday, 21st inst., and preach in the afternoon, at 3 o'clock, (in room 24). Subject.—"The Casting Down of Thrones." If his health will permit, he will also speak in the A. M., at half-past ten o'clock.

"THE SOUL NEVER DIES."

IN the report of a sermon, preached at Long Branch, N. J., Sunday, Aug. 7, the reporter says, one point made by the preacher, "Rev. Dr. C. K. True," was, that "though the body perishes, THE SOUL NEVER DIES." "This point," saith the reporter, "he enforced with great cogency of argument and eloquent and forcible illustration."

We have a very high esteem for our old friend and fellow-laborer of thirty-five years ago; and we would have liked much to have been a listener to his argument that "the soul never dies." We would like to know his Bible testimony for such an idea; not what "eloquence" might do to elate a believer in that doctrine; but where does the word of God teach it? We have yet to learn that God has revealed any such doctrine. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."—Ezk. xviii. 4, 20. "Let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death."—James v. 20. Now please give us one testimony from God's word that saith, "The soul never dies." We wait for our old friend's answer.

TO CEASE TO BE A SOUL.

"With us to cease to think is to cease to be a soul, for we know little about the human soul, more than what we gather from its thinking operations; with us a thought is the mind thinking," etc.—Luther Lee.

Men "cease to think" when sound asleep: then the soul "ceases to be a soul." Men have been in a state of total insensibility for days, months, and, in some instances, for years: for these periods, longer or shorter, according to Mr. Lee, the soul "ceases to be a soul." Suppose, then, this "ceasing to think" should last from the death of Abel to the resurrection at the last day; of course, as Mr. L. will have it, the soul has "ceased to be a soul;" but the power of God has not "ceased" to be omnipotent; and he can as easily revive the soul in the last case as those previously noticed. "With us," says Mr. Lee, "a thought is the mind thinking." But in each of the foregoing cases there is no "thinking;" then Mr. Lee "knows little about the human soul," as it has no "thinking operations." He has said in his work on immortality, that "the soul is a simple essence, immaterial, uncompounded and indivisible:" that seemed to imply that he knew a great deal "about" it; but now he "knows little about" it "more than what" he "gathers from its thinking operations." There are times when it does not think, and we judge that Mr. Lee is approaching the truth, viz., that theologians, on his side of the question "know little about the human soul;" the soul, according to them, is, after all, only thought: a glorious soul indeed; and it "ceases to be a soul" generally, once in every twenty-four hours. Mr. Lee says, expressly, in another place, "the soul, whose very existence is thought;" and he adds —"which is never known to exist only in connection with thought, and is known to exist only from its thoughts." We will not call this "creating fog," for we think foggy as it is, it is pretty clear; the soul is thought, according to this definition. We are almost ready to say, Amen. Again, he says, "For the soul to exist, in our sense of the soul, is to be conscious, for with us the soul is a living consciousness, and when it ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul." Mr. Lee has, doubtless, seen persons perfectly unconscious under the influence of chloroform, and their "thought" ceased; hence, according to him, the soul "ceased to be a soul;" there was not a "living consciousness;" cut and mangle the body as you would, there was no consciousness; and the lack of consciousness was not in the body, for Mr. Lee says "Consciousness does not pertain to the body. The body," he adds, "is never conscious," and concludes by affirming, "Consciousness is purely an operation of the mind." This authority, of course, is good in this argument. The matter, then, stands thus:—

"When the soul ceases to be conscious it will cease to be a soul:—"

But the soul ceases to be conscious by the use of chloroform:—

Therefore it then "ceases to be a soul."

But again, Mr. Lee says, "for a soul to cease to exist is to cease to be a soul." Suppose we put this together with the foregoing, thus:

"To cease to exist is to cease to be a soul;"

But under the influence of chloroform the soul ceases to be a soul, inasmuch it "ceases to be concious:"

Therefore, it "ceases to exist" at such times.

"LIFE AND DEATH REAL: or Death really kills, depriving the subject of a living existence. Life is exactly the opposite: it is a real living existence. Prof. Hudson's Position considered."

Such is the title page of a tract, we have just issued. It is made up of the following articles which have appeared in the HERALD OF LIEE, viz., Good Rules of Interpretation. Will the Wicked Dead be Revived. Prof. Hudson's Views, by Mark E. Green. Prof. Hudson's Position, by the Editor. A Question. Had Adam the Life of God? Is the Soul a Spiritual Entity?

All these topics are embraced in a tract of 24 pages, Campaign Document No. 21. Price 2 cents.

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION.

ITS anniversary will be held next week in Springfield, Mass., in the "Life and Advent Mission Tent," to commence Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock, August 25, and to continue on through the next day; thus giving us a day and a half for mutual conference, consultation and action to advance the great and glorious cause in which we have embarked. We trust that every friend of the cause will be there whose circumstances will permit; and those who cannot be present will let us know, by some means, what their wish is concerning the continuance and support of the HERALD OF LIFE and the TRACT cause.

Seven years have passed since this paper was launched on its voyage, and you are to judge whether its course has been acceptable to you, and whether it has performed its mission in a manner meeting your approval: also, what changes may be needful or desirable in its management or form. Let us have your counsel, prayers, and material support in this work, if consistent with your views of the subject.

THE APPROACHING MEETING.

ANOTHER annual gathering is at hand. Again it becomes our duty and privilege to leave field, workshop, counting-room, or whatever may be the scene of our labors and unite in rendering thanksgiving and praise to the great GIVER of all good gifts—for the glorious light of truth He has led us into and for all his mercies; and, under the guidance of omnipotent power, to seek the adoption of such measures for the promotion of truth as may seem most promising of success. Love and gratitude to God and His dear Son must fill all our hearts when we calmly contemplate the unceasing flow of divine favors of which we, as a body, have been subject during the past year.

Glancing over our field of labor, we behold much of the seed sown in faith and watered with prayer springing up in vigorous growth, some in "the blade," some in "the ear," and some attaining unto "the full corn in the ear." From east, from west, from north and from south comes up the voice of gladness and praise because of new-found treasures of truth that inspire the mind with better and brighter conceptions of God and His government, and bring it into closer relations to and in more perfect harmony with the Divine minds.

We have met under various circumstances: and when all before us seemed cheerful and promising, and met when prospects were gloomy and discouraging and only the beneficent smiles and precious promises of a loving Father were bright. But we have, perhaps never come together under circumstances of so great promise and signal encouragement as are opening to us at the present time. While the world strides on in its mad course, heedless that God is moving mightily among the nations of earth, trusting and truth-loving servants of Jesus are cheered and comforted by the heavenly promise that while "the wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand;" "the wise shall understand." Daniel saw in vision certain events that were to transpire in the last days. These events were wonderful, and in his astonishment at what he beheld he asked, "What shall be the end of these things?" The reply was, "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." Dan. xii. 8–10. Daniel desired to know the meaning of what he saw but no explanation was vouchsafed, and he was told to "seal the book, even to the time of the end." Though denied an explanation he was promised "thou shalt . . . stand in thy lot at the end of the days." When were the wise to understand? In the time of the end. What were they to understand? They were to understand "what shall be the end of these things." It follows, then, that while the prophecy located directly in the time of the end is in course of fulfilment, lovers of truth and of the appearing of Jesus will recognize them and will not only understand that the end is to be the glorious coming of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, but that that blessed and long sighed for event is very nigh. The "book" is long since unsealed; the transpiring prophetic events are recognized, and strengthened is our faith that the great bell of liberty, the coming of Christ, will soon in silver tones ring out the birth of redemption to every faithful, waiting child of God from the days of righteous Abel down to "the end." Daniel and all God's people will soon stand in this "lot." Under what gladdening circumstances, then, are we about to meet! What joy must fill every heart! Surely all who can will be there and with the help of the Spirit of God make the whole campground melodious with the sweet voice of love and peace and praise. May such pure feelings of kindness and love prevail and flow from mind to mind and from heart to heart throughout the whole gathering as shall bring them into a communion which for tenderness and sweetness and spiritual strengthening will have no parallel in any of our bright experience of the past, and to God be all the praise.

L. C. THORNE.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1870.

FARE TO CAMP-MEETING.

FRIENDS going from New York can go and return for $4 70 by taking the boat to New Haven, and thence by cars to Springfield. The boat which leaves New York at 11 P. M., connects with the train at the steamboat wharf at New Haven. Passengers by this boat arrive at Springfield at 7 30 A. M. No train with Saturday night boat. Tickets for the railroad to the camp-meeting will be sold on the steamboats. Passengers buying through tickets, will be furnished with a return ticket, which will be good only when endorsed by the Secretary of the camp-ground.

DEGREES IN PUNISHMENT.

Many suppose there must be different degrees of punishment, and think that idea is against our view of the destiny of the wicked. The objection is sent us in the following form:

Why should there not be different degrees of punishment as well as different degrees of reward? The latter you admit; but the former is fully stated in Scripture, as it seems to me. Why should not men be punished individually, as well as nationally, according, or in proportion to their infinitely varied degrees of guilt?

We reply: In the first place, all reward is of grace, or favor—it is a gratuity of Divine benevolence, and may be given variously, and in any degree the donor sees fit to bestow, whether specifically promised or not. Grace is unlimited in its action, where it does not interfere with justice.

On the other hand, punishment cannot justly exceed a specified penalty. Nations can only be punished nationally; and God's infliction of punishment on the nations of Israel and Judah were regulated by direct and special announcements. In their national capacity, tribulation and anguish, in various degrees and of longer or shorter continuance, were the threatened punishment; under which, however, they might repent and be restored to the favor of God, as individuals or as nations. This position can be abundantly sustained by Scripture testimony; but that is unnecessary now.

Individually, "The wages of sin is death." In death there is not, and, in the nature of the case, there cannot be degrees. Death is the cessation of living existence; and as there is no consciousness in death, so it admits of no degrees in punishment. If it could be proved that torment is the punishment threatened to individual transgressors, then degrees might be contended for. But such is not the fact. From the first penalty—that against Adam—to the fullest announcement in the New Testament, the one penal infliction for sin, on individuals, is death; with no added, or rather prefixed infliction of torment as belonging to the penalty proper. Torment may precede, as growing out of the circumstances in which the individual has involved himself; as a murderer may involve himself in sorrow and mental suffering by his crime, so as to be truly tormented; but that is no part of the law's penalty; nor does it in the least degree meet the law's claim. The life extinguished is what the law demands; and that alone satisfies its claim, whether the individual has a pang of sorrow or not.

If torment is essential to individual sinners, after their day of probation is ended, and they are to be raised from the dead to receive it, who can tell us that eternal torment may not be necessary for some who have "infinitely" exceeded others in guilt? The truth is, the idea of torment, beyond this life, for sinners of the human family, we are sure has no foundation in any plain announcement of the Bible. Men may infer it, but we want, and have a right to expect, a declaration on the question that is not equivocal, or has to be arrived at by inferences, or brought out by parables or figurative language. If true, all should know it beyond the possibility of mistake; and it should be known, too, to every soul of the human family, and not barely to a few who happen to live in Christendom. The talk of raising the heathen to life from the dead, in a hopeless state, and tormenting them with torments of which they never heard, and for not receiving Christ, who was never preached to them, is a theory so horrible that we are sure our inquiring friend, whose questions have called out these remarks, would never for a moment assent to it.

One more thought before we close. The idea of few or many stripes, of which the Saviour speaks, leads some to suppose there must be a re-living of the wicked dead in order to inflict them. But, in the first place, the Saviour said nothing of these stripes being in a future life, at all: and if they are placed at the period of his second advent, it cannot embrace the wicked dead, of whose resurrection, at that time, not one word is said in the Bible, whatever may be supposed to be its teaching as to a subsequent one. Hence the few or many stripes are inflicted somewhere short of a future life. It may be known only to God and the individual sinner when or how they are inflicted. The degrees in punishment, if admitted to take place on individuals, therefore, may all have passed on the sinner prior to the final closing of his probationary state, and before the execution of the penal sentence—death: or, they may relate wholly to those who are living at the time of our Lord's return, and who are saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and are found "beating His men servants and maid servants:" to such there may be few or many stripes according to the light against which they have sinned. Let such now take warning, lest they escape not with few or many stripes, but are punished with death irrevocable.

MILES GRANT ON JOHN III. 36.

IN the "Crisis" of July 29, 1869, Br. Grant was requested to give an explanation of this text, which reads as follows: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him."

This passage so emphatically disproves the re-living of the wicked dead, that it is amusing sometimes to see how ingeniously the opponents of this doctrine labor, as a Universalist preacher once did with a difficult text, to "explain it all away."

In regard to this passage Br. Grant remarks:

What is the life that the wicked do not see or possess? Most clearly the "everlasting life," which the righteous inherit from Christ.

To show the utter fallacy of this construction, which is so generally accepted by those who look more to the position of their leaders than the teachings of the Bible, we need only to refer to a single criticism by the late Eld. S. Bliss, published while editor of the "Advent Herald." This testimony is more important because coming from a firm believer in the resurrection of the wicked dead, although adhering to the orthodox view of the subject. Upon the word translated life in the text under consideration, he remarks:

"The word zoe is . . . never expressive of eternal life, and is in no place thus rendered. It has in it no element of duration; which, when given in its connection, is always expressed by some adverbal or adjective qualifier, and thus the phrase eternal life is nowhere represented in the Greek by zoe, which, in such connection, is simply the representation of life, as significant of its kind; its duration as expressed by its appendage eternal, being otherwise represented. Thus in John iii. 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life." The word life in each case is represented by zoen; whilst everlasting, in the first connection, is represented by aionion—the phrase rendered life everlasting being zoen aionion; whilst life in the last connection, is zoen, without expression of its duration.

As zoen means simply life without any "expression of its duration," and as the wicked shall not see zoen, "life," therefore, they will not see life of any kind—or, in other words, will have no revival from death. What will Br. Grant and those who accept his construction of this passage, do with this fact? They will have to try their hand again.

W. H. S.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

RESURRECTION AND JUDGMENT.

BY F. H. BURBANK.

SOME say that "the resurrection must precede the judgment." What judgment does it precede? The answer given is, "the universal judgment of the sons of Adam, or the entire race of mankind." Is the resurrection "a general and simultaneous one?" We are informed that "it is." From what source is such information derived? Our informants say, "from the Bible." They affirm, we deny. One party must be in the wrong. Both cannot be right.

No truth is more plainly stated in the Word than that which declares that the righteous have a resurrection together and by themselves. Christ declares that "they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age) and the resurrection from the dead (anastaseos tes ek nekron—the resurrection out from the dead), neither marry . . . neither can they die any more . . . and are children of God being the children of the resurrection." The present age, in which marrying and giving in marriage will continue, extends to the resurrection. The resurrection will take place on the "last day" of this age. Then the new era or age will commence. If the wicked come up at the last day they obtain that age and the resurrection. That would make them the children of God. The Saviour's words would then be meaningless. Christ was raised out from the dead, and so he will raise up out from the dead those who sleep in him. To have a resurrection "out from the dead" plainly proves that others are not raised at that time.

Paul says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," (ten exanastasin ton nekron—the resurrection out from the dead). If our opponents are right, Paul would have attained unto the resurrection whether he believed in Christ or not, and all his anxiety about attaining unto the resurrection out from among the dead was useless. But Christ and Paul before these opponents, however well-meaning they may be.

They say, "If a Christian is immortal when he is raised from the dead, then he is judged and rewarded without his knowing any thing about it." We demur at this. The Christian has been under condemnation, for "death has passed upon all men, for that (or in whom) all have sinned." "He that believeth not is condemned already." But, now, "we have passed from death unto life" (prospectively), and this we "know," "because we love the brethren." We, Christians, are not in darkness concerning our future immortality; so, when we awake in the resurrection we shall not be surprised at finding ourselves immortal. We know that we have the Spirit of Christ: that we are begotten again: that now are we the sons of God: that we have the Spirit whereby we cry, Abba, Father: that we are not of the world: that we have hope of having bodies like Jesus' glorious body: that there is a crown laid up for us: that we rejoice in hope of the glory of God, etc., etc., etc. The matter of immortality is decided for while we are yet in the flesh. The idea then of a future judgment to decide who shall be made immortal is fallacious. The fact that Christians attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead, together with all the other facts named, and a host more that might be mentioned, disproves the theory mentioned. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that at the last day he will raise me up because of his Spirit that dwelleth in me.

Our opponents further say, "Does not Paul declare that "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ?" Yes! but the we referred to in that text are Christians only; and the "judgment seat" referred to does not decide our immortality—that having been already decided. "What proof is there of all this?" is replied. In answer to this, we will state that in 2 Cor. iii., iv. and v. the pronouns we and us occur more than fifty times, and in no instance is the wicked dead included by the terms. In the fifth chapter we read, ("For we walk by faith, not by sight). We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body and present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ: that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

Here it is plainly declared that we shall not be in a mortal condition when we appear before Christ; for, while we are at home in the body, in the flesh, in mortality, we are absent from the Lord.

Paul in Rom. xiv. 7–12 declares the truth in respect to this judgment. "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For, whether we live we live unto the Lord; and whether we die we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we ARE the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." (The dead and living of the class Paul is talking about). "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all appear before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us must give an account of himself to God." In these five verses the pronouns us and we occur ten times and in no instance applied to the wicked. It is a judgment with reference to the Lord's people; for "the Lord shall judge his people."

The subject is made very clear by Paul in 1 Cor. iii. 9–15, "For we are laborers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building. According to the grace of God which is given me, as a wise master-builder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereon. For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble, every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire." Thus every Christian is saved, or has eternal life; but some who are saved have a reward while others suffer loss. The judgment, then, has no reference to their salvation, but to a reward after they attain to immortality or salvation.

In view of this fact Paul charges Timothy to preach the Word. But this may suffice. "He that judgeth me is the Lord." May he give me knowledge, and wisdom, and understanding, that I may build with nought but gold, silver, and precious stones, that when I am saved I may not suffer loss.

Yours, in hope of salvation.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 10, 1870.

THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD IS ETERNAL LIFE.

BY HELEN ROBERTSON.

"These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee. As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—John xvii. 1–3.

THERE are a great many candidates for eternal life, and many different ways in which men and women are striving to get it. We can't begin to enumerate the many different modes that present themselves to our vision; but enough to say, there is only one. Jesus has given it in the language just given above. This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent. We might change the form of the verse and say, To know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent, is eternal life; or, as the meaning plainly is, This knowledge is the way to get eternal life. Those who want eternal life will ask at once, How are we to get this knowledge—this true knowledge? We answer: In his written word. As God is there revealed in or through Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And "In whom (Christ) are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." So if we want this saving knowledge, which will result in immortality and eternal life, we will find it all in Christ. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell. Again we ask, Is it on the surface? Can it be found by a careless seeker? No. The treasures of wisdom and knowledge are there, but they are hid. How are we to get them? In the same way that the gold seeker finds his treasures in Californian soil. He forsakes all that he has, not fearing even the loss of his own life, and goes forth unentangled to dig for the coveted, but hidden treasure. He perseveres through self-denial and many hardships; and all to gain a corruptible prize. But he does it all uncertainly, and often loses his life in the effort, and all is a failure.

Like him we are to forsake all, not loving even our own lives, and give ourselves entirely to Jesus. Let him have the first place in our hearts, and then by communing with him, by having his word dwell in us richly, in all wisdom, and by having the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and continuing therein, with all perseverance, in this way we can become acquainted with God and his Son Jesus Christ, and so get at the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, which knowledge is life eternal.

There is no self-glorification or self-seeking here. We must put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; (the old man is never changed; he is crucified, "put off;") and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. There is a new life, even here; a germ of "life eternal," which is begun in us by the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Thus saith the Lord, let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches." Why? These are all of the earth, temporal, perishable, will soon disappear forever. "But let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exerciseth loving kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord." Why thus glory? Because the results of the understanding and knowing the Lord is "life eternal."

Here let me exclaim with our beloved Br. Paul, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

"Our life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." O praise the Lord for this most precious hope; this hope of life. I can hardly stop writing. My heart is full. The thought of "life eternal" is so glorious. Praise the Lord.

RACINE, Wis., Aug., 1870.

DR. JOHN BILLINGS AND ELD. H. PERKINS.

Two weeks ago we published a letter from Dr. Billings, giving some account of Eld. Perkins' ill health and needy circumstances, and of his own condition. We judged their cases to be such as to call forth the sympathy of our brethren, and therefore did not wait till Dr. Billings' letter appeared in the paper, but immediately forwarded them some money placed in our hands by our beloved Br. E. Wolcott, who, though sick, continues to "bless" others. A few days since we received another letter from Dr. Billings as follows:

NEW RUTLAND, Ill., Aug. 6, 1870.

BR. STORRS: Your favor was duly received. With grateful hearts we return thanks to the Lord, to you, and Br. Wolcott for the favor bestowed. Br. Perkins exclaimed, "Well, thank the Lord," and I certainly did join in the same. No one knows how a poor sick brother feels when he has assurance that he is not forgotten, by those he esteems brethren, but those in the same circumstances. Then "it is more blessed to give than to receive." We trust Br. Perkins may be able to start for Maine by the 20th of this month. [Maine is his home, from which he went abroad for his health.—EDITOR]. If so, he will call at Springfield, Mass., if able. He wants much to see the brethren. He is however now only able to sit up about one hour in a day. There has been a slight improvement within the past few days. He is some stronger than when he came to my house.

My health is better. I think the Lord has not quite done with me yet. I spoke an hour last Sabbath to a very attentive audience. Today I spoke again, and felt the Lord blessed me much in showing the church something of their nearness to the land of rest. An interest is manifested since my first meeting. A few have started to serve God, and a backslider has been reclaimed. I have some faith that the Lord will give me health to labor a little more; for some yet can be reached by the truth.

Br. Perkins and myself occupy that position where we can pray in a way that we know the Lord heareth us; for we can say, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt;" for we have committed all to our God. No other power can help us: our hope is in him; our trust is there; our expectation is from him. We feel that we can wholly trust in that God who has cared for us these many years: He don't forsake us now. We do not believe that just repeating over words and calling it prayer is really praying. When we occupy a justified position before God, by faith, then we have that peace with God, through our Lord Jesus, by which we get access by faith into this grace wherein we stand and rejoice in hope. In this position we pray for ourselves and you, and all the dear ones, and know the Lord heareth us.

"EAT HER FLESH."

IN an article we published the 13th inst., reference was made to a law passed in Italy depriving the Romish Harlot of a large amount of her possessions. A correspondent of one of our city papers, writing from Florence, under date of July 14, speaks of that transaction as follows:

"A law has been voted this week supplimentary to that of several years ago, called by the clergy the Ecclesiastical Spoliation Scheme. The present law sweeps into the public Treasury what is left of property—and it is in the aggregate considerable—upon which the clergy live, and by which worship is supported. The Church and its servants will soon be reduced to the smallest possible allowance, and the inducement to become a priest, for any money profit accruing, will be taken away. 'As poor as a church mouse,' instead of 'as fat as a priest,' will be the phrase to be applied to the ministers of the altar. The law also reduces the number of ecclesiastics, of various degrees, at present officiating in metropolitan and parish churches. The number of canons is fixed at twelve for each cathedral—an immense reduction of those at present getting their living by repeating official litanies. The Cathedral of Florence has actually not less than sixty of this class of priests. The new step taken excites extreme indignation among the clergy, manifested in their organs and in conversation; but there is no help. These changes must cause a rapid approach to the American system, which makes the ministers of religion directly dependent upon the people for their means of support."

Thus the Harlot is being made "desolate and naked," and her "flesh" is being "eaten;" and next she "shall be utterly burned with fire." So saith the word of God; and 500 bishops, who pronounced her ladyship "infallible," will have, ere long, a chance to "weep and wail" over "the smoke of her burning," and cry, "Alas, ALAS."

BISHOP WHATELY ON THE END OF EVIL.

BISHOP WHATELY says: "When we are told that Christ is to 'reign till He shall have put all things under his feet,' and that 'the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death;' this does afford some ground for expecting the ultimate extinction of evil and of suffering, by the total destruction of such as are incapable of good and of happiness. If 'eternal death' means final death—death without any revival we can understand what is meant by 'Death being the last enemy destroyed,' viz., that none henceforth are to be subjected to it. But if 'Death' be understood to mean everlasting life in misery, then it would appear that Death is never to be destroyed at all; since, although no one should be henceforth sentenced to it, it would still be going on as a continual infliction forever.

"On the whole, therefore, I think we are not warranted in concluding (as some have done), so positively concerning this question, as to make it a point of Christian faith to interpret figuratively, and not literally, the 'death' and the 'destruction' spoken of in Scripture as the doom of the condemned; and to insist on the belief that they are to be kept alive forever.

"'Life,' as applied to their condition [the condition of the righteous], is usually understood to mean 'happy life.' And that theirs will be a happy life, we are indeed plainly taught; but I do not think we are anywhere taught that the word 'life' does of itself necessarily imply happiness. If so, indeed, it would be a mere tautology to speak of a 'happy life,' and a contradiction to speak of a 'miserable life;' which we know is not the case, according to the usage of any language. In all ages and countries, 'life,' and the words answering to it in other languages, have always been applied, in ordinary discourse, to a wretched life, no less properly than to a happy one.

Life, therefore, in the received sense of the word, would apply equally to the condition of the blest and the condemned, supposing these last to be destined to continue forever living in a state of misery. And yet, to their condition the words 'life' and 'immortality' never are applied in Scripture. If, therefore, we suppose the hearers of Jesus and his apostles to have understood, as nearly as possible, in the ordinary sense, the words employed, they must naturally have conceived them to mean, (if they were taught nothing to the contrary) that the condemned were really and literally to be 'destroyed,' and cease to exist; not that they were to exist forever in a state of wretchedness. For they are never spoken of as being kept alive, but as forfeiting life; as for instance—'Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life;' 'He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life.' And again, 'perdition,' 'death,' 'destruction,' are employed in numerous passages to express the doom of the condemned. All which expressions would, as I have said, be naturally taken in their usual and obvious sense, if nothing were taught to the contrary."—Future States.

LETTERS AND EXTRACTS.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

BR. STORRS: I have of late thought much of what the Scriptures teach on being begotten by the Spirit, and being born of the Spirit. Last night I heard a sermon preached from the words of Jesus to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." O how I felt for preachers of these days! I could not help saying, Many of them are dying for the lack of knowledge. You know how they apply being born again to conversion; like a new-born child, all things are new to it; it begins to breathe, to see, to hear, feel, etc.; so to the new convert; that is, to the new-born there is a great change. Well, having got the child born again, it must see the kingdom of God; and of course to see it, it must be here. O how I pity the preachers; yes, any of them that try to prove by the word of God that the kingdom is set up here now. Especially do I pity the man who begins to see men as trees walking, trying to prove the kingdom set up when Christ was here the first time; they do not make as good work of it as they did when their eyes were shut. Now, it is evident that Jesus was preaching the gospel of the kingdom; that is, life from the dead by being born from the dead by the Spirit of God; and that he was the way, the truth, and the life; and as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have eternal life. So we see that it was expedient that Jesus should die and be born again from the dead, raised up by the eternal Spirit. For the Scriptures declare that He was the first-born from the dead, and the first-born among many brethren. Now we see that the birth that Jesus spoke to Nicodemus of was being born from the dead. Christ did not need conversion; no, nor repentance; and there were many prophets and righteous men born before Jesus was born of the virgin Mary. He was the first that should rise from the dead to die no more.

